Tennis team returns home to face Chiefs

By GLENN POSTER

The UMass tennis team returns to the home courts this afternoon looking for things to change for the better. The team hasn't played at home in two weeks and hopefully the familiar courts will spell victory over Springfield College. Since April 17th, the Minutemen have played four matches, winning only once. It started with a loss to MIT. The team then won its only match in recent play, topping AIC by the overwhelming score of 9-0 on two different courts, one of them a public park in Springfield. However, things changed against BC and the Minutemen were beaten once again. Then, most recently, came the second place tie with New Hampshire in the Yankee Conference Tournament.

So, the team will have its work cut out for them this afternoon. The match starts at three o'clock.

Some further thoughts on the tourney ... Maybe UMass was fortunate to have its scheduled match with Vermont earlier in the season cancelled. UVM came to Amherst despite threatening skies on Saturday, April 13 because their coach insisted that he wanted to play the match since he felt he had a good team. Despite warnings from UMass Coach Steve Kosakowski, Vermont came. After thirty minutes of play, the skies opened and the Catamounts were on their way back to Burlington.

In the second set of first doubles this past weekend, Don Douglas got upset over a call which he thought went against him, made by one of the Vermont players. In collegiate tennis the players also have to serve as referees. So, you must be honest in making calls as to whether the ball is in play or not. In my estimation, from watching the action right along the side of the court they were playing on, the ball was on the line — in other words, it's playable. But the Vermont player called it out. Douglas and his partner, Bob Schpeiser, had just been broken in games on a truly questionable line call. Douglas heaved his racket off the court then, when changing sides of the net, he proceeded to kick the water can. An old lady sitting next to me, obviously a Vermont fan — I believe the other guy's mother, declared in no uncertain terms, "They should throw that guy right off the court; his conduct is detrimental to playing the game of tennis." I don't like to sound like a "homer" because I believe in fair reporting (though one generally tends to become somewhat biased when covering the day-to-day activities of a team all year) but I must defend Douglas. After two days of tennis against the best competition (he plays number two singles) the frustration was evident. I myself have performed similar acts under the same circumstances. And you see these things happen all the time at the professional level when you watch sports on TV or even go to a game. How many times has Tom Heinsohn told a referee what he can go and do with himself? And old ladies sitting behind the bench can hear the things he says. There was absolutely no reason whatsoever to fault Douglas.

When all the play was over on Saturday, Coach Kosakowski congratulated the UVM coach for having taken the Yan Con title away from UMass ending a three-year Minutemen reign. Kos told his counterpart, "God damn it, it's about time you guys won this thing. It sure took you long enough."

Bruins eye cup, beat Hawks 4-2

Sheppard scores series clincher

CHICAGO [UPI] – Greg Sheppard fired his ninth goal in 10 playoff games with 1:49 to play Tuesday night to give the Boston Bruins a 4-2 victory over the Chicago Black Hawks and move them into the finals of the Stanley Cup Playoffs for the third time in the last five years.

Sheppard's goal came from a wide angle, hitting the pads of Chicago goalie Tony Esposito and caromming into the net to give the Bruins the best-of-seven semifinal series against the Hawks, four victories to two.

It was the fourth time the Bruins have beaten the Hawks in Stanley Cup competition and the Hawks never have won a playoff series from the Bruins.

Sheppard's goal climaxed almost 14 minutes of tense competition after Len Frig scored for the Black Hawks on a power play at 4:18 of the last period to tie the score at 2-2.

Only 23 seconds later, when play was stopped at 18:34, Hawks coach Billy Reay pulled Esposito from the goal. Ten seconds after that the goalie's brother, Boston center Phil Esposito, scored the final Boston goal into the empty net. It was Esposito's seventh goal of the playoffs.

Boston's victory meant that the final Stanley Cup round would open on the Bruins' rink against the winner of Philadelphia Flyers—New York Rangers series in which the Flyers hold a 3-2 lead in games.

The Hawks, losing for the third straight game, in which Reay said they could have played better, got off well on their own rink Tuesday night as Cliff Koroll gave them a 1-0 lead with a short try into an almost empty net at 7:16 of the first period.

But Don Marcotte scored twice in less than five minutes of the second period, first on a short screen shot and then on a deflection of a screen shot by Carol Vadnais, to put the Bruins in front and apparently wrap up the decision until Frig's surprising score, his first ever in the playoffs.

Referee Dave Newell called 14 penalties, six on Chicago and eight on Boston, but there were only eight power play opportunities and Boston failed to score each of the three times it had an advantage.

Until the Tuesday night game, each team had scored seven times on power plays in five games.

Boston got off 31 short on the Chicago goal while the Hawks fired 27 times. Chicago was hampered by the inability of one of its star forwards, Dennis Hull, to play. Hull, troubled with back spasms, started, but obviously was hampered by the sore back and was replaced by rookie Darcy Rota after two shifts.

Flyers drop NY, 4-1

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] – Rick MacLeish, the leading scorer in the Stanley Cup Playoffs, scored two goals Tuesday night to lead the Philadelphia Flyers to a 4-1 victory over the New York Rangers and a 3-2 edge in their semi-final series.

MacLeish's ninth goal of the playoffs, at 17:39 of the second period gave the Flyers a 2-1 lead and he added his 10th into an open net with less than a minute left in the game.

MacLeish fired the lead goal past New York goaltender Ed Giacomin through a screen set up by winger Gary Dornhoefer.

Defenseman Tom Bladon, filling in for the injured Barry Ashbee, ignited a second period Flyers rally when he flipped the puck past Giacomin to tie it at 1-1 at 6:49 of the middle stanza.

The Rangers had jumped out in front in the first period on a goal by Pete Stemkowski at 6:16 and controlled play through most of the opening period. Blandon's goal, however, sparked the Flyers, who dominated the game in the second and third periods.

Outshot 10-5 in the first period, Philadelphia outshot New York 14-11 and 9-7 in the last two periods.

Simon Nolet fired a 35-foot slap shot past Giacomin at 8:05 of the final period to give Philadelphia a 3-1 cushion.

Philadelphia goaltender Bernie Parent was again brilliant in turning back 27 of 28 Ranger shots and robbing several rangers of point blank goal attempts.

Sox 'beaned' by Ryan, 16-6

BOSTON [AP] – Strikeout king Nolan Ryan knocked Boston's Doug Griffin unconscious with a fastball but overcame wildness Tuesday night in pitching the California Angels to a 16-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Ryan hit Griffin above the left ear in the first inning. The veteran second baseman was carried from the field on a stretcher and regained consciousness in the clubhouse before being taken to the hospital.

X-rays showed no fracture and doctors reported Griffin had "a severe concussion." A club spokesman said Griffin's condition was not critical.

Two batters later, Ryan hit Carl Yastrzemski in the right leg. However, Yastrzemski remained in the game until the sixth when he left with Boston hopelessly behind 11-3.

Ryan, who set a major league baseball record of 383 strikeouts last season, allowed six hits, including late-inning homers to Dick McAuliffe and Cecil Cooper, to even his record at 3-3.

He walked seven and struck out 15, including Rico Petrocelli four times.

Denny Doyle led California's attack with five singles, driving in two runs. Bob Oliver had a single, double and triple, knocking in four runs, and Ellie Rodriguez contributed a double and a single to score three more. Dave Chalk also drive in three, including two with his first major league homer.

Celtics ko'd by Bucks in ot 105-96, series tied 1-1

By DAVE BOGEL

MILWAUKEE, Wis. [UPI] – The MIlwaukee Bucks blew a 16-point lead Tuesday night, then came back in overtime to beat Boston 105-96 and tie their National Basketball Association Championship Series at one game each.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the Bucks high scorer with 36 points, gave Milwaukee a final lead at 96-94 with 2:20 left in the overtime and Milwaukee broke it open in the final 60 seconds on stuffed baskets and a free throw by Cornell Warner.

The best of seven series now moves to Boston for games three and four Friday and Sunday and returns here for game five next Tuesday night.

Milwaukee, after scoring the final 12 points of the first half, seemingly had the game under control building a 57-41 lead early in the third quarter. But the Celtics rallied behind Jo Jo White and John Havlicek to tie the score at 90-all with 58 seconds to play in regulation time on a pair of Havlicek free throws.

Havlicek scored the first two points of overtime, but a stuff shot by Abdul-Jabbar tied it. Oscar Robertson gave the lead back to the Bucks and then after White had driven in for his 22nd and 23rd points of the game, Jabbar took over again, hitting a hook shot for the go-ahead points.

Erving leads Nets over Utah

By STEVE WILSTEIN

NEW YORK [UPI] – Julius Erving pulled out all his tricks to score a season high 47 points and nearly single-handedly lead the New York Nets to an 89-85 victory over the Utah Stars in the first game of the ABA Championship Series Tuesday night.

Erving was magnificent with an array of outside jumpers and swooping dunks as he notched 26 points on 12 of 14 field goal shooting to pace the Nets to a 42-40 halftime advantage.

Out of rhythm for most of the game, the rest of the Nets depended on the 6-7, 23-year-old forward to continually bail them out.

Utah applied stiff defense throughout despite the absence of center Zelmo Beaty and were successful in clamping down on all of the Nets except Irving. Willie wise, Bruce Seals, and Roy Ebron alternately guarded Erving but none could stop him.

Larry Kenon, the Nets' 6-9 rookie forward was the only other consistent New York performer with 18 points and 22 rebounds.

Jimmy Jones and Wise helped the Stars finally move ahead after trailing for most of the first three periods as they gave Utah a five-point advantage at 79-74, but Erving and Kenon took over down the stretch to put the game away.

Jones paced Utah with 25 points and Wise added 20.

Utah seemd tired in the first three periods, perhaps an after effect of the Stars seven game Western Division Series victory over Indiana.

Trustees endorse Black Studies

By FRED NOBLES
MDC Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees yesterday endorsed the establishment of a Five College Major in Black Studies, approved a new two year program in Women's Studies and voted to support Governor Francis Sargent's Educational Opportunity Program.

Following approval by the directors of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, the current Afro-American Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts will be replaced by a new "cooperative" Five College program.

A special report of the Academic Matters Council presented before the Faculty Senate last January 31 described the new program as "designed to equip the students with the normal competencies of a Major in one of the traditional fields, in addition to a perspective to reality short of the distortions that have affected the perception of the roles and capabilities of blacks in the world."

The approved Women's Studies Program is scheduled to begin in the fall of 1974 and will, according to an Academic Matters Council report, "encourage the development of new courses in existing departments and the incorporation of new information and perspectives into existing course offerings."

Under the pilot program, a Certificate in Women's Studies would be awarded to students completing the program. The Certificate is equivalent to a minor concentration. There are tentative plans to give the program full Major status after the two year pilot program is completed.

The Governor's Economic Opportunity Program, endorsed by the Trustees, would make approximately $25 to $30 million available to Massachusetts college students whether attending private or public schools. The amount of aid a student receives will depend on need and on the costs of the school attended.

Students attending more expensive schools would receive more aid than those attending cheaper ones. In a statement of support for the Program, President Wood noted that, "a number of private schools are in great financial difficulty."

In a statement before the Board, Amherst Chancellor Randolph Bromery called for an examination of the "mission" of the Amherst campus.

Announcing his intention to establish a "broadly based" campus group to chart the University's future, Bromery noted that, "Within the institutions of higher education, there is a growing and pervasive sense that increased accessibility and the principle of academic excellence are contradictory and dissonant."

In other actions the Board approved the establishment of a Western European Studies Program and granted departmental status to the Computer and Information Science Program and the Polymer Science and Engineering Program, transferring them from the Graduate School to the faculty of Natural Sciences and Mathematics.

Sarge to set up nuke commission

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
MDC Staff

Governor Francis W. Sargent told representatives of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution that he will set up a state commission to examine the dangers of nuclear energy usage, yesterday in the Campus Center.

He also called on Congress to enact legislation guaranteeing "the right of states to become involved in nuclear safety."

He said the Atomic Energy Commission "must be reorganized" and called for the creation of a new agency "whose only focus is the safety and licensing of nuclear plants."

On a state level he promised to ask the legislature to change the starting date for the Council to examine new nuclear facilities from December first to July first. This would make the three plants now in the planning stage subject to Council review.

Sargent claimed the state is not equipped to monitor facilities at Plymouth and Rowe.

The commission will consist of scientists and law enforcement officials, and after three months will make recommendations to "serve as the basis for future state policy", according to Sargent.

The Governor said "the federal government must make some basic changes in the way it supervises nuclear power."

"The federal government must also streamline the procedure for nuclear hearing," Sargent explained. "They should do away with the numerous and time-consuming hearings....and hold one comprehensive hearing with technical and legal assistance provided to citizen advocates."

"....this nation continues to drift toward greater and greater reliance on nuclear power." Sargent added, "....it is time to end this drift.'

Of the AEC, Sargent said it is "caught between two conflicting roles." These roles are "advocate of greater atomic energy use" and "protector of public safety."

Armed men threaten student

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

UMass police apprehended two armed males in John Quincy Adams tower early Wednesday morning following a phone call from a student.

David Johnston, Director of the Department of Public Safety, said that the caller reported two men on the 21st floor who were threatening a female resident with a gun.

Jerome A. Napolitano, 28, of Cambridge and Thomas F. Ferreira, 29, of Northboro were arraigned in Northampton District Court yesterday morning on charges of possession of a dangerous weapon, having a firearm on campus, and breach of the peace.

The two males, both non-students, were issued trespass orders to prohibit them from coming onto campus again.

Officers James Tucker, Robert Hawkins, and Daniel Hagan responded to the call at 12:50 a.m. and confronted the pair in the corridor.

Police reports state that one male made a move as if to go for a gun and was immediately covered by Officer Hagan's gun. A subsequent frisk revealed that he did indeed have a weapon – a loaded 22 automatic.

Officer Tucker pursued the second subject from the 21st floor down to the 7th, where he was apprehended and found to have brass knuckles on his person. A loaded 32 revolver was later discovered on the 14th floor where he had ditched it.

Johnston said that the woman reported a threat made on her life at gunpoint earlier in the evening.

"We're told that other students came to her aid, he said. "One student had a baseball bat and a couple of other students grabbed one of the men and threw him against a wall, which resulted in some injury to his eye. Apparently when the baseball bat was brought out one of the men showed his gun."

There was a security guard in JQA dorm that night but apparently the men had keys to one of the rooms and passed themselves off as students.

D & R's split on transcripts

WASHINGTON [AP] – The House Judiciary Committee met Wednesday night with Democrats and Republicans apparently divided over how to respond to President Nixon's decision to give the impeachment inquiry edited transcripts rather than the Watergate tapes the panel had subpoenaed.

And with that confrontation still simmering, the White House moved toward a new court test with the special Watergate prosecutor's office by asking a federal judge to throw out a subpoena asking for tapes and records of 64 presidential conversations.

On Capitol Hill, Democrats and Republicans entered the Judiciary Committee meeting apparently split over how to react to the President's release of tape transcripts.

Democrats rallied behind a proposed letter stating the President has not complied with the subpoena. Several Republicans said that sounded reasonable, while making no commitments on voting for it.

SGA, Umies: togetherness

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

The newly elected SGA President and the Speaker of the Student Senate both agree that better communication between the senate and student body is their primary task.

The members of the Communications Committee, Savini said, will from time to time visit the various area governments and dormitories to personally talk with the students. There are also plans, he said, to establish a senate newsletter which will be posted in appropriate places for students to read.

McGrath said that getting input from students in the past, was a major obstacle. "When we beg for input they (students) never give it. It's like pulling teeth."

Savini said the SGA has been more "internal than external", not recognizing its role to the students.

Referring to the recent SGA election, McGrath said it was not a farce in itself, but the people who were claiming it was a farce were making it a farce."

Guilty!

Two Southwest students were found guilty by the Student Court Tuesday of "endangering the safety and welfare" of a crowd of students.

Southwest residents Arthur Berehulka and Tom Powell were put on 1½ years probation and given no sanction (no penalty) respectively.

Also charged for the same act but found innocent were SW residents Ed Gilmore and Thomas MacPhail.

Charges were filed by three area residents who said they saw water and toilet paper being thrown from the defendants' rooms in SW while a crowd below was watching streakers March 4.

The University Directory, distributed to dorm residents, says that students, to whom a room is assigned, are responsible for compliance with the regulation whether or not they are present in their room.

The Directory says it is "expressly forbidden to throw or drop any object from windows, balconies, roofs, etc. of any student residence facilities."

Thelwell leaves with satisfaction

By RUDY JONES
Black Affairs Editor

Mike Thelwell, first chairman of the university's W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies recently has announced his resignation from the Chairmanship at the end of the academic year. Since Thelwell's letter of resignation dated April 1, the Department has completed the process of searching for a new chairman. Prof. John H. Barcey Jr., has been selected by a search committee and unanimously approved by a vote of the faculty to succeed Thelwell.

In tendering his resignation Thelwell said, "I feel that the mandate that it was my privilege to accept from the University and the Black Community — the definition, establishment, and staffing of a department — has been executed to the limit of my abilities."

He pointed to certain areas which he regarded with "personal and professional satisfaction:

"The size, distinction and creative vitality of the faculty and range and academic quality of the Department's curriculum. The role of the department in the University's acquisition of the DuBois papers.

The intellectual calibre, political sophistication and professional success of the department's first graduated majors. The artistic growth and development of the Black Repertory Theatre. The professional respect with which the Department is regarded in academic circles in the Black World."

In listing the "unfinished business" Thelwell said that the top priorities facing the Department were the establishment of graduate studies; a viable and functioning Five College Black Studies consortium and he predicted that "so long as the department maintains a clear sense of purpose and of its duty and responsibility to the legacy of W.E.B. Dubois, with the support of the University we can establish in Amherst an educational instrument which will be of lasting service to the Black World and a testament to the enlightened vision of the University and Commonwealth."

In accepting Thelwell's resignation Dean Jeremiah Allen of the College of Arts and Sciences wrote:

"I regret the ending of a uniquely satisfactory working relationship and the loss of his invaluable contribution as a departmental leader... In four short years you and your colleague in the W.E.B. DuBois department have developed the best Afro-American studies department in the nation..this is an enduring achievement of which all of us can be proud..."

Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois, Dr. DuBois' widow, in a letter made available to the BNS wrote "My first reaction to your resignation was dismay and sorrow, but I realize that the department will move forward successfully. I can very well understand your need to concentrate on literary activities. W.E.B. would agree with you one hundred percent."

In an interview with the Black News Service, Thelwell made it clear that although he had had overtures from other schools he had no plans to leave the department or university "except maybe for a visiting appointment for short time at some other school."

Asked whether his resignation might have any negative effect on the black studies effort at the university, Thelwell said:

"I'd have to be supremely egotistic to think that. If I did think that that was even remotely possible then I would have stayed. The department is strong, it's respected, and John Bracey is extraordinarily able and committed. I think it is an index of the strength and maturity of the Department that the transition is as smooth and quick as it has been. I believe that Bracey will have the support of the faculty, the black community and the administration, even as I had."

Thelwell had high praise for the administration. "When I started out I was inclined not to trust them at all, but over the years I have developed a great respect for men such as ex-chancellor Tippo, Provost Gluckstern, Dean Shapiro and Allen and of course Brother Chancellor Bromery. They have, even when we disagree, been extremely reasonable, honorable and forthright in our dealings with them. I'd just like to say that for the record, cause its true."

Thelwell, a critically acclaimed writer, is working on a film script and plans to finish a book of political stories set in Mississippi this summer.

Chancellor Bromery was unavailable for comments. His office was asked to make a statement but he refused on the grounds that the Chancellor and Mr. Thelwell had a very special relationship hence only the chancellor could give an honest statement.

Champden to speak on Attica's injustice

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Roger Champen, an Attica "jail house lawyer" who was at Attica during the recent revolt, will speak tonight at 8 p.m. in 104 Thompson.

The lecture, entitled "Attica is All of Us," will include a film on the Attica revolt.

The State of New York is pressing charges against 61 men who say they rightfully protested the injustice of the Attica penal system. The state has already spent more than $300,000 on the prosecution.

In addition, Governor Malcolm Wilson's recently submitted budget proposal contains the following requests: $1.5 million for the state's investigation and prosecution and $576,000 for the Department of Correctional Services to provide "special security coverage" for inmates involved in the court proceedings.

Also, Erie County (in which the city of Buffalo is located) has requested $2,894,900 to cover the expenses involved in extablishing and maintaining four additional trial parts, specifically for the Attica prosecutions. The projected allocations of the funds for fiscal year 1974 thus total some $5 million.

Champen's speech is being sponsored by the Distinguished Visitor's Program.

Financial aid on concourse

Friday May 3 is the deadline for next year's financial aid applications. The Campus Assistance Center on the Campus Center concourse will be staffed everyday this week from 9-11 a.m. by people from the financial aid office for student's assistance. They will also be there from 7-10 p.m. tonight.

Bromery fears cut in state funds

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA
MDC Staff

Chancellor Randolph Bromery, in an interview for the Collegian, said that "Any cut in the university budget will affect students".

The Chancellor was refering to the cut of UMass funds by the state legislature that will affect university education, students, and many programs operating on campus.

The Adminstration is taking measures to find solutions to the problems that the cut of funds, (About 4.2 million), represents to the university. Dr. Bromery said that administrators and faculty, "have to find more efficient and effective ways to utilize funds".

He said that his big concern is to "Make every effort to see that the impact in any budget cut is distributed equatibly among the university community."

However to perform that distribution, the present operating programs will need to be "re-examined" to see "If they are achieving the goals they established" Bromery said.

He said the cooperation and participation of students is needed to resolve the budget cut problem. This student responsibility is to "make the best use of the financial aid they are receiving, and-or the academic programs they are in".

Concerning the increase in the number of minority group students attending UMass, Bromery said that "We have an effective affirmative action commitment".

The increase of minority group students and faculty has created a new basis of interrelation with the majority group. Bromery said that there have been positive changes however there is still a lot to do.

The increasing understanding among both groups is attributed "as part of the educational process" Bromery said.

"All the people in the community, (University), need to learn, if they want to live together in the future", Bromery said. He seems positive that this goal could be achieved because the university has a better environment to promote better racial and cultural relations, if compared with the environment created by the average citizen outside the university.

"Education is a form of enlightenment, you can not remove all prejudices" - Some of those prejudices, Bromery said, are created by ignorance.

The educational process "could be beneficial to the country" he added.

Concerning the education of minority group students on campus, he quoted the Philosopher W.E.B. Dubois; "Every society in the history of the world is measured by the talented tenth".

"If minority people are going to get a piece of the action needed to get serious in the education pursuit", Bromery said.

Some of the ways that minority groups could take full advantage of their higher education, Bromery said, are to stress more science, diversify the talents, develop their full potential, and be more serious in their education because of its high costs, the responsabilities that those students have to their communities, and because... "not all the minorities have access to a higher education."

Chancellor Randolph Bromery

The Chancellor who, surprisingly, talked about his work in geophysics and geology, in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico said that Puerto Rican students on campus "Must take educational opportunities and acquired skills that are directly applicable to solving some of the economical and social problems of Puerto Rico, or the Puerto Rican communities on the mainland."

Chancellor Bromery said he sees "a serious intellectual concern in all students in general, and minority groups in particular".

Sylvan subshop rakes in cash

By SAMUEL HASSAN
MDC Staff

This is part two of a three part feature on the Sylvan Residential Area.

Sylvan's subshop, located on the ground floor in McNamara, has one of the five largest earned incomes of any RSO group at UMass. The subshop takes in about $1500.00 weekly.

Formerly a storage area, the grinder shop was originated in April of 1972 by Rich Sirote, a hotel and restaurant management junior. Current manager Jon Russell took over for Sirote in January of 1973. He receives $120.00 weekly and is responsible for full operations.

Extensive renovations were done over intercession that cost roughly $5800.00. Russell and three Sylvan residents, all with excellent carpentry skills, have made the subshop a high class eat-in or out food establishment. You'll have to come in and see for yourself.

In February, after the renovations were complete, the management held a name-the-subshop contest. A twenty dollar prize was won by a woman in No. 204 Cashin for her enty, The Subway.

While food costs have risen over 3 per cent in 1974, the Subway's prices haven't. Roast beef subs are the most expensive item on the menu, $1.10 with or without cheese, tomatoes, pickles etc., and most every imaginable grinder is served, hot or cold. Chips, sweet snacks, and soda are also sold weekly.

All profits from the Subway go back into the Sylvan area, thus the Subway is essentially a non-profit organization. Ten student employees work the shop from 5:30 p.m. to midnight, 12:30 on weekends, and they earn $2-$2.25 an hour.

Sylvan's Subway has the prestige of being the only known food establishment in the world to offer free subs to streakers. Friday night, March 8th from 9:00 p.m. to midnight, twenty streakers, all males, came to take advantage of the free subs for streakers offer. All who came wore shoes, thus there were no health regulations violated.

As reported by Parchment reporter Mary Narkewicz, who was working the shop at the time, "some danced, some staggered, some blushed and shivered, and one non-conformist brandished a bowtie."

Mass. Legislature needed to push for vet school

By MARTIN J. WATERS
MDC Staff

The dean of the University's Medical School said last night that establishment of a school of veterinary medicine in Massachusetts should be in conjunction with the Medical School complex in Worcester.

Dr. Lamar Soutter, M.D. spoke to the Pre-Veterinary Club at the Campus Center. Students in that group have become involved in the effort to found a veterinarian's training school in New England.

At present, the only veterinary schools in the eastern United States are at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y. and at the University of Penn. The UMass Board of Trustees last month rejected an endorsement of the use of state owned land in Grafton for a veterinary school.

Soutter said that the cost of constructing such a school in Worcester would be approximately half of that required at an independent site. The vacant state hospital in Grafton, six miles away, would be utilized for the veterinary school farm, he said.

The Mass. legislature, Soutter said, is the key to establishment of the school. He gave $20-25 million as a rough estimate of the initial cost of the project.

Soutter told the students: "I think Conn. and R.I. would invest, but I think it takes the vigor of the Mass legislature to get such a project going."

There is regional support for establishment of the veterinary school in Worcester from the New England Board of Higher Education, according to Soutter. He was autious about immediate prospects for starting the school, but optimistic for eventual approval.

"I think it will come," Soutter said, "but you must remember money is very short this year."

He emphasized his belief that the UMass trustees are awaiting legislative action before moving ahead with the veterinary school proposal in any way.

Soutter said "I think the attitude of the trustees is that they feel it's up to the legislature to vote it."

There is currently a proposal before the General Court to transfer the Grafter property to UMass for veterinary use. However, that measure includes no funding authorization.

"Death Angels" cult responsible

Police arrest 7 in Zebra case

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — In a massive early morning dragnet, more than 100 police officers yesterday arrested seven young black men described as members of a terrorist murder cult called the "Death Angels" and charged them with the random "Zebra" killings of 12 white persons.

Mayor Joseph L. Alioto said the San Francisco murders were part of a statewide conspiracy by the previously unknown Death Angels that included 73 murderous assaults throughout California since 1970.

He called the sect "a kind of reverse Ku Klux Klan" and said it may be responsible for many unsolved murders and disappearances.

But California Attorney General Evelle J. Younger said state authorities have "no evidence that the people who committed the Zebra murders in San Francisco committed murders elsewhere in California."

Alioto said the Death Angels, which he called a "vicious ring dedicated to the murder and mutilation of whites and dissident blacks," may extend beyond California. He said another suspect is in jail somewhere outside San Francisco, and said police suspect the Death Angels' leader is in a midwestern city. He declined to name the cities.

Asked if the "Death Angels" activities extended nationwide, Alioto replied: "I am not saying that." Alioto said the inference could be drawn from the similar killings "that the organization is not limited to the San Francisco area or indeed the state of California."

Younger said there were a number of murders throughout the state "with characteristics similar to local murders," but there was nothing further to link them together. Alioto admitted he had no physical evidence.

Alioto said police broke the case with the help of an informer who had witnessed some of the Zebra slayings, in which 18 persons were shot at random on San Francisco streets over a five-month period. Twelve victims were killed.

Police said all seven were arrested separately, but refused to divulge further details.

MOSCOW — Huge placards bearing photos of Nikolai Lenin (L) and Friedrich Engels are carried by crowds as they move into Red Square at the start of the May Day celebrations here yesterday. Scores of thousands of Soviet citizens marched through the square with flowers, banners and sung in a May Day demonstration devoid of speech-making for the first time in memory.

Nixon asks Sirica to kill Jaworski subpoena of tapes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Nixon's lawyers yesterday asked U. S. District Judge John J. Sirica to quash a subpoena by the Watergate prosecutors for 64 White House tapes.

In a formal claim, Nixon said the materials covered by the subpoena "are within the constitutional privilege of the President to refuse to disclose confidential information when disclosure would be contrary to the public interest."

Noting that 20 of the conversations were made public a day earlier, Nixon said "the other items sought are confidential conversations between a President and his close advisers that would be inconsistent with the public interest to produce."

Sirica scheduled a hearing on the White House petition for 10 a.m. EDT today.

In a memorandum backing up Nixon's personal statement, White House Watergate lawyer James D. St. Clair hinted that the President may appeal the case to the Supreme Court if Sirica upholds the subpoena.

"We note at the outset that we continue to believe that it is for the President of the United States, rather than for a court, to decide when the public interest requires that he exercise his constitutional privilege to refuse to produce information," St. Clair said.

"We also continue to believe that a President is not subject to compulsory process from a court."

St. Clair, noting that Sirica had ruled against these arguments on an earlier tape subpoena, said he was reiterating his case "should it be necessary for this case to reach a court in which the previous decision is not a controlling precedent."

Involved are 64 tapes of presidential conversations sought by special prosecutor Leon Jaworski in his cases against seven former White House or re-election campaign aides. The tapes cover the period from June, 1972 to June, 1973.

St. Clair also argued that Jaworski had no proof that the subpoenaed tapes contained evidence relevant to the Watergate case.

St. Clair said the prosecutor could not prove that the tapes were relevant to the trials beginning Sept. 9 and could not substantiate that he was not on a "general fishing expedition." The White House had until Thursday to answer the subpoena. St. Clair said earlier in the day he would attempt to quash the subpoena.

U.S. and the world

Panel to decide response to tapes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Judiciary Committee yesterday struggled to find a way to tell President Nixon it is not satisfied with his substitution of edited transcripts for the original Watergate tapes it requested.

The full committee, meeting in an unusual evening meeting at 7:45 p.m., EDT, wants to avoid a divisive vote on citing Nixon for noncompliance with its April 11 subpoena asking for 42 Watergate-related tapes.

Instead, a committee member said, a compromise might be embodied in a letter to the President's lawyer, renewing requests for the original tapes and avoiding a declaration of noncompliance.

But Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., said he would introduce a motion at the meeting to cite Nixon for contempt of Congress for refusing to comply fully with the subpoena.

"The idea is to express noncompliance in some way without asking for a vote," Rep. Ed. Mezvinsky, D-Iowa, said. "I hope we can register our feeling that the President's response was not adequate."

Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., said the committee would press for an additional group of tapes it has requested but not subpoenaed. The size of the request is disputed — some reports saying 79 tapes and presidential counsel James D. St. Clair saying 142.

"We felt that material is relevant," Rodino said. "We felt our request can be justified."

Both Democrats and Republicans on the committee want to avoid a partisan vote on noncompliance, although many feel Nixon has not fulfilled the specific request for specific tapes.

Haldeman wants look at tapes

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former White House Chief of Staff H. R. Haldeman yesterday asked a federal court to permit him to "inspect and test" the original tapes of all his conversations with President Nixon to help him prepare a defense in the Watergate coverup case.

Haldeman asked the court to allow him to inspect the machines used to record the conversations and later to transcribe Nixon's secret tapes "to determine whether those machines were operating properly."

Haldeman's request was included in a flurry of defense motions filed in U. S. District Court by the seven men indicted last March 1 in connection with the Watergate coverup plot.

Anderson jailed

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Former Baltimore County Executive N. Dale Anderson, convicted in the same political corruption scandal that forced Spiro T. Agnew to resign as vice president, was sentenced yesterday to five years in prison.

"I feel I've been screwed," he said, leaving the courthouse. "The jury was tired, they were sick and they were highly intimidated. The jury was so intimidated by the Internal Revenue Service that they would have convicted the Pope."

Anderson, 57, resigned his office last week.

A former Democratic National Committeeman who succeeded Agnew as County executive in 1966, Anderson was convicted March 20 on 32 counts of, extortion, income tax evasion, and conspiracy, after an investigation by the U.S. Attorney's oofice and the Internal Revenue Service.

Defense firm fined

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A federal judge yesterday fined the Northrop Corp., a major defense contractor, and two of its executives a total of $11,000 on charges of illegal political contributions by government contractors to President Nixon's 1972 campaign.

Some of the Northrop contribution eventually was used to pay the expenses of the original Watergate defendants.

"This law has been openly flouted for more than 20 years," U.S. District Judge George L. Hart said during a 20-minute proceeding.

The law is a little-used 1940 statute that prohibits political contributions by firms doing business with the government.

Prices to be held

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Cost of Living Council Director John T. Dunlop warned several hundred companies yesterday to honor past promises to hold down prices even though the government's stablization program has expired.

The warning referred to commitments made by corporations in 17 key industries to hold prices under specific levels in return for early exemption from the stablization program which expired at Tuesday midnight.

Dunlop told reporters it was not clear whether the pledges could be enforced by law but he sent telegrams to company executives who made pledges saying "we...expect that your company will fully comply with the terms of that commitment.

Kissinger praised

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt [UPI] — Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said yesterday he has "full confidence that my friend Dr. Henry" Kissinger will achieve military disengagement between Israel and Syria.

Sadat spoke to newsmen after publicly defending the U.S. secretary of state's latest peace mission to the Middle East and labeling critics "political adolescents." He denied in his annual May Day speech that the moves were directed against the Soviet Union.

Food prices drop

Consumers With a keen eye for bargains found the family grocery bill declining in April, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey.

Shoppers trying to plan ahead will have a hard time in May. A monthly Agriculture Department report released Monday showed that by April 15 the prices farmers receive for their products had dropped 6 per cent from the previous month. But government statistics show that middlemen are taking greater margins and this means higher prices at the retail level.

Oil competition hurt by majors: Simon

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Energy chief John C. Sawhill complained to Congress yesterday that major oil companies are threatening to damage free competition by taking over too many retail outlets.

He told a Senate small business subcommittee that moves by refiners to enter the retail business are included in the Federal Energy Office's investigation into competetive practices in the petroleum industry.

"One of the trends currently of concern to me is that major oil companies are moving into the retail sector more aggressively," said Sawhill, head of the FEO.

He told the subcommittee that currently independent dealers dominate retail sales of gasoline and the FEO wants to keep it that way.

"It seems to me to be very important to maintain a strong, viable independent segment," he said, explaining that the FEO would like to have fuel allocation powers "for some time in the future" to ensure survival of the independents.

Sawhill also predicted that fuel shortages would be less severe next winter. He said there would be less severe next winter. He said there would be some spot shortages but nothing like the long lines at gasoline pumps last winter.

"I believe the severe shortages we experienced this past winter are largely over," said Sawhill. "Unless there is a reimposition of the Arab oil embargo, and I don't anticipate that happening, we will not experience the severe shortage we had last winter."

Racial balance ordered by court

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court yesterday ordered the Springfield School Committee to put a 5,800 pupil busing plan into effect by September to racially balance the city's schools.

"The time for testing the meaning" of the state's racial imbalance law "has long since passed and...the time for prompt action to implement it is at hand," Chief Justice G. Joseph Tauro wrote in the 5-0 decision.

The decision rejects the school committee's appeal of a state Board of Education-ordered busing plan drawn up by the Massachusetts Racial Imbalance Task Force.

Rep. Arthur J. McKenna, D-Springfield, said "The Supreme Court should leave the cities alone. The people in Springfield should be able to run their own city.

"We're going to have lots of trouble, I think."

Another Democratic Springfield lawmaker, Rep. Peter H. Lappin, said "We, as legislators, are still in the process of trying to get the governor in the hope that he will sign the repeal of the racial imbalance act.

"I think sometimes the courts, in their wisdom, lack the foresight to get out into the field and see what education is all about."

A measure to repeal the racial imbalance law has been sent to Gov. Francis W. Sargent. He is not expected to sign it.

Springfield Mayor William C. Sullivan said he was "disappointed but not surprised" by the ruling.

"I was hoping that the Supreme Court might say based on the evidence presented from our side that the state Board of Education and the school committee should sit down and see if they could work this out and develop a school building construction program.

"Now I'm waiting for the governor to come out with suggested amendments because he said he'd be in favor of amendments and he also says he wants to help Springfield," Sullivan said.

"I don't think that a case has been lost. I think the children have won," said Dr. Walter H. English, a black member of the school committee and a minroity member of the busing issue.

No-fault insurance passed by Senate

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate voted 53 to 42 yesterday to approve a controversial bill to establish no-fault automobile insurance plans in every state. The measure now goes to the House where its fate is uncertain.

The bill, which requires each state to adopt no-fault plans based on minimum federal requirements, now goes to the House where both sides concede it faces "an uncertain fate."

Under the no-fault proposal, a driver would be paid by his own insurance company for all medical costs arising out of an accident in addition to minimum wage losses without a determination of who was at fault.

The bill would permit a driver or his family to sue for further damages only in the event of death, serious or permanent disability or disfigurement, or if disabled for three months or longer.

In addition to payment of full medical costs, drivers under the no-fault law could receive up to $15,000 in wage losses, at least $1,000 in burial expenses, and up to $5,000 in death benefits for a victim's family.

Supporters of the bill argued that by prohibiting lawsuits for petty accident cases, insurance costs would go down and so would premiums. They claimed that no-fault would ultimately save up to $1.4 billion annually in premiums.

The bill has been strongly opposed through a telegram lobbying effort by the Trial Lawyers Association.

Coast dock workers strike for raise

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI]-West Coast longshoremen halted work on the docks yesterday to try to win a 30 cent an hour wage boost negotiated last year, but denied them under wage price controls which expired at midnight Tuesday.

The strike idled about 12,000 dockworkers all along the coast, but not picket lines were posted and crews continued to work military cargo and passenger ships.

The Pacific Maritime Association, representing waterfront employers, denounced the walkout as a violation by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of its two-year contract which has a no-strike clause.

Under federal wage controls, the Cost of Living Council cut 30 cents from a 72-cent-an-hour wage boost won by the union last year.

With the ending of controls, the ILWU has been attempting to negotiate the 30 cent raise back into longshore pay.

"With the expiration of controls, we feel it's a new ball game," the spokesman said.

The current pact extends until July, 1975, and provides a base pay of $5.50 an hour for the first six hours of a shift and time and a half for two hours a day.

ILWU officials refused to say how long the work stoppage would last, but longshoremen on the waterfront said they understood it would be only 24 or 48 hours.

More than 40 ships were affected, but perishable cargo was worked, and passenger baggage was loaded on and off cruise ships. The dockworkers remained on the job unloading a Norwegian freighter in Los Angeles with a fire smouldering in its hold.

Campus Comments

By E. Patrick McQuaid
and Bob Stevens

The existing rapport between campus police and students was the issue presented to a number of random people encountered on the street.

The Question: How do you feel concerning the relationship between police and students on campus and what can be done if you feel there is room for improvement?

Richard Fulton, senior, Bluewall bartender: The police are doing a pretty good job and they're as fair as they can be. The only time you see them is when they're needed. I think that this police sterotype carried over from city life is unjust. The campus police are fairer than any cops I know. Perhaps bettering the student-police relationship through showing the students the problems that they're confronted with could eliminate any bad feelings here.

Peter Kirton, senior from off campus: Most people feel pretty negative towards police in general. I was once coming out of the infirmary on crutches and they gave me a ride home, which was very nice of them. I think that people react to the police based on past interactions with them. Like back in the late sixty's things were different. People come on campus with preformed feelings; they think things are the same here as they are on the outside.

Mike Parziale, senior from Colonial Village: There's no real trouble: no conflict. It seems to me that their job is to just keep an eye on traffic and the like because there's not that much illegal shit going on. I think any negative feelings are due to the way they are represented in the media. I don't like those cartoons McGilvary drew about them. I think he's an asshole who's just trying to widen the gap between police and students. If there's no problem, why create one?

Jim Elliott, Southwest: I don't think about them. They don't bother me. The only thing that I don't like is that they drive their cars on the walk areas. They should be where they are now; out of sight, out of mind.

Zulma Garcia, graduate student from Prince, Southwest: I get the impression that they make a profit out of how many tickets they write. They're too anxious to give them but I must admit I deserved any tickets that I've received. I don't feel oppressed by them in any way. If you don't bother them or anyone else they won't bother you. Most policemen suffer from the stereotype, and so do the students have a sterotype. They're not supposed to get along. Who's going to take the first step?

Leslie Rocha, senior from John Adams, Southwest: They're racist. They harass too many people. I don't think they're doing their job. They harass black people; they stop guys jiving all the time and they give you a lot of shit. They gave us some unwarranted searches. They need more black officers and a better way of screening applicants to the force.

Press brings justice

By DARIO POLITELLA

The current Mitchell-Stans decision stands with other convincing evidence that a free press can operate and still assure a fair trial.

Upon hearing the verdict of "not guilty", April 28, 1974, the former Attorney General of the United States reaffirmed his faith in the people to reach a fair decision.

A year ago, when the charges of perjury, conspiracy and other felonies were brought against these highly-placed CREEPs (Committee for the Re-Election of the President), they and their lawyers had manuvered the vast range of legal options under the banner that it would be impossible to get a fair trial. The media, they said, had already tried and convicted them.

And there are others who say that greater restraints must be exercised on the press, so that court room decisions may be made only on the basis of what the prosecution is clever enough to unearth and the defense is skillful enough to refute.

There are a couple of things wrong with this theory. The most obvious is that mnay cases would never get to court, were it not for the vigilance of a free and vigorous press. Watergate, My Lai, The Pentagon Papers, Kent State and Spiro Agnew are only a few of the most recent incidents where the tenacity of free journalists has resulted in bringing crimes against society into the arena of public scrutiny.

The other thing wrong with this theory is that it presupposes that every exposure is unfair and prejucicial because of emotion, as in the Sam Sheppard murder trial in 1954. And that press coverage is always detrimental to the defendant. But there are cases like "The Nine-Year-Old in Norfolk Prison" currently being aroused in local newspaper columns, to assure a fair trial that his champions charge that Daniels never received.

It is this writer's contention that the function of great newspapers and other media is to "comfort the afflicted and to afflict the comfortable."

Alexander Hamilton, the defending lawyer in the case of The People v. Croswell, N.Y. 1804, said it in more classical terms.

"The liberty of the press is the right to publish with impunity, truth, with good motives, for justifiable ends through reflecting on government, magistracy, or individuals."

Inevitably, when discussion of any restraints on the press is aroused, the First Amendment is invoked, as though that dictum of the ten-part Bill of Rights of the American Constitution provides the press with license to steal.

It reads that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press..."

Under the libertarian theory, if the press has untrammeled freedom to pursue the truth, men would use their reason and intellect to winnow our falsehoods, according to Hiller Krieghbaum in his recent book on "Pressures on the Press."

The poet John Milton also said it, "...who ever knew Truth put to the worse, in a free and open encounter?"

Here are other quotations to support the concept that a free and responsible press should not preclude fair trials.

Mr. Justice William O. Douglas, in Dennis et al v. U.S. (1951), wrote a dissenting opinion that included "The First Amendment makes confidence in the common sense of our people and in their maturity of judgment the great postulate of our democracy."

In a unanimous decision in the contempt case of pennekamp v. Florida (1946), the Supreme Court carefully delineated the responsibilities of judges and newsmen. These guidelines remain, in principle, for today.

"A free press is not to be preferred to an independent judiciary, nor an independent judiciary to a free press. Neither has primacy over the other; both are indispensable to a free society. The freedom of the press in itself presupposes an independent judiciary through which that freedom may, if necessary, be vindicated. And one of the potent means for assuring judges their independence is a free press..."

This writer contends, partially on the basis of evidence cited here, that a free press poses no threat to fair trial. The courts already have viable safeguards which they have exercised effectively. The Mitchell-Stans trial is a case in point.

Care in selecting jurors, sequestering them while trial is in progress, enforcement of Canon 35 of the American Bar Association (precludes cameras in the courtroom), control over publicity-seeking lawyers and court officials, and the exercise of contempt powers are adequate means of assuring fair trials.

Mr. Justice Potter in the New York Times Co. v. U.S. (1971) said it: "...a press that is alert, aware, and free most vitally serves the basic purpose of the First Amendment. For without an informed and free press there cannot be an enlightened people."

Even Mitchell and Stans know that.

By MARK VOGLER

Some people may never be able to receive a fair trial in America--because of a free, wielding press.

Kidnapped heiress Patricia Hearst is a good example of how an individual's rights can be deprived by prejudicial pre-trial publicity.

Several weeks ago Miss Hearst was implicated in a bank robbery allegedly performed by the Symbionese Liberation Army.

Atty. Gen. William Saxbe, the country's chief law enforcing official, said there was no doubt as to the intent of Miss Hearst, calling her "a common criminal."

If Miss Hearst is apprehended--regardless of whether she is innocent or guilty--many view her chances of being tried before an impartial jury as virtually impossible.

Never before in American history has the clash between a free press and the right of an individual to be fairly tried been more apparent.

The Patricia Hearst case is just one example. Watergate is another.

It is quite evident now that without the relentless probing of the Washington Post, the White House Horrors would have remained what Ronald Zeigler referred to as "a third-rate burglary."

However, it is also evident that the people's right to know the facts of the unraveling scandal, the freedom of the press to operate according to the first amendment of the United States Constitution--HAS COME AT THE EXPENSE OF ALL THOSE IMPLICATED.

Many legal experts are skeptical of the chances of anyone charged with Watergate crimes have of receiving a fair trial. Many of the headline stories have come through high governmental press leaks.

Grand jury testimony, in some cases, has been leaked to the press. Under these circumstances, how can these men be fairly judged?

It appears very doubtful that the President himself, if impeached by the House and convicted by the Senate, could receive a fair trial.

Although the President has not been indicted, many Americans are convinced of his wrongdoings--because of the coverage given by the newspapers.

The public's right to know has denied even the President of the United States a fair judgment.

Free press and fair trial are definitely on a collision course. But instances such as Patricia Hearst, Watergate and possible Nixon crimes are not of the ordinary.

In small communities, misleading head-lines can be cited which definitely have a prejudicial impact on upcoming court cases.

Often times past records of defendants are published. This in itself is an impropriety. An individual should be tried on evidence presented against him--not on his past record.

Problems are encountered when papers get wind of statements made by law enforcement authorities and legal officials. How can one be afforded a fair trial when a police chief blurts out to a hungry reporter: "We've got the man; he'll hang for this."?

How can an individual be fairly tried when incriminating evidence surmounted by a district attorney leaks out before a jury is even empaneled?

A man is accused of assaulting a woman. The local daily reports that he "brutally assaulted" her, describing in minute detail the circumstances of the alleged crime. Have his rights to a fair trial been denied?

A defendant's confession appears in a local daily. Does this ensure that he will still be fairly tried?

Obviously the gap between the first and sixth amendments can only be bridged by a better understanding between the legal branch of government and the press.

The American Bar Association and the American Newspaper Association have taken a step in the right direction by establishing guidelines to follow. But to resolve the conflict it is necessary for all newspapers to adhere to the suggestions.

A free press is essential as a watchdog of our system. But its threat on an individual's right to a fair trial must be checked.

Love me I'm liberal

Love me, oh love me I'm a liberal.

—Phil Ochs

Two or three days ago I was walking through the Campus Center when a woman passed me with a McGovern-Shriver button her coat. Now being quick of wit it occured to me that McGovern and Shriver were the Democratic candidates in 1972. So I wondered why she had the button; two reasons came into my mind. First she might not have changed her coat since November of 1972 but this did not seem likely as all her clothes were relatively new. Second, she might have been trying to remind someone that she was a McGovern supporter or that at least she voted for him. Obviously she does not need the button to remind herself that she cast her ballot for the Senator from South Dakota. I can remind myself of that whenever I want to. Hence it seems that she was trying to tell others that she voted Democratic in 1972 but why? Most of the campus followed her lead that year so it isn't anything special. I do not know the woman so I can only guess her reasons: she may have been suffering from one of the various liberal diseases. These liberal diseases included: the know-nothing liberal, the petite liberal, the do-nothing liberal and the we give liberals bad name liberals.

Not all liberals are plagued by these diseases and I hope to illustrate examples of those that are later in the column. First, it is necessary to define exactly what a liberal is or at least what kind of liberal we are talking about. A friend of mine once said to me "I'm a liberal," "Congratulations," I replied, "I'm pomegranate." They both mean about the same thing in terms of defining human behavior and political believes. In fact I suspect that more people are interested in pomegranates. An exact definition of liberal is probably impossible to reach; for instance on the question of continuing the draft Senator Kennedy, a noted left winger voted with Senator Strom Thurmond for the continuation of conscription. While a conservative like Goldwater voted with McGovern. So, it seems that liberal and conservative must be defined on the basis of each issue.

An example of the do-nothing liberal and the we give liberals bad name liberals is an acquaintance of mine who constantly tells us that we need to save our natural resources and stop using so much of the world's raw materials. Yet when given the opportunity of buying cans and throwing them away or purchasing glass and recycling it he chooses the can. Now the reasoning he offers is a little difficult to understand but basically it follows this line: since the number of cans he uses is relatively insignificant compared to the nation's consumption; it doesn't make any difference what he does with his cans. What we need he says is a law prohibiting cans and non-returnable bottles. Then the reasons the amount of glass and tin he uses will make a difference but only because there is a law that says it does.

Now I don't mean to slander all the people who consider themselves liberals; a good portion of them know what they are talking about and doing I think. But this small group of people have managed to give the word liberal a bad connotation.

Sticks and stones

Frankly, I wouldn't be surprised if Rudy Jones, the Collegian's newly appointed Black Affairs Editor, announced to the world that he had obtained a list of thirty-one card carrying members of White Citizen's Council who are currently working for the Collegian. Somebody get me an Alka-Seltzer, huh?

"Sticks and stones can break my bones but names can never harm me." That's how my father told me to respond when the kids at school called me "Kike." If I were to let on that the name calling bothered me, my father warned, I would just give them the incentive to pour it on some more.

Is Rudolph Jones really worth getting uptight about? To me, he's about as soul-stirring as Henry Ragin and his band of Merry Daffodils. Why take him seriously at all? Draw your own conclusions from his own learned pronouncements:

1) "The paper is run by a bunch of racist, insecure, insensitive children." So what else is new? Informed sources have it that the photo staff has been burning big white crosses in the darkroom after hours. Stop the presses! Hold the front page for a big headline!

2) In a response to a letter by former editor Mary Vorderer: "And what are you doing today? Probably supplying Ku Klux pictures for the Black Affair Editor's file." Ku Klux pictures? I haven't seen any of those come over the wire service. Maybe they were really some of Don McGilvray's UMIES cartoons. A reasonable human error, no doubt.

"Is Rudolph Jones really worth getting up tight about?... Why take him seriously at all?"

3) "If you are sensitive to Black peoples problems, then why don't you go neutralize the Birchites and Ku Klux Klanners on the Collegian staff?" Neutralize? Hmmmmmm. By what means does Rudolph suggest we neutralize the Birchites and Klansmen? As far as Birchites go, Bob Estelle has promised us that he won't bother anybody after he graduates in June. He's going back to Long Island to expose the Conspiracy in his home town. As far as Klanspersons are concerned, there's absolutely no truth to the rumor that our Editor-in-Chief, Karen Lynch, changed her name from Lynchewitz before she was elected. Sources confirmed that her father's name is listed in the Winchester Town Registry as Mr. Lynch.

4) "Why don't you go stop your Mama and Papa from exploiting and oppressing Black People?" Really! Rudolph Jones has now placed the parents of Collegian staff members on the racist list. But I may find it difficult to prevail upon my folks to discontinue their heinous crimes against Rudolph. They haven't said a word to me since I announced that I had registered as a Republican. Maybe Rudolph can do it for me.

5) "The Collegian should clean its house, too. They should throw out the AP machines and put the reporters to work" That's fine. Without the AP machines, the only way to get news from far away is to fly our own reporters to the scene for the action. That may cost a bundle of loot, but it sounds like a good idea. I'll take a beat in Washington. Maybe Rudolph Jones would like to be shipped out to cover the Bar Mitzvah circuit in Saudi Arabia. I'll contribute to his air fare.

Facts rule

By MIKE KNEELAND

The Republicans are scared. For many of them, it is the first time their Congressional seat is in serious jeopardy. The reason, of course, is the unpopularity of President Nixon.

That message became ever so clear when the President campaigned for James M. Sparling in Michigan's Eighth Congressional District and Sparling lost.

On Capitol Hill, Time Magazine quoted a "most knowledgeable and influential Republican" as saying: "In the next few days there are going to be some very strong messages sent from the House to the President of the United States."

Echoing - the GOP's problem, Michigan's Republican Senator Robert P. Griffin said: "No Republican should assume that he has a safe seat any more." With this realization, many Republicans seem to be joining the impeachment bandwagon.

And this distresses me. If the President is to be impeached, let it be according to the dictates of the Constitution, not because he is a political hot potato. In no way should House members be thinking of their own political future when, and if, the impeachment question comes to a vote.

For by those considerations, the Presidency would indeed be weakened. Future Presidents might be more concerned with the political consequences of a decision rather than their "prudent" judgement.

If the facts say the President should be impeached, then House members should vote yes to the issue.

But should a House member vote yes for any personal, political consideration, it would be a blow to American justice.

Cataldo: too unrealistic

To The Editor:

While reading Gerry Cataldo's column in Monday's Collegian his unrealistic liberalism regarding forced busing in the city of Boston came across quite clearly. He naively asserts that forced busing opponents "plainly do not want to break up their 'lily white' neighborhood school system, and want to keep black kids 'where they belong', in their rundown, outdated, inferior, understaffed, poorly administered schools". He then states that forced busing opponents don't fear for their children's safety in regards to forced busing as an issue. Is Mr. Cataldo kidding or doesn't he understand the political climate in Boston regarding busing. Sure, quite a few white people in Boston want to maintain "lily white" neighborhoods, but not all. You infer that anyone who doesn't see forced busing as an answer to Quality Education and Racial Imbalance is racist. There are black people who don't like forced busing as a means of Racial Imbalance just as well. And parents don't care for their child's safety? Who are you to say that every parent who doesn't see forced busing as a realistic way to achieve Racial Imbalance and Quality Education in Boston as not giving a damn about the welfare of their children. Many of the forced busing opponents I've talked to are very much concerned about their child's safety. They also believe it is their right to send their children to the local neighborhood school usually within walking distance of home. They don't like the idea of the State using their children as tools of an unworkable system of forced busing in order to make sure that every school has 50 per cent non-white enrollment. They are also concerned about the destruction of neighborhoods, the breakup of community togetherness which they fear forced busing will bring. This is not to say that in white neighborhoods all forced busing opponents want to keep black people out. They see that each neighborhood in Boston has a certain sort of ethnic spirit and flavor to it. There are racists everywhere and one finds quite a few of them in the ranks of forced busing opponents. But everyone who doesn't like forced busing as a way in dealing with Racial Imbalance in Boston is racist. This is a naive assumption.

Mr. Cataldo tried to show through the voting statistics of the state legislature that there is more favor for the Imbalance Bill than opposition to it. But these statistics can be taken two ways. All Mr. Cataldo proved was that those representatives who come from rural and suburban areas [in other words those who would be least affected by forced busing], voted overwhelmingingly in favor of the Bill, while representatives from urban areas [those most affected by the Bill] voted against the Bill. Here we see "lily white" suburbian representatives voting 83.3 per cent in favor of the Bill while urban representatives voted 56.9 per cent against the Bill.

Racial Imbalance as a means of attaining Quality Education for all children is a worthwhile cause but forced busing is not the way to achieve the balance. Forced busing is nothing more than a short term answer to a long term problem. Quality Education can be provided to decrepit and understaffed schools through the upgrading of the educational standards of these schools, through the building of new and better schools in Boston, and through better teachers.

Library is open enough

To The Editor:

The editorial in Wednesday's [April 24, 1974] Collegian entitled, "Weekday Library" does not adequately explain the hours of operation of the University libraries.

Hours of service in the main library were cut back on Friday and Saturday evenings because actual use did not warrant the cost of keeping the building open. Additional service hours were added on Sundays and have proven more popular than the Friday and Saturday evening hours, if statistics of usage are a valid criterion. Secondly, the weekend hours of service in the Physical Sciences Library [in the Grad Research] were extended to provide a quiet study place for those few students who did want to crack the books at those hours. 110 hours per week of access time is available within the UMass-Amherst Library system for anyone willing to go over to the Grad Research building.

Because the Library has a limited amount of funds for student employment, and students constitute the bulk of the evening and weekend staff, we chose to schedule evening and weekend hours in a manner which attempts to benefit the greatest number of users, i.e., students. In addition to the extra three hours of access on Sunday, the main library will be open continuously during the first week of exams. While energy conservation was one factor we considered in our decision to cut back Friday and Saturday evening hours, provision of library hours which would be most beneficial to the largest number of users was the overriding concern.

Festival invites gay women

To The Editor:

We, the members of the Gay Women's Caucus, feel that the upcoming Gay Festival is an excellent opportunity for Lesbians to establish a base of support and understanding about themselves and their relation to the gay community. In recent years the Student Homophile League was not meeting the needs of gay women and the Gay Women's Caucus was formed as a result and is now located in Room 308 Student Union [545-3438]. We are joining together with the Student Homophile League in presenting the Fourth Annual Gay Festival to be held the weekend of May 3, 4, 5 on the UMass campus. The Gay Women's Caucus feels that this will provide a chance to get together and explore our needs as gay women.

Some of the workshops we feel to be of particular importance to the Lesbian community. They are: "Planning a Lesbian Conference" with some women from Boston who have been busy all spring in organizing the conference. Elaine Noble will be speaking on "Law Reform and Legislation" with Jim Collins, which should be of great interest to us all. Another workshop "Sex Roles within the Gay Community" will also be held to explore any or all aspects of gay life and sex roles that the participants wish to discuss.

The total cost is four dollars which includes all workshops, a dance with Lilith on Friday night, the Gay Bounce [UMass SHL will be challenging B.U. SHL], a coffeehouse, a movie on Sunday about Homosexuality in the films, and a picnic on Sunday and another dance Saturday in the S.U.B. It is considerably cheaper to pay the whole four dollars than for individual activities. If you have any questions call: SHL 545-0154 or Gay Women's Caucus 545-3438.

We hope to see you there and ALL ARE WELCOME.

Harrington against capital punishment

By CHARLES HALLIDAY
MDC Special

Attorney Edward F. Harrington, a candidate for Attorney General in Massachusetts, says "The people of Massachusetts and the United States as a whole are sickened by the atmosphere of corruption surrounding Watergate; they are suspicious of everyone holding public office, and they want to put an end to deals that were made in the furtherence of self-interest."

Harrington's remarks were made to students Monday in the Cape Cod Lounge. He stressed that this is the first time that he has sought public office and therefore he has incurred no political debts or alliances.

In a question and answer period, Harrington came out against the death penalty, saying "A law that is retained on the books, but allowed to fall into disuse is a dangerous law, because it invites unequal application when it is exercised and tends to be used against the weakest segments of society."

On the legalization of marijuana, he said "It has always been my belief that when a substantial number of law-abiding members of society openly disregard a criminal statute, thus rendering the law unenforceable, it is time to make the law conform with public practice."

Dear Aggie...

Dear Aggie,

I've got a serious problem. I really think I'm cute and I always tell everyone. The girls on my floor don't seem to think so and they give me a hard time. They always call me "creature", "a loser", and tell me to shoot myself. I know this isn't true, but everyone things so. What should I do?

Cuties

Dear Cuties,

You're right. You do have a serious problem - a disease called "enlarged cranium, aggravated by severe flaunting." But don't fret. Modern mental medicine has come up with a cure. It's called humility. There are three steps to this cure: Step 1: Force yourself down from outer space. Step 2: If you can fit your head through the roof, keep mouth tightly closed to prevent stuffing it with foot. Step 3: Keep head in hung position. Continue this for the rest of your life and if you are not cured within a year, consult worst enemy on rundown of other symptoms.

Dear Aggie,

I am a chocoholic. I must eat at least three candy bars a day to support my habit. I have tried to kick the habit, but I can never pass by the Student Union Candy Counter without stopping to stuff my face. Now my dungarees won't fit any longer and I'm quickly running out of Clearasil. What do I do now?

The Chocolate Junkie

Dear C.J.,

I, too, suffer from the D.T.'s when my tummy is void of chocolate. Do what I do. Don't bring any charge wi6th you on campus, go to any lengths to take the long way around to avoid that Candy Counter. If you meet an unassuming pusher on Campus. If you meet an unassuming pusher on campus, (a friend offering you a bite of her candy bar,) don't say a word - just RUN! Every once in a while indulge yourself, but only after you feel you can handle it and let me know how it make out So far I haven't been too successful.

Got a problem? Tell it to Aggie, the Collegian's exclusive advice columnist. Keep sending those letters to the Collegian Office, Student Union Bldg., UMass.

Refinery question - part 3

Onassis fortune sources unknown

EDITOR'S NOTE — The public record on Aristotle Onassis business interests is a sketchy one. This, the third in a four part series about Onassis' efforts to build an oil refinery in New Hampshire, tells of his operations elsewhere.

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Aristotle Socrates Onassis is best known to Americans for his fabulous wealth and his wife, the former Jacqueline Kennedy.

Now he is drawing attention as the man behind an effort to build a giant oil refinery in New Hampshire.

The size and sources of his fortune are shrouded in the secrecy assured most of his 100 or so companies, registered in cities around the world.

Onassis, who says he is 68 although some records show him to be six years older, was born in Syrna, Turkey, son of a Greek tobacco merchant. Fleeing Turkish nationalists, the family went to Athens in 1922, the next year, young Aristotle sailed for Argentina with $60 in his pocket.

As the story goes, he worked as a tobacco importer by day, a telephone operator by night, invested his earnings in hides and whale oil. He became an Argentine citizen and, at 25, a millionaire.

In 1932, Onassis bought six freighters at a bargain, depression prices from a Canadian company. Three years later, he bought his first oil tanker.

After World War II, he expanded his tanker fleet, and also bought a small whaling fleet.

Virtually every ship in the Onassis Group was owned by a separate company, and registered in a country that levied little or no taxes on it.

During the 1950s, Onassis' whaling fleets were accused of violating international agreements on whale conservation, and his ship-buying activities led to legal trouble in the United States.

A federal grand jury indicted him in 1953 for conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining control of 23 American war surplus ships in violation of a law requiring that they remain in U.S. hands.

Eventually, in a complex series of settlements, Onassis agreed to pay $7 million in penalties, transfer control of the surplus ship companies to his American son and daughter, and build four big tankers in American yards.

He wound up with 12 surplus tankers and two Liberty ships, registered under foreign flags of convenience.

The New Hampshire refinery plan has the support of Gov. Meldrin Thomson and others as an economic boost and a solution to the perennial problem of short, costly heating oil and gasoline supplies.

Environmentalists contend it would scar the landscape, and raise the risk of beach-fouling oil spills from tankers bringing in crude oil.

Olympic insists "there is very little likelihood" of a major oil spill of the New Hampshire coast, and cites a dozen safeguards it would provide to contain any spills that might occur.

Opponents argue that even the remote chance of a spill is too great a risk.

Onassis firms have had oil spill problems before.

On Feb. 4, 1970, the tanker Olympic Arrow ran aground off Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, carrying 16,000 tons of gum-thick "bunker C" fuel oil, which began gushing from the ruptured hull. Denying he was spilling oil, the captain tried to back off the rock, and called for assisatance only when it became necessary to abandon ship.

Four days later, the Arrow broke apart in heavy seas, and the stern section sank, spilling millions of gallons of oil.

Lloyd's Confidential Index of ships shows the Arrow, formerly Olympic Games, formerly Sea Robin, was one of the surplus ships Onassis had obtained from the United States. She was owned by Sunstone Marine Panama S.A. and operated by Olympic Maritime of Monte Carlo, which manages some 65 ships known as the Onassis Fleet.

The report of the Royal Commission of Inquiry attributed the Arrow grounding and spill to gross negligence on the part of the Greek captain. Cleaning up what was by far the worst oil spill in Canada's history cost about $4 million.

But, after testimony that filled 15 volumes, the commission operated under a setup that would prevent any effective claim being made to recover damages should the ship itself be destroyed."

Notes, quotes & anecdotes

A say in health care

Should patients have a say in their health care? The question is answered at UMass in the student Health Advisory Board (SAB). The consumers of health care at UMass are students and students are in a unique position, in terms of consumers of any service actually having an input, to oversee University Health Services (UHS) budget, participate in hiring of staff (yes, students are actually able to interview a doctor before they're hired), and evaluating UHS policies.

Which students are eligible to join the SAB? Anyone, graduate and undergraduate. All that's needed is that you've paid your health fee.

There will be a meeting today of the student HAB. Any issue that concerns you can be raised; the meetings are open and informal. The meeting will be in room 917 of the Campus Center at 4:30 p.m.

A point to note for special interest groups: any student policy making group can not be representative of a special interest unless, first, the voice of that special interest is heard. There is a need of greater input on the SAB, especially from the third world, gays, and those students in the pre-professional health majors.

Financial aid work study offered

Any student that meets the three prerequisites below and is interested in a work study job on campus starting immediately should contact the Financial Aid Office.

These jobs will run through the end of the semester and may be extended through the summer. Students interested must meet the following conditions:

Be currently receiving assistance from the Financial Aid Office.

Be aided at less than 100 per cent of need as calculated by the aid office.

And be able to work a minimum of 10 hours per week.

If students are interested in work-study (on campus) they should file an application at once.

Nuclear speech

Diana Sidebotham, president of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, will speak on the topic: "Citizen Involvement in Technical Issues: The Case of Nuclear Power Plant Safety", Thursday, May 2, at 8:00 p.m. in Engineering East Auditorium.

Ms. Sidebotham approaches the problem from the viewpoint of the concerned citizen who must cope with government and industry 'experts' and power.

The Rep is in

State Rep. James Collins will hold office hours for residents of Amherst, Pelham, and Hadley Friday. The hours are as follows. Amherst Town Hall, 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Hadley Town Hall, 3 to 5 p.m.

Rep. Collins may also be reached weekdays at the State House in Boston and weekends at 67 Butterfield Terrace, Amherst, 549-6886.

Retraction: In the course description guides index, Women's Studies was listed as a department. This is incorrect because the board of trustees has not approved of the program as of this date.

British Critic
Pope & Dryden

The famous British Critic, Professor Christopher Ricks will speak today at 4:00 p.m. in the Memorial Hall auditorium (2nd floor). His topic is Pope and Dryden: the Augustan as Heir.

Ricks makes with this talk his third visit to our campus. He has talked here on Shakespeare and Tennyson, and was a harter faculty member of the University of Massachusetts English Department sponsored Seminar at Trinity College, Oxford.

He lectures every year at Trinity for the Seminar and has "tried out" several of his books and articles on our students there — including his latest book just published Keats and Embarrassment. Professor Ricks is also famous as the general editor of the Penguin series of books on each century of English Literature; as editor of the Complete Tennyson and author of a biography of Tennyson; as author of Milton's Grand Style — and of numerous articles and reviews both here and in England.

Arts Council
Cinema Series

The final event in The Great American Underground Cinema Series, which is sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Council and coordinated by Professor Jerry Kearns of the Art Department will be held tonight in Thompson Hall, Room 106. The program will consist of six films, three by Robert Nelson and three by Jonas Mekas and there will be two shows, one at 8 p.m. and one at 10 p.m.

Tickets for this film event will be sold at the door the evening of the showing and are priced at 50 cents for UMass students, $1.00 for others.

Bunglers, Bufoons, and names

"You can't always judge a book by its cover".

This familiar saying can be translated into the intramural softball word. Example: You can't always judge a team by its name.

Monday night, this new adage proved to be true twice. Considering that I just made that up, and it applies to two games I witnessed, gave me something to write about.

Case One: The Bunglers eliminated the Lewis Clubs from the playoffs with a 5-4 victory. The yellow-shirted Bunglers were up first.

First Inning: The B's sent only four men to the plate with the ball being hit to the outfield each time. A one out double by the "Kid" (all the B's had nicknames on their shirts) could've been early trouble for pitcher Mike of Lewis, but he settled down, and retired the side in order.

"Daddy", the Bungler's pitcher gave up a run on a single, sacrifice fly, and another single. After one Lewis-1 Bunglers-0.

In the second, the Bunglers bats got hot. They sent eight men to plate, scoring three runs on singles by "Woody" and "Kenny", and doubles by 'Daddy", "Edvard" and "Monkey".

The Clubs went down in order one-two-three, and after two complete innings: Bunglers-3 Lewis-1.

In the third, the Bunglers seemed to run away with the game with two more runs. With one out, "Lee" reached on an infield hit, and was tripled home by "Woody", who scored on a single by "Earl". But Mike again settled down and had the B's hit fly balls to prevent further trouble.

Lewis came up in the bottom and again went down in order. The score at halftime (midway through the game) was the Bunglers-5 Lewis-1.

Fourth inning: This time it was the B's who went out easy, and the Clubs still had a chance.

Jimmy got things going for Lewis with a leadoff single. One out later, (strike out for Daddy) John singled. Up steps Jim, who triples to center for two runs. A sacrifice fly to the short fielder by Dave and Lewis had closed to within one, 5-4.

But that was as close as they got. In the last inning, (5th) they got men on base (first and second with no outs) but didn't get the breaks.

Final: Bunglers 5-8-0 — Clubs 4-8-0

In case two, it took the Buffoons eight innings, but they finally slid by Adams Smashers, 8-6.

The Buffoons seemingly had the game with a 6-3 lead going into the bottom of the fifth, but the Smashers failed to give up and sent the game into extra innings.

So when the game resumed Monday (postponed from Thurs.) Coach Koehler's Buffoons were up.

Joe singled to leadoff the rally. Two outs later, Dizzy came through with a tremendous blast into the next field for a two-run homer. Dan then singled, and Tom walked and things looked bad for the Southwest team from Adams. But Dave got up, and after hitting what looked to be a double, he was called out for having touched homeplate while leaving the batter's box.

The Buffoons took the field.

The Smashers came to bat.

But Wayne, the pitcher for the Sylvan based Buffoons, was too much and six pitches later, it was over. Brown Buffoons-8 — Adams-6

Milwaukee adjusts to Celtics 'Boston not worried'-Heinsohn

By MIKE O'BRIEN

MILWAUKEE [AP] — The Milwaukee Bucks have achieved parity in the National Basketball Association championship playoffs, but the Boston Celtics profess not to worry.

"I think the pressure is still on them," Boston guard Jo Jo White said. "Now they've got to come to our place."

The Bucks, helpless against the Celtics' pressure in losing the opener 98-83 Sunday, adjusted Tuesday night and squared the best of seven series with a 105-96 overtime victory.

The Celtics rallied from 16 points down to tie 90-90 at the end of regulation time, but five points by Cornell Warner in the last 34 seconds of the extra period broke it open for Milwaukee.

The Celtics will have the home court advantage for the next two games, with the third one set for 9 p.m., EDT, Friday night in Boston.

"I don't think it will be a lot easier on our home court," Celtics' Coach Tom Heinsohn said. "We'll have to play tough, aggressive basketball. But we didn't play our best game here and it still took an overtime to beat us. I have to feel pretty good about that."

"We had an open shot with three seconds left before the overtime, but it just didn't fall," he said. "We had a couple of chances before that to win. You can't ask for more than that."

Bucks' forward Bob Dandridge, after connecting on only six of 17 shots in the opener, sank 11 of 18 for 24 points before fouling out Tuesday. He also maneuvered John Havlicek into foul trouble and held the Boston star to 18 points, eight under his output on Sunday.

"After winning eight of nine games in our first two rounds of the playoffs, we had to be a little lax in our first game with Boston," Dandridge said. "I was mentally ready the second time. None of us was Sunday. We just had better concentration and a great team effort. It wasn't just me against Havlicek."

The Bucks made a major tactical change, gambling that 35-year-old Oscar Robertson could neutralize the Celtics' pressure defense by bringing the ball upcourt with little assistance.

Robertson, noticeably fatigued in the first game, played all but one minute Tuesday night and advanced the ball well, giving the Bucks more time to execute their patterns.

Softball team wins second

By DAVE VARG

UMass extended their win streak to two yesterday, by trouncing Worcester State College 13-5. Micki Locke started the contest and pitches well after a shaky start.

The game was highlighted by a solid and balanced offensive attack. UMass tore State apart by collecting 18 hits (including two home runs) 3 walks and five steals. They continuously applied the pressure, failing in only one inning to get a baserunner.

The team started things off slowly allowing three runs in two innings. But with UMass trailing 3-1 in the top of the third the offense found the rage and exploded for four runs. Micki settled down, held on to the lead, and the hitters never let up. They bombed State for five runs in the 5th and three in the seventh.

Over all, the team looked sharp yesterday. They have yet to play a smarter game, made very few mistakes, and put runners frequently in scoring position.

Leadoff batter, Terry Pudlo, was the ringleader in this area. She did everything expected of a good leadoff batter, plus some. Terry reached base every time up; with two walks, two singles and a fielder's choice. She stole bases almost at will, and she scored three times.

The rest of the lineup didn't do badly either. Seven of the nine starters got two hits and the remaining two contributed one hit. Fruzzetti and Edminister hit home runs. Micki Locke banged a triple and Barb Doucet, a double.

The UMass Softball team is now 2-1. Their next game is Thursday against Westfield State.

Sheppard hustles, comes alive in playoffs

BOSTON [UPI] — How do you figure a man who scores 16 goals during the National Hockey League's regular season, then burns opposing goaltenders for nine goals in ten Stanley Cup Playoff games?

Gregg Sheppard, who was disappointed in his regular season performance for the Boston Bruins, rammed home the game-winner Tuesday night as the Boston Bruins defeated the Chicago Black Hawks 4-2.

The win eliminated the Black Hawks from the series after six bruising games.

"It was the biggest goal of the year for me," said Sheppard. "I was just trying to get the shot on net, hoping there would be a rebound."

Besides deluging the opposing nets, Sheppard has impressed his coach, Bep Guidolin, with his all-around hustle.

"How about Sheppard for most valuable player in the playoffs?" said Guidolin. "I'm not nominating him because I have five other guys on the team who would be MVP too, including (Gilles) Gilbert."

Gilbert's lack of playoff experience had been a question mark for the Bruins, but the 24-year-old goalkeeper has turned in one fine performance after another.

John Bucyk, 38, the elder statesman of the Bruins who has been playing like a rookie, was looking forward to a rest.

LO, THE POOR INDIAN — ...or Black Hawk, if you will. Tony Esposito slumps as Gregg Sheppard and John Bucyk embrace each other. Sheppard had just scored what turned out to be the series clinching goal.

Rants and ravings

The door is locked, bolted, and barred. This agent sits hunched over the keyboard, pecking away.

Outside, a gymnast-lynch-mob gathers. They weild a balance beam in abattering-ram fashion. Cries of "Death to the infidel!" and "Kill the blasphemer!" fill the air. Visions dance through their heads of the writer being crowned with thorns, marched across campus carrying a pommel horse on his back, and finally nailed to the parallel bars in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

The ramming of the beam has reduced the door to splinters. Only one thought runs through this writer's mind: "Can Marichal really complete his comeback and lead the Sox to a pennant?"

Gymnasts' response to last week's assertion that their sport might not be as exciting as a day in the life of James Bond was characteristically low-key and reasonable: "...you should be shot."

Evidently, the idea that sports reporting should be just a bunch of golly-gee-whiz-go-team-go rhetoric designed to fill the athletes' scrapbooks is not dead.

Sorry gymnasts, but I was never issued pompoms and saddle shoes. And it wasn't because I didn't have the legs. If you want cheerleaders, stage an expansion draft from the squad that roots at basketball and football games.

Slumping varsity stop themselves lose to SC, 10-2

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — It was a circus. The Minutemen fell to Springfield College for the second time this Spring. They dropped the contest, which lasted three hours and five minutes, 10-2 in a windstorm that almost had the pitchers falling off the mound in the early going.

Seven errors plagued the Minutemen's defensive efforts as even the outfield chose to join the act of catching, or trying to, the elusive baseball.

Of the ten runs scored by the Chiefs, only two were earned.

John Olson fell behind in the bottom of the first frame and never recovered as he faced ten batters. Five of them crossed the plate in the inning which saw him surrender two walks, two singles, and a three run double to catcher Tom DelFanti who entered the game with a .250 batting average.

After struggling through the next three frames without allowing any additional runs, he was lifted in favor of Chip Baye who did not have much fielding behind him as errors of omission as well as comission were piling up the opponent's tally by the inning. Three errors and three walks combined for a three run rally by the Chiefs in the sixth before John McManus came on the scene.

UMass picked up single tallies in both the second and sixth innings as DH Rick Hansen was hit by a pitch and later scored on a double steal that caught SC off guard.

In the sixth, John Healy, playing a steady left field while waiting for his catching hand to recover from a severe bruise, reached on an error by the shortstop and scored as third baseman John Seed lined a single to right field. As far as UMass offense goes, that's all she wrote. Mike Abraham and Mike Lorion, a win and a save respectively, pitched well for SC.

"This is a good win for us," said SC Coach Archie Allen. "I'm sure we needed it as bad as Dick (Bergquist) did. I'm just glad it was our team that got it."

And so the UMass skid continued. "We beat ourselves today," said a distraught first baseman in Ron Beaurivage." We have to start putting it all together soon," he said.

UMass will travel to Kingston, R.I. for a Yankee Conference contest with URI.

JV's still undefeated, pound Holyoke 13-2

Despite a steady drizzle which delayed the game for fifteen minutes, the junior varsity baseball team pounded Holyoke Community College 13-2 yesterday afternoon.

By the time the rains came, however, the game was no longer in doubt. In fact, the game was never in doubt after the first inning, in which the Minutemen scored eight runs. This was hardly attributable to their offensive strength, however, since their only hit of the inning was a triple by Bob Moore.

Holyoke came back with a run of their own in the second on a pair of walks, a single, and a hit batter. Their only other run came in the fifth on a walk and triple, on which the batter was thrown out trying for a home run.

The UMass offense sputtered throughout the next six innings. They did score one in the fourth when Steve Wright walked, Tom Shillale reached on a fielder's choice, and Jim Cullen tripled. But they did not really explode until the eighth. In that inning, Lynn Taylor led off by striking out, but was followed by consecutive singles by Kevin Crowley, Tim Foltz, and Bill Dwyer. Bevel Cummings reached on an error, which was followed by a perfect double steal of second and home. After Art Wienslaw grounded to short, Paul Abramowicz singled. His hit was followed by three straight walks to Mike McLaughlin, Bob Sabatino and Lynn Taylor, making the score 13-2. Holyoke failed to score in the ninth, and that was the final.

Dave Tewhill was the starter and winner for the Minutemen. Now 6-0, the JV's will travel to Springfield on Saturday for a doubleheader against Springfield College.

Griffin's condition improved

BOSTON [UPI] — Boston Red Sox second baseman Doug Griffin, hit in the head with a Nolan Ryan fastball Tuesday night, was reported resting comfortably Wednesday at Hahnemann Hospital.

Griffin's condition was described by Red Sox team physician Dr. Thomas Tierney as "stable with no complications."

Griffin was removed from the intensive care unit to a private room, Tierney said. Only members of his family were permitted to visit him.

Griffin was carried unconscious from the field after he was struck in the left ear by one of Ryan's fastballs in the first inning of a game with the California Angels. He regained consciousness in the locker room before being hospitalized.

Doctors said he had suffered a severe concussion but said x-rays showed no fracture.

Griffin has suffered a major injury in each of his previous three seasons with Boston.

The lanky second baseman missed 27 days his rookie year with a back ailment; 23 days in 1972 after being hit by a pitch that broke his hand; and 49 days when be broke the same hand after being hit by another pitch last season.

Angels, May, top Sox, 4-2

BOSTON [AP] — Bill Stoneman and Rudy May combined on a six-hitter Wednesday for Stoneman's first American League triumph and the California Angels defeated the staggering Boston Red Sox 4-2.

Stoneman, a right-hander who pitched two no-hitters for the Montreal Expos of the National League but was sold to California April 5, struck out nine. He gave way to May in the ninth inning after Carlton Fisk opened the inning with his first home run of the season and Cecil Cooper singled for the sixth hit off Stoneman.

The Red Sox have lost three games in a row and eight of their last nine outings.

A loser in his only previous decision with California, Stoneman outdueled Bill Lee, 2-3, who gave up two runs in the third inning and unearned runs in the fourth and ninth.

Singles by Ellie Rodriguez, Denny Doyle and Mickey Rivers and a double play grounder staked Stoneman to a 2-0 lead in the third. The Angels added a run in the fourth on an error, a single by Tom McCraw and Rodriguez' sacrifice fly.

The Red Sox scored their first run in the fourth on a pair of walks and Dwight Evens' two-out single, Boston's first hit.

MEET ME BEHIND THE STADIUM — Carlton Fisk gives umpire Jim Odom a piece of his mind after he was called out on strikes in yesterday's game. Despite Fisk's recent return to the lineup, the Sox continued their cellar-dwelling ways and lost again, 4-2 to the Angels.

Can Love Be Transplanted ?

Heartflowers

by Tyla L. Michelove

Howard lost at everything. He was an orphan soon after birth. He woke up late every morning. When he made a bed, it had wrinkles. Boiling water, he could burn the pan. He could never hold a job for more than three months, before he would destroy the department or the whole company (if it was a small one), by a series of minor accidents. He had been a janitor at most of these places, but sometimes he would be a mail boy or on an assembly line, or something equally important. He didn't mind. He didn't mind anything.

Howard lived this way for thirty-eight years, drifting from job to job, failure to failure. He managed to keep his apartment, because his landlady felt sorry for him and excused his frequent mistakes. He lived in a tiny place on the roof of the old building. It was sparsely furnished with third- or fourth-hand furniture and worn, motheaten carpets. The stove was an old gas burner and took up most of his tiny kitchen and was the site of at least one-fourth of his accidents. The only good thing about the apartment was that it had large windows that let in a lot of light, making what would have been a dismal place into a bright and happy place to come home to.

On Howard's thirty-ninth birthday his landlady gave him a small plant. It was dying and she felt that Howard couldn't do anything worse to it. She had forgotten that it was Howard's birthday and she had just chosen that day to clean out her apartment. Howard didn't know this of course, so he was thrilled. It was his first birthday present. He vowed to himself that he would let nothing happen to this gift.

Suddenly Howard's life took on new meaning. He had always lived from day to day, but now he rushed home from work (he was a mailboy in an insurance company at the time) and water his nondescript plant. He talked to the plant about what happened at work. It was never much, but because he wanted to remember things to tell the plant, he started paying attention to what he was doing. The accidents became rarer and rarer. The plant didn't die.

Howard held his job for six months. He paid his landlady all his back rent and started to save money. He bought new clothes, so he could tell the plant about the stores, the people he saw and the other clothes he tried on. The plant started to bloom purple buds.

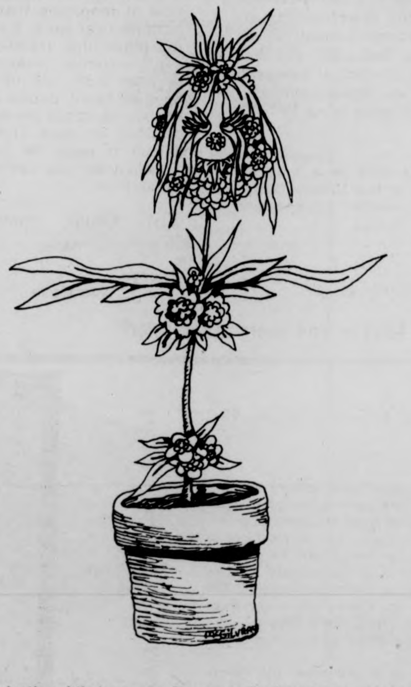
Howard started to clean the apartment, instead of letting things go. He cleared off a window sill and put the plant into the sunshine. He went to the library and took out books to read to the plant, and found that he liked reading. He enrolled in a home high school course and did homework out loud for the plant's benefit. He got his diploma. The plant sprouted a new stock and was full of deep green leaves and dark purple flowers and was now two feet high.

Howard came home from work one afternoon, in high spirits. He hummed a tune as he walked up eight flights of stairs. He opened his door, cheerfully greeting his plant.

"Surprise! I brought you a gift. A plant I found at the shop on the corner. It's tiny and sick, so it is up to us to bring it back to life. Yessiree, the two of us are going to make this little plant look as nice as you do." The plant turned its leaves to the sun, admiring itself. The plant had actually started to react to Howard's words, though Howard hadn't noticed it yet. It reacted in small ways. If Howard dropped something, it would close its flowers, but when Howard sat down to read at night or do his homework (he was working on his bachelor's now), the plant would open up and lean in Howard's direction.

Howard unwrapped the tiny plant and put it on the sill by the beautiful old one. In only a week the tiny plant was healthy and strong. The old plant had whispered to it all week, as only plants can. It made the little thing feel welcome and explained Howard's habits, not that there was much to explain. Howard had been studying about plants, so he invented a fertilizer to help the plant grow. He was fair about spending an equal amount of time with each plant, though he tended to favor the older one a little more. They had been friends for more than nine months now and that meant a lot to Howard.

Since the little plant was doing so well, Howard decided that he would go to all the plant shops in the area and gather all the sick and dying plants and bring them home with him. Before doing this, however, he sat down and discussed this with the older plant. At this time Howard was beginning to understand the plant's subtle language. Since they both were agreed that this would be an interesting project, Howard proceded to buy up all the dying plants. At night he and the older plant would laugh about the looks the shopkeepers would give him when he was at the check out counter.



Howard realized that with all these new plants he could not just call each one 'plant'. He was wise enough to realize that each plant had an individual personality and needed a unique name. He named the fifteen new ones easily, but the first two, the ones he knew the best, were hard to pin names on. He knew all their different moods and feared that one name would be too limiting. He never thought to ask them what they felt their names should be. He was only slowly becoming aware of their language capabilities.

Howard became too busy caring for all the sick, new plants to let his problem weigh him down. He washed each leaf of every plant and watered them as much as they should be watered. He spent hours concocting various formulas to help them regain health. Every night he would turn off every light except one and he would read aloud. Howard's voice had become very deep and distinguished with all his reading. He had become very good at finding just the right tone for each character and each mood. The plants loved it and would all stay very still and very quiet when he started to read. All but one of the new plants became healthy and green. The one that didn't make it was too sick by the time that Howard bought it to live any longer. It was given a proper burial in the tiny yard behind the apartment building.

Howard was just talking to the older plant and all of a sudden called it 'Philesha', like: "I was thinking about some more plants, Philesha, what do you think? I mean, there are a lot of sick ones that need us." She seemed to like the name, so Philesha she became, and the little one, his second plant, was just called 'The Little One'. Howard's problem was solved.

A few months went by and Howard still had the same job, well it was with the same company, but now he was the head of the mail department. His salary had been raised three times. He spent little of that money, though. He paid his rent; bought his food; and then he spent money on new plants and the utensils and materials for making fertilizers and plant food, but that didn't total up to very much. Slowly Howard was becoming fairly wealthy. He never really noticed, as he was only interested in his plants.

Philesha knew that Howard's birthday was the next day and she wanted to give him something special. Over the year that they had spent together, Philesha had fallen in love with Howard. She knew him very well, because he always came to her for advice and he always greeted her first when he came home from work and when he woke in the morning. He had always talked to her as far back as she could remember existing. She wanted to repay him. She wanted to make him smile.

All day long she practiced and all the other plants, there were a hundred of them now, watched in awe. They whispered and swayed, wondering how she could do that. Was she becoming human? She was almost five feet tall (Howard had to put her pot on the floor, because she's grown too tall for the window). What kind of plant was she? They all had little yellow tags of what kind of plant they were, but Philesha had no tag, because even Howard wasn't sure what she was.

Phlesha stopped practicing for a moment. She told the other plants to be quiet or else the landlady would come up and see what was going on. Philesha didn't like the landlady, probably because she was the only other woman in Howard's life and she felt jealous. The plants all said "Yes mommy" or "We'll be quiet" and silence overcame the apartment.

It seemed that Howard took a long time coming home that day. At first Philesha thought it was because she was anxious for him to get home so she could show him what she could do. But when it started to grow dark out and Howard still wasn't home, then Philesha started to worry. Perhaps he'd gone out with some people from work, after all it was his birthday and did want to celebrate, she comforted himself.

It grew later and the little plants were complaining that they were hungry. Philesha knew how to water each plant, she'd seen Howard do it hundreds of times. Perhaps she could do it herself. Slowly, and very painfully, she started to lift her roots out of the pot, on to the floor. Hours passed and still Howard had not come home. Philesha, now sweating with physical exhaustion and pain, finally eased her last root out of the pot and slid across the floor, leaving a trail of dirt behind her. She reached the sink, leaned against the counter for support, slipped a stem into the handle of the watering can and wrapped a leaf around the cold water knob. Gathering her strength, she tugged and the water began to flow into the can. She turned off the water, bruising that leaf beyond repair. She gasped immediately, in pain and the other plants watching her gasped as well. Ignoring her pain, she slid on the floor carrying the can in her largest stock. As if in slow motion, she watered each and every plant, making sure to water her own pot. It was dawn when she finally slipped her roots back into the pot. She was exhausted, but she had tasted freedom and she was thrilled.

When Philesha awoke later that day, she looked around the room for signs of Howard's return. She was disappointed. Everything was as she had left it the night before. The floor was streaked with dirt and the watering can was by her pot. There was water dripping out of the sink, which was still piled with Howard's dirty dishes (not all of his former habits had disappeared). Philesha started to cry. It was the first time Howard had ever left her truly alone and she was scared.

"Mommy," the little plant said, "don't worry. Daddy will be alright and until he comes back, we'll be with you so you won't be alone. Everything will be ok, mommy."

Philesha stroked the little plant with one of her leaves. She shook off her tears and looked around the apartment to see what needed to be done. Now that she knew how to move around, she felt she should put this talent to work. Once again she slid out of her pot. It didn't hurt as much this time. She was careful to shake off all the dirt on her roots. She slid over to the broom closet, took out the broom and started to sweep up the mess she had made. When she was done with that, she washed Howard's dishes. It was not that easy for her to hold the dishes with her leaves, so it was good that Howard still used the plastic dishes from his accident days. It took all day, but in the end she had cleaned the whole apartment. It was cleaner than it had been when Howard cleaned it. After all she was a woman (in her own way) and knew about these things. At sunset she watered all the plants again. It was a lot less painful this time, she was getting used to moving around. When she put herself back in her pot, the plants asked her to read aloud

Clearing Lake Pleasant's Air

Mr. Michael C. Kostek, II

Dear Mike:

Please put on your editor's hat and look at what feature writer Michael Kostek did to the Village of Lake Pleasant and the profession of journalism in the April 18, 1974 edition of Below the Salt.

This whole article is the type of cheap-shot journalism that makes Spiro Agnew sound prophetic. You would make an excellent film reviewer, Mike, because, like many of them, you are clever and flippant and impatient with facts. Your article is a virtuoso performance but it is all style and little substance, and it is typical of this genre of writing that you have simplistically disposed of 100 years of Lake Pleasant history in about 150 words. After delivering that cheap shot myself, I'll point out some of the innaccuracies and distortions in your article insofar as they pertain to our village.

While we admit to rusting cars (we counted five) and inadequate housing (a result of converting quaint Victorian cottages), we are aghast at your allegation that "the lake has a lingering odor." The only odor at Lake Pleasant is the pungent perfume of sweet fern, pine and balsam on hot July afternoons. As for the Lake, it is, as stated, a reservoir with a sandy bottom and stone revetted banks and, far from being malodorous, it provides sweet, cold water for the 8000 inhabitants of Montague.

Rather than an "exclusive resort area for the rich Turners Falls industrial folks," the lake was a thriving camp meeting ground at the turn of the century with special trains running from Boston and New York for the crowds that came to hear famous speakers. There were indeed "rich folks", as many as five millionaires who had "camps" at the Lake, but to say that "Once that went down, the town decided it was better to have a cheap water supply," is inaccurate. Instead, the fact preceded the event. The Lake was needed as a water supply and bathing, boating and fishing were abolished, effectively ending its hey-day as a resort. Finally, you say "there are only a few hundred people in Lake Pleasant, and they don't have much."

There are, in fact, 75 families, and we have a great deal. We have moon paths on the lake, sun rises over the Dry Hills, that balmy air we mentioned earlier, long walks on the Montague Plains, and a quiet, communal village life that is a welcome anachronism in today's society. We have good neighbors, clear consciences, integrity and pride, and withal we have feelings that have been hurt by irresponsible reporting.

I'd enjoy talking with you if you should care to drop in sometime. I think you might see Lake Pleasant in a different light and that you might learn something about people that would make you a better journalist, because I do believe that you are already a very good writer.

Sincerely,
Robert B. Begg
Chairman
Lake Pleasant Village Association
Lake Pleasant

Dear Mr. Begg,

Thanks for the kind words. Unfortunately, we disagree on a certain point, and fail to reach understanding on the others.

My original story mentioned nothing about any odor lingering around the lake. However, my in-town Consultant, a life-long Montague resident, told me to make sure I mentioned that the lake smells bad. Suffice it to say the issue is open to interpretation.

As for the Lake's being a vacation area for Turners Falls' residents, my studies showed Turners as having at one time, long ago, the potential to become the next New York City until a shifty railroad deal finished that idea. But building on that assumption, Lake Pleasant would naturally have been the resort area for all of Turners' tycoons.

I also didn't mean to slight Lake Pleasant itself in terms of beauty or cabinessence. It certainly is a most beautiful area, but the intent of the article was to try and explain how the residents of Montague would be willing to perhaps jeopardize their beautiful town due to the relative bleakness of their financial situation.

Thank you for your interest.

If you'll remember, we promised to continue Gary Gomes and Bill Hasson, so here it is:

Gomes: (rudely interrupting): I think that Archie Shepp's, Reggie Workman's and Max Roach's presence here have already helped that...

Hasson: Oh, tremendously! Tremendously. Without a doubt. And the music department has taken a very progressive attitude toward so-called "Jazz". Yes.

Also, there are people in the area like the students at Amherst College who put on a number of events; there's Joey Baron up at Orchard Hill, who's put on some progressive concerts. So, like, when you get that kind of support on campus, you know, it helps tremendously — you have a consistent crowd supporting the music, whereas about four or five years ago you were kind of isolated and have maybe one or two concerts a year. It created quite a big publicity problem — like people being able to have reference of when the last one was — whereas this year I can name two or three things in the vein of Black Music that's happened on this campus, per month, so I think that's a pretty good record.

Gomes: Have you got any finalizing comments?

Hasson: Well, I hope people will be honest with themselves about what the music is doing. — To a very large degree it's listening and understanding, and living the music requires just as much discipline as the musicians who create the music. And if you're not careful, when you're in there, your mind can get ripped off. Like of you're isolated away from yourself, you can find yourself humming some very counter-revolutionary music, if you don't have any support for the music on the airwaves.

Gomes: And you need support in the media, and you need support on the radio ...

Hasson: Yeah, you've got to have it all the way around. You've got to keep up your reading of the Collegian, and the rest of the papers around here — the Advocate, or whatever it is; and keep up on articles about the music, whether it's played here or not — then it's got to be played on the radio, more than just simply at night. It's got to be prime time in the afternoon. And people have to recognize it as an African Art Form.

I guess a lot of prejudices and racism makes them keep the music isolated, the way they isolate themselves away from black people or Third World People.

GG: And it's a universal life force music as well.

Hasson: It is a universal life force, because I've actually observed people at these concerts. Not only here, but even in clubs and places like that, and they know what the music is doing.

The question is: once you leave that club, or that concert, can you relate it to other people? And a lot of people are so afraid that they're going to be shot down, that they just keep the experience within themself, which I think is not good at all. Because the music needs as much help as it can get — from all quarters.

G.G.: And the nature of our society is that if you do try to push new music ahead, you're shot down ...

Hasson: Precisely ... But as long as I'm in the area I hope that the music is able to be brought through here. I just hope that it isn't brought here in the way it has been brought here, that is that you've got to run around and beg people for money, and you've got to explain the music — not in the terms of people will understand the music, and then be able to buy it — I mean, every year, you have to xplain it in antagonistic terms, and they're wondering why you want to bring it back.

Gomes: Because it's essential.

Hasson: It's essential, it's definitely essential.

Gomes: And it's necessary for growth.

Hasson: Exactly.

Great Gatsby

by Stuart Sojcher

Dream On Jack Clayton

The Great Gatsby — directed by Jack Clayton, starring Robert Redford, Mia Farrow and Bruce Dern

For the past few months there has been constant talk about the new 'Gatsby look.' This talk can be more commonly referred to as high — scale promotion. Fashion has a new 'Gatsby look,' hairstyles have the 'Gatsby look' and even a certain whiskey identifies itself with the "Gatsby era." The entire purpose of this advertising campaign is to get people to see the film adaptation of F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby. Needless to say it has worked up to a point, eighteen million dollars in advance tickets sales was spent by a public anxiously awaiting to see if the film was as great as it was built up to be. On this alone the film has already broken even.

Besides its high-scale 'hype', Gatsby had a spice of controversy added to it by the question of who would play Gatsby and Daisy. Originally Ali McGraw was slated to play Daisy. But when she began a fling with Steve McQueen, she wanted him to play opposite her. Robert Evans, husband of Ali then and also a big Paramount executive, wasn't too happy about his wife's escapade. Eventually Ali and Steve were married, Mia Farrow won the role by a screen-test over a number of other stars and Robert Redford finally got the role he so badly wanted.

With its promotion and controversy expectations rose. Gatsby would be the film of the year. And this is what probably kills any film or event — expectations are so high that it is almost impossible for anything to satisfy us. In the end we are left disappointed.

To be honest I also was under the spell. My hopes were high, and perhaps inevitably I was let down. And yet the film didn't bore me through its two and a half hours. Even the literate dialogue which has come under so much criticism was fine. I almost liked the movie. The photography is lush and beautiful, the sets and costumes are magnificent, the music is nice, but Mia Farrow is terrible, Redford doesn't come across well and one is left unconvinced as to what the film is trying to do. If not for some fine performances by people in supporting roles the film would have been an abysmal flop.

The Great Gatsby, as everyone knows, is the story of Gatsby's attempt at recreating the past love between himself and Daisy, the girl of his dreams. He goes off to war, and she marries the wealthy and arrogant Tom Buchanan. Gatsby returns to amass a fortune, in what is left unclear, and ever-hopes to recapture his Daisy. He waits for eight years, dreaming, and looking out over the bay where, from his home, he can see Daisy's. Evenings at his home are filled with people and gay parties but Gatsby never appears.

Finally opportunity arises in the presence of Nick Carraway, a cousin of Daisy's, who has rented a cottage next to Gatsby's for the summer. He serves as their go-between. The past is recreated, but cannot last, for time cannot be made up.

Fitzgerald conveyed the decadence of the times much more so than the film does. He presents a picture of unfeeling, senseless people who leave others to "clean up the mess they had made." Jack Clayton, the director, tends not to show that side, nor does he even make a point of showing a real decadence. He presents many spectacular parties, but everyone seems to be having such a good time, why be angry at them?

Fitzgerald created a tragic mystique in his story and especially in Gatsby. This falls short in the film. Redford certainly looks like Gatsby but he lacks the depth and feeling that Gatsby is supposed to have. When he speaks his lines he isn't very convincing and when he uses the expression "old sport" there is no real feeling.

As for the others, Mia Farrow is lousy. The love scenes between her and Redford don't come off, again because of a lack of feeling. She seems to be merely reciting her lines. Her character is void of any believability or depth. All the female characters are terrible. Lois Chiles as Jordon Baker, the golf champion, has an interesting voice but just can't act. And Karen Black as Tom's mistress is disgusting. They're much to superficially treated.

Bruce Dern though is excellent as Tom Buchanan. He brings an uncaring arrogance that the part needs. Scott Wilson as the dirty garageman, husband of Black, is very good in his pathetic portrayal of a man who "may be stupid, but I know what's right and wrong." Sam Waterston, as Nick Carraway, is the best thing about the movie. As in the book he provides narration. He is tremendously honest and human in his role and it is the scenes between him and Redford that are the best in the film. He becomes Gatsby's confidant, his only true friend and this relationship is the only one in the film that has any depth, any life. The relationship grows from one of uneasiness to one of mutual understanding and admiration. When Nick tells Gatsby that "you're worth the whole damn lot of them" you believe him and when Gatsby says thanks to Nick for his help you know that he meant it.

As mentioned the photography is quite beautiful. There is a great use of the moving camera for romantic effect, giving a grace and style which is so important to the period. Soft-focus is used a lot to give Mia Farrow a more fragile appearance and in the love scenes to convey a dream-like effect and feeling of warmth and softness. The first shot of Gatsby standing on a hill near his home in low angle, dressed in black with the white columns of his home behind and a majestic dark blue sky overhead while looking across the bay toward Daisy's home is striking. There is also a well-done scene of Gatsby giving Nick and Daisy a tour of his mansion while superimposed on their images are shots of the various rooms and corridors. With the costumes and sets being so lavish, six and a half million dollars was spent on the film, everything is nice to look at.

The film's blaring weakness's along with its moments of beauty are the responsibility of the director who decides what will be done. The major problem of the film besides the acting is that the too many scenes are drawn out. There is no pace or rhythmn to the film. Every scene is given equal time and that proves to be a mistake. There are too many wasted shots that have no point to them. Why bother seeing a cigarette being crushed? Again, the party sequences are too drawn out. And there is symbolism in the film that is almost too heavy handed to believe. As Nick narrates how things seem to be heading in a bad way the camera focuses upon a dead seagull. Every time there is a scene concerning the garageman and his wife, the camera always first focuses upon a sign advertising a doctor's eyeglasses (remember the book?). Is this meant to be an establishing shot or is it really the eyes of fate looking down on the proceedings?

The Great Gatsby is a film with much potential but it is wasted. Clayton seems to have spent too much time on the sets, costumes and photography that the actors don't know what to do at times. Despite the beautiful surroundings it is the actors performances that are vital to the success of a film like this. A better repoire between actors and director would have helped. The film lacks feeling. Too much is left unexplained and Gatsby's past is left vague.

Is it a tribute to the film or to Fitzgerald's story that I felt sad after leaving? Maybe I'm just a silly sentimentalist like the people around me who moaned a bit when Gatsby is shot. Or perhaps our emotions rise because we all identify with a dream that we try to make come true never realizing that it never will. But we dream on anyway.

American Power: Regrouping, not Retreating

The Retreat of American Power
by Henry Branton
$2.95 368 pp.

Henry Brandon has, for many years, worked as the chief American correspondent for the "Sunday Times" of London. As such he has witnessed first-hand many of the significant advances and blunders of American foreign policy over the last twenty years. In The Retreat of American Power, Brandon provides a panoramic view of the foreign policy of Nixon and Kissinger from 1968 to 1972. The book is, to a large extent, an examination of how the personalities of these two men have affected America's present position in the world.

In some instances, Brandon retreads old ground and interjects his personal observations on the situation. The Vietnam war is such a case. However, in the case of the SALT talks, Brandon manages to give a fresh perspective.

The talks, which were essentially seen as a way to end the insanity of the arms race, were a failure. When the agreements of SALT 1 were signed, the general public was given the impression that great progress had been made in the direction of arms detente. However, as Brandon points out, the only decision reached was to limit the quantity of arms involved. Improvement of the quality was not limited. Consequently, the projected saving of money by the government and the abatement of "military madness" has not become a reality.

Nixon, who is well known for his desire to go down in history as the peace maker, saw the SALT talks as a means to that end. In fact, he probably will be remembered as the President who laid the foundation for nuclear disarmament. The good that the talks did achieve, establishing a starting place for serious discussion, is offset by the concessions the government made to the military. In a way of paying off the military for their trepidation over the SALT talks, the government promised to build the new Trident submarines and B-1 bombers. In light of such considerations, the SALT talks were not exactly a giant step towards the cause of peace.

Another area which Brandon takes to task is the relationship between the U.S. and China. While Brandon feels that Kissinger managed some rather skillful manipulation of the Chinese-Russian animosity, recent developments in the U.N. have shown that the Chinese will only be manipulated so far. The Chinese have recently reaffirmed their commitment to support developing countries. No doubt this issue, like it has before, will cause conflict in U.S.-China relations.

The Retreat of American Power is probably a misnomer. What Brandon's book shows is that American military power has lost much of its effectiveness as a world policeman. The war in Vietnam was disastrous proof to the U.S. that even with its great military power it was incapable of defeating a guerilla army; it couldn't defeat them, that is, short of bombing then "back into the Stone Age." As well, the intense world wide criticism that descended on the U.S. made it evident that military power was not the best tool to use if an atmosphere of detente was to be preserved. Consequently, American power is becoming grounded more on economics and subtle diplomatic pressure.

Brandon seems to underestimate this new American power. It derives from his lack of emphasis on the connection, informal as it may be, between U.S. industry and government. It has, in recent years, become painfully obvious how far reaching this connection is. It is largely by means of these economic entrenchments that the U.S. has retained its international influence.

Personalities are also heavily played upon in this book. While they are important, especially in the case of a diplomat like Kissinger, it sometimes obscures the even larger forces that are at work. Brandon's book though, does provide a comprehensive look at the most recent changes in American foreign policy. For that reason, it is worth trudging through his dry prose to gain some perspective on this tumultuous period in America's diplomatic history.

Movers and Shakers
by June Sochen
Quadrangle, New York Times Book Co.

This book is a fascinating study of the major women involved with equality for women in this century. Unlike many historical works, this one is smooth from the first page to the last. The author treats all of the feminists as valid, regardless of the methods used in the struggle.

The author's sentiments are best described in a poem written by Charlotte Perkins Gilman in 1912 called "The Socialist and the Suffragist." In the last stanza she says:

> The world awoke, and tartly spoke:
> "Your work is all the same:
> Work together or work apart
> Work, each of you, with all your hearts
> Just get into the game!"

She gives a striking overview of the past 70 years and puts the women and events in a broad historical perspective. She brings to life the struggle that has been going on in the minds and hearts of many. She also gives new perspective on some figures already considered of importance in the United States, but not as feminists. For example, Eleanor Roosevelt not only was a President's wife, but she achieved an identity of her own as a mother of five, grandmother, teacher, radio broadcaster, syndicated columnist and part owner of a furniture manufacturing company. What many don't realize author Sochen says, is what she did for the emancipation of women.

This book's most valuable usage would probably be as an introduction to the women's movement.

The account of the movement begins in the early part of the century, when women had an impressive role. There were a larger percentage of women doctors in the 1910s than in the '60s, and the number of graduate degrees given to women decreased in that period. In other areas it is true that improvements have been made.

The book describes such early feminists as Henrietta Rodman and Emma Goldman. The latter was a famous radical known for her work for the anarchist political movement. Many other feminists of this period were closely allied with the Socialists. Ms. Rodman fought her battles in a variety of ways. She took on the New York City Board of Education to reach a compromise on the then common practice of firing pregnant teachers. Another rather unique concept of hers that never materialized due to numerous difficulties was a fully mechanized apartment building for working women. It would have offered professionally prepared meals and teachers trained in the Montessori method of education to care for the children.

The author continues. "When the 20th century began, social critics and prophets alike predicted that it was going to be a women's century. All the signs were there. More women were working, going to school and exhibiting signs of independence. Women lawyers and doctors, a never-before-observed phenomenon in America, were much in evidence. Women were destined to participate in every major area of life. The prophecy chilled the bones of the traditionalists and thrilled the idealists. But the fearful should not have worried; the optimistic predictions of the idealists never materialized. Women never achieved their due place in the 20th century sun. What happened?"

The author's answer is that efforts are being made, but not enough. The author comes to the conclusion that feminist goals are humanist goals. That "the feminist Utopia would also be a humanistic Utopia, one in which neither color, creed, nor sex would determine a person's status ... That is not simply the feminist's hope — it is humanity's only hope."

Writing "Book Corner" is like trying to sneak a message through the censors. You see Mike Kostek and David Sokol, my tired eyed friends who put together "Below the Salt" (and who made up this silly name for this magazine — so blame them) every Wednesday night, like to play games with the book page.

If things get boring down at Productions, or the night is dragging on, Sokol will get this sick glint in his eye and think of nice little funnies to put down. Sokol, is the kind of nice, happy go lucky moronic type that mothers always like their daughters to bring home, but daughters don't want to. Dismaying Junk or Singeing Glucose?

1969 Velvet Underground Live
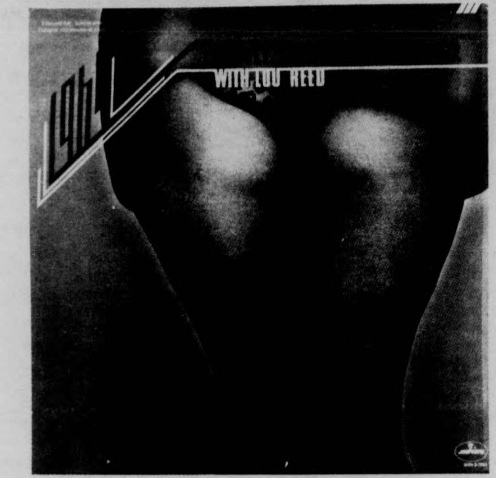
Velvet Underground
Mercury SRM-2-7504 time
101:37

There is something here that is so correct that you'll find yourself either loving or hating this music. Or alternating. It is somehow absolutely right in having Lou Reed's squacky voice intoning over a simple drumbeat, bassline and simple powershot guitar, all combining to make a decadent roar that singes to the quick, if you let it. Art, for God's sake. For our sake.

These are rough tapes, hewn from large hunks recorded in 1969 in desolate clubs in Texas and San Francisco. The quality ranges between fair and not-so-fair. Often there is a humming hiss, and at no time are any of the instruments well-recorded. Which is fine. While the poor mono recording of the Live At Max's Kansas City album distracted, this crude sound gives a proper setting for the roar of the band.

Lou Reed and the Velvet Underground are out of New York City. Not many bands make it out of that hell-heaven hole, and certainly none have ever carried as much of the city with them. It takes no computations to see yourself in one of Reed's songs of decay, despair, fury and smack. Our Increasing Material Age has left us diminished in many ways, and added to all the prior personal human problems (sex, soap, spirit), we're more mixed-up than ever before. Lots of people try, but few come up with the proper combination of words, music and proper rubbish-can persona that Reed and the Velvets provide. A full spread of downed visions, faded hopes and lonely desperation.



This peculiar intensity is best examined in a song like "New Age", which has such a terrific repeated catch line: "It's the beginning — Of a new age", in relation to our new, bizarre developing morality. A band that sings and plays technically as well as the Beatles or Genesis would rob it of the necessary crazy feel; hearing the Underground stuff their crude musical selves into this form helps in two ways: first, it gives us an appreciation for the musicians as opposed to just the music. Anyone could play this nicely, but only a true feeling of what the song is about would work here. It's hard to fake demoralized decadence. Secondly, they are one of the first and one of the few bands to ever make music that was more important than it was entertaining. Their music is so intense as to be something you will indeed either love or hate. My most extreme moments, either high or low, in or out, usually find me putting on early rampaging Mothers, Who or the uncompromising Velvets. It's not party music, folks. When the band will grab onto one slipping, elusive feeling of, say, power stemming from having nothing to live up to, and freeze it in a riff, with one or two companion lines for the complete picture, it's almost a holy experience. One of the Velvets' trademarks when they played live was the way they'd grab on to one of those riff-feelings, and just run on and on with it after the main body of the song was over. No great musicianship involved, as they made only slight modifications in the repeated pattern, but it wasn't about being musicians, it was about being human, and strumming the damn guitar as fast and hard as you could to take care of your feelings was the way things were done. Anything else would obscure the issue. If you felt like that, you played like that, with no fancy musical tricks intervening. Humans in the desperate, forlorn, intense conditions such as these don't want virtuosity, they want it. The Feeling. For as long as possible.

So while four times out of five, "Ocean" may sound like a garage band is playing it, the fifth will catch you in the right mood and give you the exact fill-in, in ways you never experienced before, at least over your stereo. Crude? Of course, but what's cruder than naked emotions? Or New York City?

The Velvet Underground grow with the years, something a specious group like the New York Dolls will never do. While The Dolls may try the same 'feel' as the Underground, and work in the same musical forms as the Underground, they do have a severe handicap in not being able to play anything very well, and certainly they don't write as fine music as Reed does. Which is the secret of the Velvets. Without Reed's soaring, haunting, gracefully awkward lyrics, they would be another garage band. But given the excellence of his tunes, we can bear the band's musical shortcomings as the melodies carry them along, and just wait for either the Cumulative Effect of all this primative energy to take effect and-or the band to flash on one chord, or Reed to choke out one line that will transform the proceedings to brilliance.

For all the above reasons, the Velvet Underground remain a rare, acquired pleasure. But Jesus, they slipped and slid in the gutter in a way that makes things like Blue Oyster Cult, Black Sabbath and Grand Funk look silly, and sets the Velvet Underground up as one of the most important and unique bands to ever grace our lives.

WAR LIVE — WAR (United Artists UA-LA193-J)
Total playing time:78:22

Although recorded back in 1972, War's latest declaration is a welcome addition to their catalogue, however (and this is already the number one critical complaint of this still young record season), the price tag of $9.98 list is somewhat prohibitive. On November 25, 1972, somewhere in Chicago's High Chaparral, War had come to play and play they did. It's unfortunate that "The World is a Ghetto" wasn't included in the set and tour de force "Gypsy Man" hadn't yet been recorded, so most of what's on here is the best of early War, recorded live.

A side long "Slippin' into Darkness" and a dynamite "All Day Music" are the best sounding things on the record, making an under-recorded "Cisco Kid" sound limp in comparison. There's some impressive blowing on the 20 minute "Get Down" and on "Son oh Son" and the overall vocal performances of Papa Dee, Howard, Charles, Harold, B.B., Lonnie, and Lee are most credible throughout.

The crowd loved it and you should too but try to find it on sale.

Live Music:
Jaki Byard, Reggie Workman, John Betsch
Dickenson Lounge

THE TRIO played a concert in Orchard Hill's Dickinson lounge last Friday night. It was the first time they had played together and probably their last as well, but for those two hours they played together, they were THE TRIO, and they were certainly something to hear.

Pianist-saxophonist-educator Jaki Byard, up from Boston, was the guest and the reason for the concert. He was joined by Reggie Workman of the UMass faculty on bass and the amazingly talented Student Jazz Workshop drummer John Betsch. Relying on the musical vibrations sent out by each member of the group in place of prior rehearsal, the trio put on the most rollicking, enjoyable performance I've heard in some time, with the trio and the audience both sharing in the joy and humor of the music.

Jaki called the tunes: "Perdido," Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz," "Memories of You," plus blues, standards and even a nicely handled version of "Close to You." John Betsch manipulated the beat masterfully, especially on a perfect time switch from a 4-4 blues into the 6-8 beat of Miles Davis' "All Blues." John's soloes were excellent, even awesome in parts, as were those of Reggie who had the crowd gaping at his facility on one extended solo.

Professor Byard's piano style is amazingly refreshing to hear. He can suggest, imitate, and extend upon the styles of past greats such as James P. Johnson, Albert Ammons, Count Basie or Bud Powell , yet still retain his own very singular pianistic identity much like his old companion, Rahsaan Roland Kirk does in the realm of horn players. Jaki's virtuousity is featured beautifully on his two solo piano albums, Solo Piano and There'll Be Some Changes Made, both on Prestige Records.

The tightly packed crowds at Dickinson lounge Friday realized that hearing a trio suddenly discover itself is a great discovery.

— John Cahill

*John forgot Debussy and Bartok and "space music". Jaki did indeed put on a remarkable set, and his "space music" set is worth at least a mention for its humorous impact. In the middle, Jaki would begin playing "Close to You" and other adaptations, as well as pulling off a piano duet with himself. EGAD!

GRACIAS A LA VIDA (HERE'S TO LIFE) — JOAN BAEZ CANTA EN ESPANIOL (JOAN BAEZ SINGS IN SPANISH) (A&M SP 3614) time 43:34

Just on general principles, without a glistalnut examination of Joan's sincerity, we can listen to this album and transcend all but the most extreme artistic objections (Gomes: 'Music always has to move on'; Estelle: 'Can't understand it. It's in Spanish'). Yes, we can drift away on Joan's simply beautiful voice, as it shimmers over one of the languages of love, for we can't understand a thing she's saying (English lyrics are unfortunately included — don't look at them, they're banal city).

Outside of the real thing (Spanish records themselves), this is about the best Spanish beauty around. Perhaps the medium Joan's been searching for for years. B

Cat's Skills Found Missing

by Lori Ann Yeslow

In Concert:
Cat Stevens
26 April 1974

Lots of clowns, lots of horny-big eyed men, I shivered in my shoes, this was no joke, there might've been a scene, or even worse an arrival and no provisions. It wasn't easy, I was scared as shit, hoping no one would grab my camera or even worse, my film given to me earlier in the week by The Collegian. It was rough and tough, but somehow my companion, Jonathan and I got through the crowds and everything was fine. We neared the music hall, oh what scared crackers were we. Turning the corner I spotted "the weiss," grabbing a ticket from a helpless grandmother of 13. I pissed in my pants, ducked into the 2 o'clock club, and waited there until 11:30 when "the weiss" was sure to be gone. All a nice way of telling you I spent Friday night, much to my dismay in 'the club' and the following review was really a dram, a drem, a figment.

The scalpers themselves were cleared out of the music hall vicinity by six, so by seven the desperate were stationed at every neon light seeking the scarce pieces of paper to admit them to Cat Stevens. It's been two albums and eighteen months since Stevens last played in Boston, a lot of material to cover and a lot of expectations to meet.

The show itself seemed too scheduled, almost 'let's do our two hours and get the hell out', and yet it wasn't in Stevens' attitude and certainly not in Jean Roussell, his fanatically devoted keyman. So that leaves six others on stage as guilty. Two background singers were dragged on tour this time and they only repeatedly buried his voice with loose, off-harmony backgrounds. If they, along with Alun Davies, would've left him alone, it might've been a lot more than an average concert. He did "Later", Lady D'Arbunville", "Peace Train" and "Bad Penny" and "Father and Son", with Alun Davies as background. "18th Avenue" minus Del Newman and his orchestra was excellent, and proved to be the height of the concert. "Bitterblue" lacked the intensity and "Moonshadow" sounded as moonshadow is always done, the recorded version. He got two encores, the third weak but substantial, still he didn't come back. The lights went on, the magic left and the roadies start taking the stage apart, and the people are poured into the whore-pizza filled "zone".

Oh odd, queer, peculiar things happen concerning new albums and tours. It just so happens that coinciding with this whole live singing business is a new album: Buddah and The Chocolate Box. It seems with Buddah, Stevens had turned back toward short tunes, nine in the album. Catch Bull was full of short songs with warnings of Foreigner, Foreigner was the let down Catch Bull warned of. Nothing really new, just conventional Stevens, which is a curse in itself, being labelable as conventional. With Buddah he's placed himself on a level between Catch amd Foreigher, overflowing onto both. "Music" starts side one, powerful but hypocritical (really now, writing a song of such "goodness" and then getting $8 a person, we can't be that stupid). "Ready", and "Sun-c79" are excellent. "King of Trees" goes from referring to people to trees, and is relaxing to say the most. The whole album is relaxing, nothing straying from the norm. It's almost as if he has done his experimentation with Foreigner and since no one liked it (or it didn't sell well, the same thing) he is going to go back to the kind of things he is safe with; an album where almost everything could make it as singles. "Home In the Sky", seems like another tribute along the same lines as "Freezing Steel"; his existence on other planets. Which is the usual for him, I mean someone who refers to his dangleberry as his Mona Bone Jakon has gotta be deviant. Buddah and the Chocolate Box, a safe disappointment.

Addendum to Cat

Here's another album to bust your balls on.

Fine Fold Festival at Hampshire

Warm sunshine, people lounging on the grass, lemonade hawkers, and good old finger pickin' guitar players standout as memorable aspects of the Five College Folk Festival, held last week at Hampshire College.

The Second annual folk festival took place both indoors and outdoors at Hampshire from last Friday night through Sunday afternoon. Many events (including the Sunday concert) originally scheduled to take place indoors were moved outside to accommodate the fine weather.

Friday night there was a "contra dance" and a "drinking song fest". The "contra dance" seemed enthusiastic but just a bit over crowded. The "drinking song fest" seemed like a nice place to bring a friend and enjoy the evening.

Perhaps the best way to enjoy the festival was by walking around the campus and stopping by the various places where performances were taking place. Some of the best performances however were the spontaneous "jam sessions", in which the participants were people just coming together "to play some music".

The festival was paid for already by grants from various organizations in the five College area. The profits from this year's festival will be used for next years, etc. It is hard to estimate how many people were at the festival, because for every person who paid there must have been at least one casual passer-by in search of a fine "freebee".

The music was diverse and in many cases excellent. There were folksingers from Ireland, the deep south, and Philadelphia. There were guitar pickers, banjo pluckers, fiddle players. The tunes were slow, fast, good for a "jig", or fine for a nap. Most attending seemed happy, and pleased to be spending the last weekend in April at the Five College Fold Festival.

Some of the performers were Maggi Peirce, Saul Broudy, Golden Age Retrievers, Dan Stover and the White Oak Mtn. Boys, and Malvina Reynolds. If you missed it this year, try not to next year. The festival might have been one of the best treats of this fine spring season.

NOW WE ARE SIX — STEELEYE SPAN (Chrysalis CHR 1053) Total playing time: 37:43

Actually I knew before listening to this record that I was going to love it, so I'll have to waive my usually un-prejudiced vantage point for this one. In all, another splendid collection from the traditional British folk-interpreters. Steeleye have added a drummer since last year's majestic Parcel of Rogues (hence one of the reasons for the title. This is their sixth album.), and consequently this is their rockiest record.

Maddy Prior's voice is just as beautiful as ever and the Steeleye arrangements of this time-honoured material are up to their usual high standards. Only during the too-cute "Twinkle Twinkle Little Star" (that's right, you heard right) and on Phil Spector's "To Know Him is to Love Him" does Steeleye fail to exude their English exuberance. Steeleye's concert encore, "Rag Doll" would have done better than "To Know Him", but I guess they're only human.

"Two Magicians", "Seven Hundred Elves", the lovely "Now We Are Six", a slightly obscene "Drink Down the Moon" (something of a re-make of the quivering "Cuckoo's Nest") and the instrumental "Mooncoin Jig" are among the best. They tell me Ian Anderson had something to do with this record, but fortunately it's not blatant.

A record not to be glossed over unless the glossee has something like Grand Funk or Aerosmith fever. But how dare I mention those names in a Steeleye Span review. Definitely a top shelf item. A

FOR SALE — CASEY KELLY
Elektra-EKS-75072 (time: 32:45)

Backed up by a twanging gang of "Nashville Cats", Casey Kelly picks out some pretty decent country tunes. Personally I've never had much of a fancy for the Johnny Cash country and western crew, but this guy is different. He's got the traditional country back-up with slide guitars, fiddle, pedal steel and a lot of note bending, but he's a lot mellower. Mr. Kelly has found a tasteful blend between Neil Young and a square dance ... Good Time Musak!!!

GROUPS WITH PREDOMINANT ORGANS
by G. Gomes

A very wise man once told me that keyboard players are weird cats if they're trying to play so-called 'Jazz' — I agreed, being a weird keyboard player. The reason, for that it seems is the matter of the instrument, and its characteristics, which are — a scale of fixed pitches, set up to perfect imitation of piano ratios — without the piano's rich acoustic harmonic densities. But, they are electronic. And that brings them under the jurisdiction of fantastic sound potential a la the guitar or saxophone. But ya gotta get weird instruments, like Mike Ratledge's or Sun Ra's type of style; or get bad equipment, like the mellotron that Genesis' Tony Banks used on "Watcher of the Skies" or Neil Innes on the Bonzo Dog Band's "Slush" (HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HAHA) REPEAT. This is not a recording. Dada, moMMA).

But all of this is true and more as well, so why not tell you the whole story about Keith Emerson's purchase of 13 (unlucky number that, he'd better watch it) keyboards, say to you that anything new you thought you heard done in the organ-ized (ouch) sounds have been done by Sun Ra TWELVE YEARS AGO with "ATLANTIS", — just thought you'd like to know, you know, soften the touch, and it's a sleazy way to get to review three organ-dominated groups, and to prove that there's nothing new under the SUN (ra) ANYROAD...

NEXUS ARGENT. (Epic KE 32573)

The first side of this has a very nice instrumental called "The Coming of Kohoutek". Unfortunately, the rest of the album shares all the deficiencies of the aforementioned 'super-comet'. Big fadeout.

The rest is rock-tromp you in the gr(ound f)ace British hard rock and 'Hi look at me I'm Rod Argent and I can really do a lot. Really.' Ugh! On the other hand, way back, their first album was very good. Nice pop. Unfortunately, with your claims, I'm afraid you're giving yourself a bit much credit. Pass — No Credit.

THE GOLDEN SKARAB, RAY MANZAREK (Mercury SRM 1-703)

Some rather pleasant jamming with Tony Williams here (the synthesizer on "The Moorish Idol" seems to interest him the most) and Manzarek does some a OK synthesizer work, and he was never really that weak on organ. Unfortunately for the rest of us, Morrison's dead. Manzarek must think of himself as his successor. Manzarek's voice has all the right flatness of tone, but none of Morrison's edge. And Jesus Retardo — uh, uh, Jim, or Ray, or whatever, Don't try to raise the dead — causes a stink (decaying flesh, you know? or maybe zombies... rotten business, agreed?). And Ray, the lyrics to "Choose Up and Choose Off" were hilarious! Oh, they weren't supposed to be funny. Cheers. -or +? -egative.

Where is Mercury finding the guns it's used on Beefheart and Manzarek? Two promising flops in a row... it hurts.

STRAIGHT AHEAD, BRIAN AUGER'S OBLIVION EXPRESS (RCA (oink) APL 1-0454)

If it weren't for Auger's keyboard dexterity, this would be just another in series of albums made to let musicians jam and improvise in a setting that is very easy to sell. This is such an album. But, looking for popularity, etc., Auger has lost any uniqueness he might have claimed. The album on the whole is pleasant, but when Auger sings, forgit it kid. "You'll Stay in My Heart" is the toughest thing to digest and—or inhale on the album.

After all these years of hustling, Brian Auger's finally getting popular, but only through a very weak jazz-rock-muzak group, even though the percussion section is excellent.

THAT'S IT — THAT'S THE LAST NEGATIVE REVIEW I'M GOING TO WRITE. I HAVE BEEN TEMPTED AND I AM REDEEMED. I LEAVE NOW, master.

Thus, we have taken care of the peripheral organs. Would anyone like to come inside?

Chinese Students Assn.

by Ed Cohen

The Flower Of Chinese-American Culture

What's the best way to learn something about Chinese culture? Or maybe a little bit about the martial arts? If you can't find time to take courses in these subjects, and want to know directly, the best answers may be supplied by the Chinese Students Association. Through activities such as China night, this organization hopes to expose students to these new avenues of learning experience.

The organization itself is composed mainly of Chinese students from Taiwan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Malaysia, and Indonesia. It was founded in 1964, and since that time, according to John Jessup, foreign students advisor, "has been one of the most coherent and best organized of the foreign students associations, and serves the needs of a student group that's the largest single nationality group on campus."

"The organization", said Al Ling, ex vice-pres., "has a president and two vice presidents. The president is responsible for the whole organization, and the vice presidents assist the presidents. On this campus, the system is sometimes different from other campuses. Other campuses which have Chinese students associations may have a committee system, consisting of a chairman and several committee members."

Two important aspects of the club have been its interaction in the University community and its attempt to bind the Chinese student community together. According to Jessup, "The activities of the club seem to be working more and more in the direction of promoting projects and events which bring Chinese students together with Americans. They are making themselves and their culture more available. The organization shares what it has to offer culturally and linguistically; it's enriching the community as a whole."

"What we are basically trying to do", said Alex Yim, vice president for 1974, "is encourage the exchange of culture; make people aware of what Chinese really are and what they do. When I first came here I was kind of surprised, because when they asked me where I came from I said Hong Kong and they asked me if it was in Japan. I was kind of discouraged at first because Hong Kong to Japan is comparatively like Boston in the States to Asia; it's a big place. There is definitely a lack of awareness."

The events which the Chinese Students Association sponsor and those which it helps to sponsor are important aspects in creating awareness. Some events, like China night and the International Fair do help to promote understanding.

"Our organization", said Philip Luk, present vice-president, "annually has a Chinese night. Usually we will have a Chinese dinner in the evening, and will have performers of Chinese music, dances, Chinese martial arts, Chinese folk songs, and sometimes exhibitions of Chinese arts and crafts." From year to year the China night programs will differ, in the events occurring.

The International Fair and smorgasbord, of which the Chinese Students Association takes part, is also very helpful in the cultural enrichment of the UMass community. Phil adds: "The international smorgasbord is usually organized by the International Students Association. The smorgasbord features foods from almost all the nationalities that are on campus. At the fair we have an exhibition of arts and crafts and sell food we prepare. It's quite a successful fair and lots of people come. People bring their kids there and everyone really enjoys themselves. At the fair there are events such as Japanese paper folding, chopstick using lessons, and Indian turban wrapping."

"We learn from other countries" Phil added. "We also learn from the people coming, from their responses and from talking with them; we each benefit mutually."

Several events which the club holds are primarily for Chinese. The reason being, Phil described, is that there is a language barrier, since a good deal of the conversation is done in Chinest. Two such events are the Chinese New Year Celebration, and the Moon Festival, or Mid-Autumn festival.

The Chinese New Year celebration is held on the first day of the first month, according to the Lunar calendar, which occurs approximately in February. For the students and faculty not traveling to other places for the celebration, a dinner and various other activities are planned, one of which may be the presentation of Chinese films. The Mid Autumn or Moon Festival is held on the 15th day of the Lunar calendar's eighth month, occurring somewhere in the Sept.-October time period.

One major problem of these and other events has been funding. Much of the funding comes from a membership fee that members pay upon entering the club. This is not mandatory, however, because some people are not able to afford it. The fee more closely resembles a donation. However, this source of revenue has not always proved to be sufficient and additional funds have in the past come from a variety of sources.

"For special occasions like China night", said Al Long, "we received funds through the foreign student office. Also, this year the Graduate Student Senate helped to support China night."

The Chinese Students Association is only one of several ethnic associations located in the five college community. This campus, besides the Chinese students association, also has the Indian association, the African association, the Japanese-American association, and the International Students Association, among others. The International Students Association acts as a sort of umbrella organization in which all of the nationality groups have representatives.

The Asian-American club, a local association of American-Chinese, don't really have that much interaction with the Chinese Students Association. One of the problems is that there are various language and cultural differences.

"Despite these differences", Phil said, "many of the American Chinese are very interested in the club's activities."

To help bind the Asian community together, an Asian-students organization, called the "Asian Coalition" of five colleges was formed. "This organization", said Phil, "is made up of a group of people who want to work together to bring all the Asian students groups together. The Chinese Students Association is involved in this."

One very important aspect of the club's activities deals with how the Chinese Students Association members help incoming Chinese students adjust to the cultural shock they might encounter when first arriving here. Sometimes people in areas like Singapore and Hong Kong are notified of their acceptance to UMass at a late date; sometimes as late as July. As soon as the Chinese Students Association learns of a Chinese student's acceptance, there is immediate correspondence to make sure that the student knows that he or she has friends in an unfamiliar environment.

"Our aim", said Phil, "is to contact the incoming Chinese students to help them. For special cases like when they get their notice of admission very late, they need help more desperately. We will help them a lot." The association helps the incoming students find places to live, gives them transportation from the airport, and assists in course selection. The new students have been very appreciative and think it's a good program. Al said that the Association serves as an information center for Chinese students, by telling them how to extend their passports, giving them information on buying charter plane tickets, and finding them rides to areas where rides are needed.

Each September, the foreign students advisors office holds an orientation program. The international club helps to organize this activity. The Chinese Students Association takes part in this program to help all foreign students, not only Chinese students to get to know this campus better.

In its aim to bring American and Chinese students together, vice president Phil Luk and president Tom Hsu said that there should be more cultural interaction. The Association occasionally shows Chinese films, but these are not always ideal ways to bring a better understanding to people who don't know very much about a foreign culture. Sometimes the films which are shown come from the Chinese film industry in Hong Kong, and tend to distort reality a bit. This same type of occurrance happens on television, most notably the Kung-Fu TV series. The Kung-Fu series deals with some Chinese philosophies. Some of them are true, but many are blown way out of proportion. "Certain things that they show are out of date," Phil said. "They put it on the screen because they want to make it more interesting to the audience."

One of the obvious ways of countering such misinformation would be the presentation of real cultural events, not only events like China night, but also events similar to what the Fine Arts Council offers every semester. Tom said that around the New York area there is a Peking Opera, which performs Chinese music. "Our group doesn't have that kind of money to show the students these aspects of Chinese culture", Tom emphasized. "If possible, we would like to get in touch with them and have them come here. Then there's a Chinese folk dance group. On China night we have something like that performed by the students, but they're not professionals."

Besides bringing these cultural groups to campus, another aim that various members of the Chinese Students Association hope to accomplish would be to help form an International House. According to the Foreign Students Advisor John Jessup, an International House could serve as a center for the foreign students associations. There could be an ongoing series of events based here, with rooms for reading, playing games, meetings, and many other purposes. It would help to make the international community much more visible, and help promote interaction with American students.

"The idea of an international house was brought up several years ago", said Phil. "This year the international students brought it out again." Since the beginning of the semester, there have been petitions for this. The response has been pretty good; we've got quite a few signatures. At first we were thinking about a dormitory, but that would be a big enterprise, and would be hard to realize. We would really like an international center which would be open for everyone. The groups could go there and have meetings and get together, say, every Friday night. People from different countries would know where to meet each other. American students who would like to meet international students could go there."

On May 11, the Asian Coalition of the five colleges will present an Asian Fair at Mount Holyoke College, an event which the Chinese Students Association will participate in. It will be held at the Skinner Green, and will feature a dragon boat race, kite flying, martial arts demonstrations, and the selling of Chinese foods, among other things.

The Asian fair, and the other events promoted by the Chinese Students Association and other student organizations are trying to promote better understanding between students. The worldwide concept is an important one, and enables people to look a little further than they normally would. Hopefully, with a little more involvement in these various international cultures, a greater understanding of people could be dealt with. The Chinese Students Association feels that this is a reachable goal.

to them. Philesha knew where the book was and how to turn on the light, but she didn't know how to read. Only yesterday she had taught herself how to speak out loud. The only thing she could say at this point was "Welcome home, Howard. I love you.", though that was a start, she could not read.

"Children, tonight I will tell you a story. Perhaps tomorrow your father will be back and will read to you." So saying, Philesha started her story. It was one that Howard had read to her before the arrival of the other plants. She surprised herself by remembering all of it. The other plants listened to her plant whisper as they had listened to Howard and when she was done, they all went to sleep for the night. Philesha stayed up for a while, wondering about Howard's disappearance, but the day's work had made her tired and it wasn't long before she, too, was fast asleep.

Howard had been gone for almost a week when the landlady let herself into the apartment. Luckily Philesha was in her pot at the time. The landlady walked into Howard's room muttering something about a car accident and having to do all this running around to get things for Howard. She came out of the room with some of Howard's clothes. She left, muttering about not watering all those plants and that they would probably die before Howard would be back, if he was coming back.

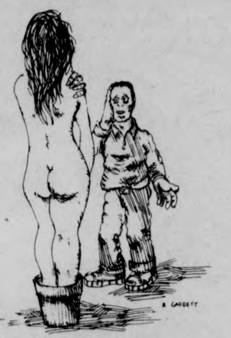
Now that Philesha had a pretty good idea what had happened to Howard, (she had her very own grapevine) she stopped her worrying, pulled herself together and started to run the apartment more efficiently. The more she was out of her pot, the more human she became. Even her body was beginning to look more human. Her roots consolidated into two foot-like shapes, making it easier to get in and out of her pot and easier to walk around the apartment. She developed two very strong, arm-like stocks, that made it easier to carry things. As her needs changed, so her body changed. She could spend almost forty-eight hours out of her pot. She was no longer the beautiful plant she once had been, nor was she quite a beautiful human. Howard wasn't there to notice her, so she didn't notice the changes.

One night Philesha noticed that they were almost out of a certain compound necessary to make the plant food. She opened the door and without thinking, walked down the stairs. She had grabbed some of the money that Howard had left in a cup by the door. She had tucked it under one of her few remaining leaves. When she got to the front door, she realized that she was a plant and her presence might disturb some people. It was too late to turn back now, there were other people coming down the stairs. She ran (as best she could) out to the sidewalk and into the alley beside the building.

As if Fate had planned the whole affair, there was almost an entire woman's wardrobe in a trash can in the alley. Once again the landlady had chosen just the right day to clean out her closet. Philesha slipped on a long dress that hid her 'legs' and a sweater that covered her 'arms'. Then she put on a pair of gloves and a wide brimmed hat. She looked like any 'freaky' girl. Over time, she had developed a face. She had glanced at it in passing Howard's mirror and wondered what it was for. Her complexion was a bit green, but she looked so human that one would have to look at her a few times to realize that something was slightly wrong. She stopped to admire herself in a store window. She liked her new figure.

Uninterrupted she proceeded to go to the plant store on the corner and buy the plant food. She remembered all that Howard had told her of his trips to this store. The only mistake she made was giving the clerk a ten dollar bill for the thirty-cent product. She had to be called back for the change, which she had difficulty holding on to. Her speech had passed the test she had waited over a month to try out. A real human had understood her and hadn't asked what that whisper beneath her speech was. She didn't realize that the whisper was much like a human lisp. She walked back to the apartment, stopping in the alley to pick up some more clothes.

Another week passed. Philesha had grown a skin that was like the underside of one of her leaves, except that it was a greenish-flesh tone. She had started going to the plant store once a day and the repeated exposure to the sun made her browner and more human looking. She had to hide when the landlady made her weekly trip to Howard's room. From the landlady's mumblings the plants were able to keep up with Howard's progress. He would recover. This week she said something about the fact that Howard would be back soon and she wouldn't have to do his laundry anymore or go to the library for him. She was so wrapped up in the big favors she was doing for him that she never noticed that the plants had not died. Philesha had missed Howard so much that at night, when she finished reading to her 'children', she would cry herself to sleep in the chair. She stopped needing to climb back into her pot. As long as she drank enough water and took a tablespoon of plant food every night, she would do quite well (even the plant food was becoming unnecessary). The plants missed Howard almost as much, but they had Philesha to care for them and read to them every night, so they only missed his presence from time to time.



In the middle of reading one night, two months past Howard's birthday, Philesha heard footsteps coming up the stairs (she was totally human already). She could tell that it wasn't the landlady. She knew that it was Howard. The other plants could tell that it was Howard, too, and they started whispering in excited tones. Philesha told them to be quiet with such force, that they were immediately quiet, more from surprise than her words. The door opened and a thin and sickly Howard entered the room.

"Welcome home, Howard. I love you." Philesha said to him, calmly hiding her excitement with her voice, but not her eyes. He simply walked over to her and looked at her strangely. He said nothing. He walked slowly around the room, looking at all the plants. He walked back to Philesha. He glanced in the direction of her pot. It was empty. He looked back at the curvaceous blond sitting in his chair.

"A lot has changed since I was here, Philesha." he said, taking her hands slowly in his. "I guess I must get used to your being a woman now." He had accepted the situation as he had his previous accidents.

Howard turned away from her hurt eyes. She didn't know what to expect, but she knew that it was more than what she had received. Then she realized that Howard loved her as a plant and could never love her as a woman.

It didn't take long, about two months. Philesha found a job in the plant store on the corner. She moved out of the apartment into a room behind the store. In less than a month she was married to the clerk, who also happened to own that shop and three others like it. She moved into his large house on the outskirts of the city. Philesha missed Howard, like anyone misses a first love, but she was happy with her new life. She was so content, in fact, that she almost forgot her strange beginnings. Her husband was constantly amazed at her ability to take care of plants. He was so glad to find a woman that could love plants as much as he did that he never asked about her life before the night in the plant store.

Howard, on the other hand was miserable. The plants missed Philesha so much, that soon after she left they all withered and died. Howard was still too weak from his car accident to take as good care of them as Philesha had. The little one was the last to go and when he died, Howard, in his loneliness, took to drinking. He started having accidents again and not long after that, he lost his job. He'd lost most of his money in his long stay in the hospital, so he was poor once again. It seemed that Howard lost at everything. Howard always lost.

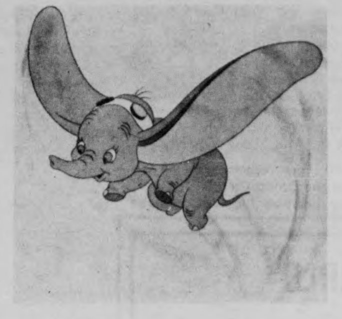
BLAZING SADDLES +++
A zany satire on the Hollywood formula western. All the typical western stereotypes are exploited to the hilt, with some very unique twists. Starring Cleavon Little, Gene Wilder, Slim Pickens, and Harvey Korman. Directed by Mel Brooks. At the Showcase Cinemas and Campus Cinemas.

DUMBO +++
In DUMBO , arguably one of the greatest feature-length cartoons ever made, Disney's anthropomorphism conquers the entire animal kingdom: his measure of success can be witnessed by the astounding grace with which Dumbo, an elephant, flies. After having animated mushrooms in FANTASIA, Disney's defiance of gravity seemed inevitable.

This delightful story about the adventures of a flying pachyderm and a masterful rodent stars Dumbo, with his enormous flopping ears and Timothy, his loyal friend and benefactor, and features an endless vareity of animals who populate the circus. Disney rivals Noah in his splendidly detailed thoroughness; his imagination raises pyramids and conjures up the wildest intoxication ever put on celluloid. In DUMBO, Disney found an ideal environment in which to recapture the naive humor and simple format of his short cartoons. It is unquestionably his most exuberant and spontaneous animated feature." Sat. 7, 9, 11 at Mahar.



THE GODFATHER (1972) +++
One of the most talked about films of recent years and winner of numerous Oscars. Marlon Brando and Al Pacino head an extraordinarily realistic cast. Thurs., 7 & 10 SUB.

GRAPES OF WRATH (1940) ++++
"John Ford's film of John Steinbeck's novel about the migration of poor workers from the midwestern dustbowl to the Californian fruit valleys is not only one of the earliest Hollywood exposes of social injustice but one of the most moving and beautiful films to come out of America. Gregg Toland's soft warm photography, Alfred Newman's music and Nunnally Johnson's screenplay provide a perfect background for the performances of Henry Fonda, Jane Darwell and a fine cast. Sat 4, at 7:30 and 9:30 in Lect Rm One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

JULIET OF THE SPIRITS +++
Fellini's first full length color film. A lonely wife trying to cope with a straying husband, sees "spirits" which hold her life up to a mirror. Not much depth, but a visual knockout. An eye-popping spectacle for the psyche, and dazzling display of cinematic showmanship. Marvelously bizarre characters, wild situations, fantastic costumes, and colorful acting. Tues. 7:30, Merrill Science Center, Lec Rm 3, Amherst College.

KNIFE IN THE WATER (1962) +++
Early film by Roman Polanski. Sponsored by the University Film Studies Series. Tues. at 7 and 9 at Thompson 102.

THE LAST DETAIL ++++
A bittersweet tale of two navy lifers, Jack Nicholson and Otis Young, who are assigned to deliver a young sailor, Randy Quaid, to the brig in Portsmouth on charges of stealing $40 from a charity box. Nicholson plays a "badass" sailor who makes it his duty to show the kid a good time and in the process shows the kid how to assert himself. Quaid gives an admirable though unspectacular performance as a loser who is to be incarcerated without ever experiencing life. From beer to bordello, Quaid learns it all, only to realize that he still must lose eight years of his life. At times a very funny movie, but one with a continuous underlying feeling of pathos. Mt. Farms Mall.

THE QUIET MAN (1952) +++
"Typically easy-going romantic comedy of John Ford's later period, enjoyably set in a never-never Ireland and concerning an ex-boxers Petruchip-like courtship of a fiery colleen. John Wayne, Maureen O'Hara, Victor McLagen and Barry Fitzgerald head a hand-picked cast; music by Victor Young; original story by Maurice Walsh." Fri. at 7:30 and 9:30 Lect Rm One, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College.

THE SEVEN UPS ++
"Explosive action, tension, and dazzlingly-directed car chase enlivens less than earth-shaking story of brutal, subrosa New York police unit busting brutal hoods without concern about ethics." Roy Scheider, Tony LoBianco, Larry Haines. Directed by Phil D'Antoni. At the Calvin.

SERPICO +++
Al Pacino plays an honest cop, who blows the whistle on police corruption in New York. A dramatically explosive film that documents Serpicos fight for his integrity and his life. Campus Cinemas.

THE STING ++++
Newman and Redford excel as a pair of con men operating in Chicago about the time of the Depression. But the film is more than just these two charming heroes. The elaborately planned con of an underworld kingpin, keeps the audience guessing from the start to finish with the finale leaving one thoroughly astounded. It's an authentic look into the thirties with a number of Joplin rags thrown in. For sheer entertainment it can't be beat. Mt. Farms Mall.

THREE STOOGES SHORTS ++++
Five Three Stooges classics — Microphonies, Movie Maniacs, Three Little Beers, Pop Goes the Easel, and Uncivil Warriors — all featuring the Original Curly will be shown Friday, May 3 in Thompson 104, at 7, 9, and 11.

STOLEN KISSES (1968) ++++
The film by Francois Truffaut, starring Jean Pierre Leaud, the young boy of 400 Blows, grown up. It's the story of a young man just out of the army, who is eager to begin life, but isn't sure in what direction he should head. Wonderfully impromtu acting as well as Truffauts warm feelings for people, make for an unforgettable viewing experience, with The Bride Wore Black. Globe, Northampton.

STRAW DOGS +++
"Brutally jolting study of man's destructive propensities and passions, culminating in an orgy of rape and violence, artictically justifiable, but not for those who are repulsed by stomach-turning candor. American mathematician and wife seek escape in British town, but find an outburst of hell. Dustin Hoffman, Susan George, and David Warner. Director — Sam Peckinpaugh. Tues. 6:30, 9, and 11 at the SUB.

TALL BLONDE MAN WITH ONE BLACK SHOE +++
"Congenial farce, sometimes very funny, sometimes too strung out, about bumbling innocent musician who becomes the fall guy in French secret service rivalry involving madcap incidents, miscalculations, foul-ups, buggings, and redherrings, all spoofing the world of super secrecy. Pierre Richard, Bernard Blier, Director Yves Robert. Amherst Cinema.

VIVA ZAPATA (1952) ++
Elia Kazan directs John Steinbeck's scenario of a Mexican revolutionary leader who joins in the overthrow of the dictator, is appointed president and then goes on to commit the same injustices as his predecessor. Starring Marlon Brando and Anthony Quinn. Thurs. 7:30, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF (1966) +++
"This somewhat misguidedly opened-out film version of Edward Albee's electrifying domestic comedy-drama was rather dingily photographed by Haskell Wexler and sometimes dully directed by Mike Nichols, but its basic force and entertainment value could not be totally disguised, particularly in view of a brilliant performance by Richard Burton and excellent ones by Elizabeth Taylor, George Seal and Sandy Dennis. But its chief interest for historians will be that it further extends the bounds of what is permissible on public screens, its unbridled treatment of matters sexual being decortated by "blue" jokes and expletives." Sat. at 8, Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College.

Students seek voice in Athletic budget

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

Maintaining that the Athletic Department was the only organization on campus using student funds without budget inspection from the senate's Rents and Fees Committee, members of the committee demanded last night that, for future budgets, the Athletic Department submit its budget to them for approval.

Currently, all other campus groups using student money must do this.

Students, who pay 27 per cent of the Athletic Dept., should have more representation within the dept." the committee said.

When an irate group of student sport enthusiasts confronted the hierarchy of the athletic dept, athletic Director Frank McInerney maintained that his department "had one of the best sport programs nationally and we think we're serving the students' needs as best as we can."

"We have a nation wide search going on now for a women's athletic director who will continue the process of equalization of women's programs as demanded by the Federal Govt.

"We have a nation wide search going on now for a women's athletic director who will continue the process of equalization of women's programs as demanded by the Federal Govt.

"We're looking for a woman who is well versed in administration as well as having experience in legal affairs. We would, if necessary, wait beyond the September 1 deadline we have established for the right woman."

Many people at the meeting reacted with skepticism to the qualifications, doubting the ability of the department to obtain such a woman.

Members of the women's crew club questioned their lack of team status and the fact that their program is not funded. All expenses for the club are now paid out of pocket by club members.

"We're in a period of financial cutbacks and the Athletic Department cannot go beyond its present committments unless there is a commensurate rise in student athletic fees," McInerney said.

"The eventual solution will lie in a flat equalization of all programs on campus."

In relation to the men's gymnastic program, McInerney said that no position exists as of now for a gymnastics coach.

New tape report coming

Nixon gets subpoena delay

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon gained a six-day delay yesterday in his fight against a Watergate subpoena, and a panel of experts said it will present another report Saturday on the 18¼-minute gap in a crucial White House tape.

A sweeping subpoena issued against Nixon by the Watergate special prosecutor had been due yesterday morning, but U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica gave lawyers additional time to file briefs and set a hearing date after the White House petitioned the court to quash the subpoena.

In a brief session with lawyers in the Watergate cover-up case and White House attorneys, Sirica gave them until next Monday to file answers to the White House motion and set a hearing for Wednesday .

In a similar struggle last fall, Sirica rejected White House claims of executive privilege and ordered Nixon to turn over several tape recordings of presidential conversations. He was upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals here, but Nixon eventually turned over the tapes without appealing to the Supreme Court.

There were strong indications from both sides, however, that this time the final showdown may come in the high court.

Meanwhile, a federal appeals court yesterday ordered the Senate Watergate committee to try to get along without transcripts or copies of five White House tapes it has sought since last summer, rather than pushing for the originals in court.

The seven-man U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia suggested the committee could get what information it needs from transcripts made public by President Nixon this week or from copies of the tapes now in the possession of the House Judiciary Committee that is considering Nixon's impeachment.

It asked the committee, headed by Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., to file papers explaining why it has "a present sense of need" for the original tapes subpoenaed from the White House last July.

"If such a present sense of need is asserted, the memorandum should set forth in what specific respects the transcripts, and the materials that can be obtained rom the House Judiciary Committee, are deficient in failing to meet the Select Committee's current need," the court said in a two-part order.

The Ervin committee sued Nixon to get the five tapes after he refused to surrender them under subpoena. U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica dismissed the suit last fall on grounds he did not have jurisdiction to consider it.

From Senate sources came reports that Alexander M. Haig Jr., current White House chief of staff, refused to answer questions before the Senate Watergate committee yesterday, saying he had been instructed by the President not to do so.

Agnew disbarred

From Wire Services

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was disbarred yesterday by the Maryland Court of Appeals because he was "so morally obtuse" that he consciously cheated the government, violated his oath and failed to see his duty to act honestly in all matters.

The disbarment proceedings came as the result of Agnew's no contest plea to evading $13,551 in federal income taxes in 1967 last Oct. 10 when he also resigned the vice presidency, rather than face charges of accepting illegal payments while a local official, governor and vice president.

He was fined $10,000 and placed on three years unsupervised probation.

Agnew was not available for comment on the decision in the disciplinary action brought by the state bar association.

But Agnew's attorney, Leon H.A. Pierson, said he planned to contact Agnew Friday to see if the case should be pursued any further.

"I don't think he'll do it. I think he'll probably accept it," Pierson said.

"It is difficult to reel compassion for an attorney who is so morally obtuse that he consciously cheats for his own pecuniary gain that government he has sworn to serve, completely disregards the words of the oath he uttered when first admitted to the bar, and absolutely fails to perceive his professional duty to act honestly in all matters," the court said.

WASHINGTON [AP] — Here, at a glance, are major Watergate-related developments Thursday:

—U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica gave President Nixon's lawyers six more days to prepare a case arguing that the special prosecutor's subpoena for more White House tapes be quashed.

—A panel of experts said it will present another report Saturday on the 18¼ minute gap in one White House tape.

—Senate sources reported that presidential chief of staff Alexander M. Haig Jr. refused to answer questions before the Senate Watergate committee, saying he had been instructed by the President not to do so.

—Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry E. Petersen defended his conduct of the initial Watergate investigation, declaring: "I am not a whore."

—The House Judiciary Committee voted to permit live television of its impeachment proceedings when the hearings become public. Presidential counselor Dean Burch also said the White House has no objection.

Court bars four from S.W. after tower incident

By FRAN BROCK
MDC Special

Four more J. F. Kennedy dorm residents were found guilty of "endangering the safety and welfare of a sizable crowd of people gathered outside the tower...in direct violation of the endangering policy act passed by the Southwest Assembly," at Wednesday night's student court hearing.

They were sentenced to removal from the Southwest area as of next fall, for the remainder of their tenure at the University.

Two other students were also found guilty of disobeying the same act; one was sanctioned 1¼ years probation and the other was given no saction.

Only one student was found not guilty because of testimony on the part of his roommate that he was in the library at the time.

The Southwest Assembly, brought charges against these students because they violated the Act on March 4.

They accused the different defendents of throwing such objects as toilet paper, fire crackers and water from their different windows on a crowd of students below who were watching streakers. One charge was made against two males who were hanging naked from their windows.

The prosecution claimed that the act was made known to all students and that counselors were told to discuss the issue of throwing objects out of windows, hanging out of windows and the responsibility a resident has to his or her room.

It was the belief of the prosecution that if no one would own up to being the responsible party, the student occupying that room would have to take it.

The defense argued that their clients were not responsible because they were not in their rooms, and it seemd to be floor policy to leave one's door open if one was on the floor.

The court, in their verdicts of guilty, recognized the responsibility as being that of the students. One set of judges agreed with the defense that the assembly's act needed to be looked into and issued a recommendation that the act be revised.

Collins hits Sarge on B'town funding

By WILLIAM F. O'BRIEN
MDC Staff

"For Governor Sargent to say that his administration hasn't been cutting funds for Belchertown is inaccurate." said Jim Collins, the state representative from Belchertown talking here yesterday.

Collins, who was the UMass S.G.A. president in 1968, went on to say that on more than one occasion, Secretary Cronin of the Office of Administration and Finance, has refused to release funds voted to Belchertown by the state legislature. Secretary Cronin is an appointee of the governor.

Collins pointed out that one of the main problems of Belchertown is the great lack of after care programs. "Russ Daniels should have been brought to a post care program instead of a Police Station. If we had post care programs, Russ Daniels and his family wouldn't be in the situation they're in now."

Public vs. private art

By ANN HAMBURGER
MDC Special

A noted art critic, Rosilyn Krouss, discussed two major opposing postulates about the making of art in a lecture and discussion yesterday in Herter Hall.

Ms. Rosilyn Krouss

Krouss, the Associate Editor of Art Forum and the author of "Terminal Iron Works" described the differing standpoints of making art by describing them as "Public versus private art."

She used the example of Marcel Duchamp to illustrate her point. Duchamp, who is famous for placing a urinal in a museum, thus illustrated his point that one can make art out of objects of everyday experience, simply through intent.

"The art object surfaces forward," she said, "inward and private emotions and intentions." Or the act of making art may be seen as having nothing to do with his internal feelings. Krouss further described the physical sculpture in saying that it need not have any connection between the private world of the maker and public expression of an idea.

These two viewpoints are adopted by artists today who may choose to work with private art or public art.

Krouss said her position in favor of public art was "quite obvious." She was critical of private art in that the experience of viewing it becomes connected with an idea, that hides the self of the artist and the viewer is forced to reconstruct the artist's ideas through the piece.

Three charged in car breaks

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

Three non-student males were arraigned in Northampton District Court yesterday on charges connected with breaks into three vehicles near the stadium late Wednesday night, police said.

Thomas Duxbury, 18, of Granby, William Hawley, 18, of North Amherst, and Paul Bernier, 18, of South Hadley were arraigned in Northampton District Court Thursday morning, according to police.

Duxbury was charged with three counts of possession of stolen property, five counts of breaking and entering into a motor vehicle, and possession of marijuana, according to police.

Hawley was charged with larceny under a hundred dollars, and five counts of breaking and entering into a motor vehicle, police said.

Bernier was charged with possession of stolen property, and five counts of breaking and entering into a motor vehicle, police said.

Student group

By PAUL BRADLEY
MDC Staff

The Student Organizing Project whose budget request is under consideration by the Student Senate, is seeking to give students primary responsibility for student affairs and to insure students major input in academic decision making at all levels, according to John Fisher, co-ordinator of the group.

The group, which was set up by the Student Senate, is seeking over $56,000 in its initial year of operation. According to Fisher, there should not be "too much trouble in getting it passed,"

To the Students of BDIC:

Professors Moss and Quick, and Sandy Parr Tjitendero have told me about the week-long festival which you have planned as a capstone to your BDIC careers — and to welcome in the month of May 1974. Unfortunately, I will be in California at the start of your celebration, but I will make every effort to join you before it is over!

In the meantime, I want to congratulate each of you on this truly spectacular measurement of your achievement, through courses of study which you had so large a part in designing. It proves the sort of trust which BDIC has had in your intentions, your imaginations, and your abilities from the outset, and I must admit a great sense of pride in hearing of this — one of many — indications of how well placed the University's trust has been.

Further, I hope this festival will only be the beginning of ways in which your work at the University of Massachusetts will serve you now and in the years ahead. Even as you have joined BDIC to gain access to the opportunity and the risk of planning your own present, your achievements now and in the years ahead will test the usefulness of the BDIC concept, and I look forward to hearing from you about how the program can be improved as we continue to learn together.

Sincerely,
Arthur F. Kinney
Past Director of BDIC

New majors: Soc. Thought, Pol. Econ.

By MARTIN J. WATERS
MDC Staff

Two new academic major programs, Social Thought and Political Economics, are being established within the University's College of Arts and Sciences.

Patrick Eagan is the present administrator of both programs, to be replaced this fall by Jean Elshtain. Eagan said this spring's change of status for the two programs "is unique."

Eagan said: "Formerly this program was under BDIC (Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration). This spring, however, it has been separated and is now a special program of CAS" (College of Arts and Sciences).

Both new major study areas will be directed by Dr. Paul Wolff of the Philosophy Department. Faculty for the program is now partially assembled.

Staff will include professors William Connolly of Political Science, Michael Best of Economics, Paul Hollander of Sociology, John Cole and Ralph Falkingham of Anthropology, William Johnston of History and Howard Gadlin of Psychology.

In calling this program unique, Eagan referred to the ground being broken in establishment of degree granting major programs directly under the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Previously, Social Thought and Political Economics have been offered within the framework of a wide-ranging special program (BDIC). They now become the first programs to grant specific degrees under direct supervision from CAS.

The major in Social Thought includes selection of introductory (100-199) and upper level (200-399) courses from six departments: Anthropology, Sociology, Economics, History and Philosophy. Four lower level and six upper level courses are required.

The major in Political Economy differs slightly in department choices. Both majors involve a 6-credit senior tutorial seminar. The student and her or his advisor construct the individual program from relevant course offerings.

Eagan said students may find out more about the two new majors at a meeting on Wednesday, May 8. It will be held at the 6th floor lounge of Thompson Tower at 8 p.m.

Some sheep shorn, others torn

Livestock classic coming

By MICKIE HALL
MDC Staff

The 39th Annual Bay State Livestock Classic will be presented by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture tonight from 6:30 p.m. - 8:30 p.m. and Saturday, May 4th, from 8:30 p.m. - 5:00 p.m. at Grinnell Arena.

Some 150 students from the animal science department will be competing in classes of fitting and showmanship. The entrants will be judged on preparation of the animal and showmanship ability in the ring.

Only these categories will be judged because the animals are not privately owned. All are owned by UMass and the Classic strictly enables the students from the animal science department to work and become familiar with the animals.

Dogs kill sheep at Tilson

By CHRIS BOURNE
MDC Special

Tuesday night, the sheep at Tilson Farm, were attacked by a pack of dogs.

According to an official at the Farm, who asked that his name not be used, "About 20 sheep were injured by the dogs, one of which died, we will have to put six more to sleep, and we aren't sure if we can save the rest.

A former resident of Amherst, who used to raise sheep next door to the farm, had a few of his sheep killed by dogs several years ago. One of the sheep herders said, "We can't have guns on campus, so the only thing we can do is try to drive the dogs away with clubs when they come."

Recruiting curb banned by FacSen

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

On-campus job recruiting narrowly escaped more stringent regulation when the Faculty Senate yesterday voted 20-24 not to require recruiters visiting the UMass-Amherst campus to submit their present personnel race and sex statistics.

In other business, the Fac-Sen received a new Faculty handbook, accepted annual reports from The Program and Budget Council and the Personnel Policy Committee, and approved the non-circulation of graduate lists.

A special report from the Scholarship, Financial Aid and Placement committee recommended that break down figures by sex and race of current employees not be required of employers who recruit on campus.

"Affirmative Action takes care of all recruiters with government contracts," stated Arthur Elkins, chairman of Scholarship, Financial Aid and Placement.

"The Civil Rights Act of 1964 covers all other businesses so the committee found no need for any further regulations on on-campus recruiting," continued Elkins.

It was suggested that students be informed of possible discrimination of recruiting companies so that they themselves could take the initiative to find out hiring practices of specific firms.

However Senator Dana P. Snyder opposed this idea.

"I think it is naive to think that a student will ask penetrating questions when trying to get a position with a company," Snyder commented.

"The University should not inforce Federal law," said Senator Stephen R. Michael in reference to the requirements of Affirmative Action and the Civil Rights Act.

Senator James L. Wiek added: "It may be more convenient for a company not to come to the campus if regulations are imposed."

In response to a question by Senator Roland J. Chilton on the current course of action an individual should follow if he feels he has been discriminated against, Elkins said all students are given a list of procedures to follow, before they see an on-campus recruiter.

In a hand vote the Fac-Sen defeated a motion to require race and sex statistics from all on-campus recruiters.

The Faculty handbook was officially received by the Fac-Sen but it was promptly sent to the Personnel Policy Committee for further study before being approved.

House advances gun control

By JAMES R. DORSEY

BOSTON [UPI] — Legislation prohibiting the sale and possession of cheap handguns, so-called "Saturday Night Specials" received initial approval in the Massachusetts House yesterday despite a last minute effort by a powerful gun lobby to kill the measure.

The vote was 121 to 86. The House is scheduled to reconsider the vote Monday.

On a voice vote without debate, the House also gave initial approval to legislation mandating successful completion of an examination on firearms safety for persons applying for or renewing Firearms Identification Cards or permits to carry handguns.

Rep. Ralph E. Sirianni, D-Winthrop, the gun-owning conservative who serves as House chairman of Public Safety Committee attacked the Council of Sportsmen's Clubs of Massachusetts for switching sides on the issue.

The council, one of the largest pro-gun lobbyist organizations in the state, had joined Sirianni in a meeting in Attorney General Robert H. Quinn's office several weeks ago called to draft the bill and agree on a definition of a Saturday Night Special.

To meet the definition of Saturday Night Special a handgun must meet three criteria:

—Have a barrel length three inches or less;

—Be a .32 caliber or less;

—And be made of material having a liquidus melting point of 900 degrees or less; or an ultimate tensile strength of less than 55,000 pounds per square inch; or, if it is made of powdered metal, or has a density of less than 7¼ grams per cubic centimeter.

That, Sirianni argued in debate, defines a cheap handgun, one "legitimate sportsmen and gun owners wouldn't own."

However, in a letter sent to legislators earlier this week, the council said, "there is no such category Saturday Night Special, at least not respective of firearms." It alleged the bill was written for "political expedience."

Nixon asserts he complied fully

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The White House announced yesterday that President Nixon will reject the conclusion of House impeachment investigators that his 1,200-page transcript did not fulfill their subpoena for 42 Watergate tapes.

The announcement was made by Deputy Press Secretary Gerald L. Warren, who did not know whether the President had received a letter in which the House Judiciary Committee cited him for failure to comply.

another subpoena if the White House fails to provide a second batch of tapes which they have requested.

"Before we are through with this there will be a day of reckoning," said Rep. John F. Seiberling, D-Ohio, a committee member. "The ball is back in Nixon's court."

Many committee members indicated that Nixon's failure to comply might be the basis for one article of impeachment against the President.

Watergate aftereffects

Warren said Nixon contends that the large volume of White House-edited transcripts, which were released to the public Tuesday, tells "the full story of Watergate."

"We feel that it is complete and we feel that it gives the House Judiciary Committee the facts with which to make a judgement," Warren said.

Warren echoed previous White House statements that neither the committee nor special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski need any more material from the President's confidential files.

But none of the members of Judicary Committee agreed that the matter was closed. They noted the subpoena is still in force and Nixon still is expected to comply. They also expected to approve

The Judiciary Committee voted 20 to 18 along party lines Wednesday night to instruct Chairman Peter J. Rodino to write a letter to Nixon saying simply:

"The committee on the Judiciary has directed me to advise you that it finds that as of 10 a.m., April 30, you have failed to comply with the committee's subpoena of April 11, 1974.

Nixon also denied the committee's request to allow the chief attorneys for the impeachment inquiry, John M. Doar and Albert Jenner, to verify the transcripts by listening to the actual tapes. Instead, he invited Rodino and the committee's ranking Republican, Edward Hutchinson, to do so. Rodino said the offer was unacceptable.

Dairy lobbyist links funds, price supports

WASHINGTON [AP] – Former milk-producer lobbyist Bob A. Lilly is quoted in court papers as saying his boss told him campaign donations were pledged to President Nixon "in conjunction with the 1971 price support" increase.

The statement is the first to be attributed to a dairy cooperative official alleging a link between Nixon's order to raise federal milk price supports in 1971 and the dairymen's promises of up to $2 million in campaign donations.

In a White House statement last January, the President specifically denied that he ordered prices increased in return for campaign money. He conceded that "traditional political considerations" played a part in his decision to overrule the Agriculture Department's desire to keep prices steady.

The House Judiciary Committee is investigating the milk-price matter as part of its impeachment inquiry, and the Watergate special prosecution force also is looking into it. The White House has declined requests for numerous tapes and documents relating to the price-support matter.

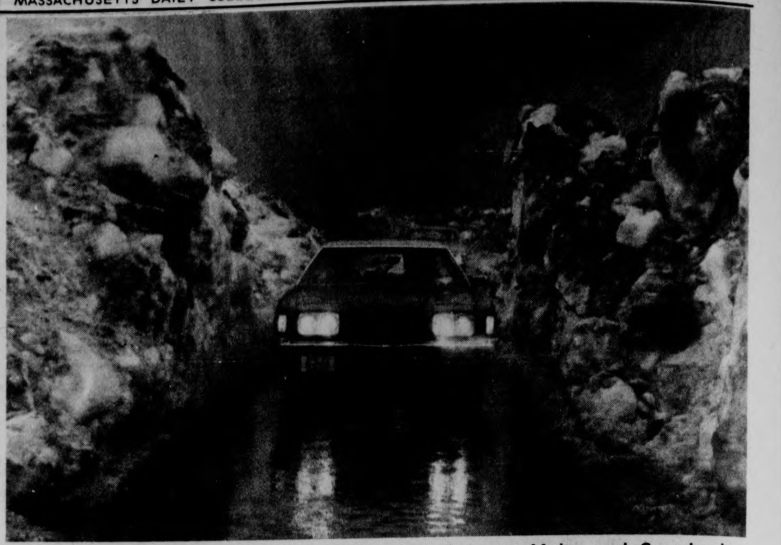
Lilly's statement surfaced as part of subpoenaed papers made public in connection with the Justic Department's antitrust suit against the nation's largest dairy-farmer cooperative, Associated Milk Producers, Inc.

Lilly was interviewed by former American Bar Association President Edward L. Wright last Dec. 27 and 28 as part of his investigation into the milk producer's political activities, which he conducted for the co-op's board of directors.

According to Wright's typewritten notes of the interview, Lilly said he was told on April 4, 1972 about "a commitment" of campaign funds to Nixon's re-election campaign.

On that date Lilly attended a meeting that included the milk producers' general manager, George L. Mehren, and its former general manager, Harold S. Nelson, who had just been demoted to a $100,000-a-year "consultant."

Mehren and Nelson talked about a commitment having been made.



The St. John River, international boundary between Maine and Canada, is overflowed with ice. Here, Arrostook County sheriff's deputies drive through a cut which highway crews made in 12 feet of river ice on Route 161 at St. Francis near Cross Rock. The ice was left on the highway by receding waters.

Nixon not told of hush funds according to transcripts

WASHINGTON – According to the edited transcripts made public by the White House this week, President Nixon wasn't told about key hush money conversations that were cited in the Watergate cover-up indictment.

What his aides never seemed to mention directly to the President were a series of events that led to an alleged payment on March 21, 1973, of $75,000 to Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt Jr.

One of the conversations cited in the indictment was a telephone call between H. R. Haldeman and former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell on March 21. It took place 35 minutes after Haldeman had discussed Hunt's demand for money with the President and John W. Dean III.

According to the indictment, within hours of the call from Haldeman, Mitchell authorized the $75,000 payment for Hunt.

But during a second meeting on March 21, with the President, Haldeman never mentioned his conversation with Mitchell when the discussion turned to Hunt's demand.

Other participants in that second March 21 meeting were Dean and John D. Ehrlichman.

During the first meeting that day, the transcripts quote Dean as telling Nixon that Hunt was demanding $120,000 for lawyers' fees and family support. Dean said that if Hunt didn't get the money he was threatening to disclose his activities as a member of the White House plumbers unit, including the Ellsberg break-in.

There was considerable discussion during that first meeting of the hush money demand as well as of the possibility of offering executive clemency to the Watergate defendants.

At times the President seemed to reject any such offers; at other times he seemed to meet Hunt's demands.

Near the end of that meeting, which broke up at 11:55 a.m., the President told his aides to get together with Mitchell.

Group will oppose Maine hydro plant

AUGUSTA, Maine [UPI] – The Maine Natural Resources Council, one of the state's most influential environmental groups, pledged yesterday to make opposition to the proposed Dickey Lincoln hydro-electric project one of its major environmental battles.

Clifford Goodall, head of the environmental group, told a news conference that the council has opposed the project for the St. John River Valley since 1968 and had not changed its position in the wake of the renewed congressional interest in the project because of the energy shortage.

"Our studies show that it will be environmentally very destructive, destroy valuable and irreplaceable wildlife habitats and will not produce a signigicant amount of energy," said Goodall.

Goodall said the area which would be flooded represents a potential $14 million contribution to the Maine economy if it is used for its forest resources.

He said the project is ill-conceived and would be an unjustifiable waste of Maine's valuable natural resources. He said the project would flood and permanently destroy about 70,000 acres of Maine's wilderness forest lands. He said it is one of the few remaining trout fishing areas in the eastern United States and the dam would provide only one per cent of New England's electricity needs by 1980.

"And the electricity will be for all New England with Maine carrying the burden of cost of the lost wilderness and forest products," said Goodall.

Kissinger, on shuttle, gets Israeli disengagement plan

JERUSALEM [UPI] – Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger received Israel's proposal for a military disengagement with Syria yesterday and reassured worried Israelis he would not work against their security in his search for peace on the embattled Golan Heights.

Kissinger, arriving from Egypt on his new Middle East peace shuttle, was greeted outside his hotel by young Israeli demonstrators who chanted and carried banners warning against Israeli concessions on the Golan issue. The demonstrators bore signs saying, "Kissinger, we are not for sale."

In their talks yesterday the Israelis told Kissinger how far they would go and how far they would not go to achieve a military disengagement with Syria.

Publicly there was a hard line against withdrawing from anything more than the salient Israel captured beyond the Golan Heights in the October war – whatever the Israeli leaders told Kissinger in private.

A high American official said that whether President Nixon visits the Middle East this summer did not entirely depend on the outcome of the Syrian-Israeli disengagement talks, but that the decision would obviously be affected by the outcome of the talks.

If Kissinger is successful in bringing about a military disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces on the Golan Heights, Nixon might go to the Middle East in the next month or so, administration officials have indicated.

"We're clarifying the elements of a possible agreement on disengagement," Kissinger told newsmen as he walked out of a two-hour session with Israels negotiating team.

American spokesman Robert J. McCloskey described the talks as "characteristically friendly."

SEC charges fraud against Penn Central

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday charged the Penn Central Co., its five former chief executives and a big accounting firm with massive fraud that it said cost investors in the bankrupt railroad and subsidiaries billions of dollars.

The SEC said despite the apparent glowing public reports, the company was experiencing huge cash drains, pursuing a policy of "fraud and deceit" and engaged in a program of "extraordinary borrowings."

These included a $10 million loan from the German Berliner Bank, $4 million of which was earmarked for purchasing or renovating railroad equipment but which was siphoned off to a trust in Liechtenstein.

When Penn Central Co. asked for return of the $4 million, the SEC said, the trust holders refused and "the funds have not been returned to Transportation Co.," a Penn Central subsidiary.

During the two-year period between the Penn Central merger and bankruptcy, the SEC said, Penn Central Co. officers and the accountants defrauded the public and shareholders by misrepresenting the company's earnings.

The SEC said the directors paid out $100 million in dividends that purportedly indicated Penn Central's financial strength during a period when the company was losing millions of dollars, rail service was declining and the company was borrowing millions of dollars to keep afloat.

Steel prices up

PITTSBURGH, Pa. [AP] – U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steel producer, joined others in the industry yesterday and announced price increases that were less than predicted before government price controls were lifted.

U.S. Steel said it would hike prices on its full product line by an average of 5.7 per cent, effective today. It gave no further breakdown of the increases.

Industry observers had predicted increases of between 13 and 20 per cent, following elimination of price controls.

A broad range of steel products, from airplanes and automobiles to bolts, boats and bobbie pins, will be affected by the increases, announced one day after the Cost of Living Council's wage and price controls expired.

SLA witnesses talk

SAN FRANCISCO [AP] – A federal judge yesterday ordered a San Francisco couple to testify before a federal grand jury probing the bank robbery police said was carried off by the Symbionese Liberation Army.

Newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst was identified inside the bank during the April 15 heist.

Paul Leonard Halverson, 29, a San Francisco State College graduate student, and his wife Joyce, 28, were ordered to go before the jury, which reconvened today.

U.S. District Judge Alfonzo Zirpoli granted Halverson immunity from prosecution but immunity was not given to Mrs. Halverson.

Junta gives amnesty

LISBON [UPI] – Portugal's new military junta yesterday granted amnesty for thousands of young Portuguese who fled the country to avoid military service in colonial wars in Africa.

In London, Mario Soares, leader of the Portuguese Socialist party, called for a cease-fire followed by negotiations with black guerrilla forces aimed at giving Portugal's African territories independence.

In a decree effective at once, the junta said any young Portuguese who report to their military units within 15 days of returning to Portugal will not be charged with desertion. It set no deadline for them to return home.

The decree said any Portuguese soldiers currently serving in army jails for desertion will be returned at once to regular military service.

Mass. House OK's gun ban

BOSTON [AP] – The Massachusetts House gave initial approval yesterday to a bill banning "Saturday Night specials" - pistols of low-quality metal or with barrels less than 3 inches long.

Rep. Ralph E. Sirianni Jr., D-Winthrop, chairman of the legislature's Public Safety Committee and chief sponsor of the bill, said he was "amazed" at last-minute opposition by the Council of Sportsmen's Clubs.

Metallurgical specifications in the bill came from the sportsmen, he said. "We bent over backward for these people," he added.

Rep. Peter Harrington, D-Newton, sponsor of one of several more stringent gun control bills defeated earlier in the session, urged approval, saying, "We have a bill that can be responsibly defended" by both proponents and supporters of earlier bills.

RR cut opposed

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday sided with the public in criticizing plans to reorganize bankrupt northeast railroads at the cost of "massive abandonment of rail services."

The ICC's rail services planning office said the Transportation Department's recommendations to streamline the 40,000 mile, 17-state rail system contained "excess" abandonment of lines and "confused and angered" the public.

Chandler urged the Railway Association to seek more complete data and also get more information from shippers and other users of rail service and not rely "solely on information furnished by the railroads."

Darwin is coming Saturday

To The Editor:

On Saturday, May 4, at 7:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, Darwin Shaw will speak about his experiences with Meher Baba, a man who, during his lifetime, repeatedly declared himself to be the Christ or Avatar of the age. Mr. Shaw, an employee with the city of Schenectady, N.Y., is one of the oldest American followers of Meher Baba; his first contact with him was in 1931, upon Meher Baba's first visit to the United States.

Over a span of 50 years, Meher Baba lived an intense and colorful life and appears unique in the annals of contemporary spirituality. His work took him from the most abject, downtrodden regions of India, where he cared for the needs of the poor, the mentally ill, the lepers, the sadhus or seekers after God, the 'God-intoxicated,' to the glitter and glamour of Hollywood where he was received with great enthusiasm by Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and other stars of the '30's. He personally contacted hundreds of thousands of people in mass gatherings or "darshans" during his life, but also spent years in strict isolation, secluded for some periods from any human contact whatsoever. While travelling throughout Europe, China and the United STates he had the comforts of western living, while in India he often would embark upon long arduous fasts and rigorous physical activity [for a period of time, choosing to travel throughout India with a small bank of disciples, as a beggar, having no security except what chance might provide. He pointed out that what he did in life was not for his own benefit, but was for his universal work of helping humanity.

Perhaps most remarkably, despite intense human contact and activity in the world, for the last 44 years of his life he did not speak, indicating that man had been given enough words from God and it was now time to live them.

He is known to many people in the United States through the influence of people like Melanie, Ronnie lane of the Faces, and Peter Townshend of The Who [who was inspired by him to create "Tommy" and "Who Came First"], and also through the contact which he had with some of the early psychedelic leaders in this country [warning them that the 'God experience' under LSD was merely a mirage and had little to do with spirituality]. Images of him on buttons, posters, pictures and cards have recalled for some "the other Marx brother" or, in some of his earliest pictures, the visage of Jesus, while he is best known for his winning smile and winsome expression, "Don't Worry. Be Happy!"

His work encompassed a body of tradition that ran through Vedanta, Sufism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, and mystic Christianity, but belonged to none in particular. The truth, he said, is beyond religion, beyond even spirituality as we understand it, though each religion provides a path and doorway to Reality. His basic message was simple. God is the only Reality. Living in Maya [the "illusion"; "ignorance"] as we do, we are unable to see what this means. The purpose of life is to break through the illusion into conscious Union with God [Infinite Knowledge, Power, Bliss]. As Christ, Rasool, or Avatar [different tradition's names for this same function of God] he "came down" from that Real place, he claimed, to push all in illusion toward the ultimate goal. "I have come to sow the seed of love in your hearts so that in spite of all superficial diversity which your life in illusion must experience and endure, the feeling of Oneness through Love is brought about amongst all nations, creeds, sects, and castes of the world."

Blacks get involved

By RUDOLPH JONES

Even though we are an oral people, we are existing in a country where written media profundly affects our development.

Black people haven't adequately come to grips with the means by which this society "spreads the word." The systematic exclusion of Black people from these avenues of expressions and the distortions of our image when they do appear is well documented both in our minds and elsewhere. If we are to neutralize all calculated efforts at insulting us as a people it is imperative that we get involved!

The Black News Service is a base from which you brothers and sisters can work from. Even though the semester is coming to an end and a few of us are graduating, some of us still have more time "to do" here. All brothers and sisters interested in spreading the word please come to the Black News Service office located on the first floor of New Africa House (545-0794). Let's begin our quest to be respected wherever we are; even here in Amherst.

The Black News Service wants you.

Rudolph Jones is the Black News Service Editor.

Green thumbs get ready!

To The Editor:

"As soon as the ground is plowed, manure spread, and water hooked up, garden plots will be available to Amherst residents who live in apartments or who have no garden land," claims the Amherst Record. They say you should contact Steven Scheiffer at the Town Hall if you'll be here during the summer, and want to grow a garden. The plots will be near the corner of Stanley and South East Streets.

Now how about that for good news? I wonder if anyone will take advantage of it.

"Through prison gates"

To The Editor:

Can You talk with your loved ones and never touch their hands?
Live caged like an animal, not like a man.
"I CAN"
If you're wondering how I can live in a world so full of hate...
I'm not a man, I'm a prison inmate...

The above is an excerpt from a poem by Michael Dalakian. He has spent most of his adult like in prison. He is out now and doing well. Michael Dalakian is luckier than the average convict: His rehabilitation training did something for him. Michael Dalakian is a member of the Cell Block Theatre.

The Cell Block Theatre is made up of professional actors, writers and directors who feel that the men in prisons are a resource too valuable to waste. These men have had experiences that few of us in our safe university environment can begin to comprehend. Such people as Arthur Miller, Gail Fisher, William Styron and Santha Rama Rau have worked with these people while they were in prison.

Six members of the Cell Block Theatre will present a poetry reading to be followed by a rap session on Friday and Saturday, May 3 and 4 at 8:00 p.m. A donation of 99 cents is being asked to help the Theatre survive. A seminar will be held on May 4 in 101 Campus Center at 1:00.

This is an invaluable chance for us to look out of our ivory tower and see where these men have been. And maybe it is time for us to look for change.

To hear it, you have to come my way, through prison gates and listen, to men decay......

Festival for Attica

To The Editor:

Remember the Attica prisoners' rebellion in September, 1971? Guarded by all-white guards, living in an environment of racism and degradation [findings of the McKay Commission set up by the state of New York, 1972], beatings and torture [findings of U. S. Court of Appeals], the prisoners [two-thirds non-white] revolted and presented a list of 28 demands to State Commissioner of Corrections Oswald. While none of the shotgun carrying state police that killed 39 prisoners and have been linked to the deaths of ten hostages have been indicted for any infraction, 60 Attica brothers have been indicted with crimes ranging from murder to possession of a prison key.

To raise money for a defense fund, the Amherst Attica Defense Coalition is sponsoring a 10 hour festival this Saturday from 2 to 12 p.m. with 10 "acts", including Max Roach, several bands and a theatre group. This will be in the Amherst College Gymn, at $2.50 per person. This is a good cause, and a good way to show solidarity with our brothers. People interested in taking tickets, helping with sound, security, etc., call John Davis at 256-0222.

Foreign aid reconsidered

To The Editor:

In reference to Ms. Schneer's article on Educational Colonialism through the School of Education I would like to briefly expand on two points. First, the rationale and premise of foreign aid for development is that a country that is more 'developed', qualitatively better, and superior to other labeled 'underdeveloped', has the right or the obligation to provide aid so that the latter becomes developed according to the societal characteristics, systems of social and political values and type of economic organization of the former. Sicne the rank ordering of countries from developed to underdeveloped has been based on purely economic indicators such as G.N.P., per capita income, balance of payments...etc. This economic analysis has excluded the possibility of rank ordering countries along the parameters of social or political development or according to the possibilities in each country of its people becoming less alienated and more fully functioning human beings.

If this latter parameters were utilized it might very well be that those 'economically' more developed countries would rank as very underdeveloped from a political, social and humane perspective. This seems to be the case for a large majority of the population in this country where there are increasing levels of alienation, escapist behaviors, criminality, mental disorders, passivity, compliance, frustration or just sheer hopelessness.

And yet, this country's Government continues to allocate vast resources for foreign development aid with the explicitly stated objective of aiding the dependent underdeveloped countries to develop along the lines of industrialization, consumption and 'modernization' characteristic of this intensely troubled society.

Second, the premises and rationale of government-sponsored and institutionalized foreign aid preclude the possibility of a construcitve, free, independent and egalitarian relationship between the so-called developed and underdeveloped countries of the world. As long as institutions such as the State Department's Agency for International Development are permitted to strenghten and expand the expertise and capabilities of American Universities so that these in turn could 'help' the underdeveloped countries in their development, in that measure the dependence of those countries on the United States will be strenghtened and expanded. And consequently their alienation from their own destiny, their own potentialities and creative resources will be increased.

The University of Massachusetts; through the Center for International Education is presently involved in this scheme contrary to the self-determination of the developing countries of the world in relation to the characteristics, shape and destiny of their educational systems. Self-determination and self-reliance can only be achieved through a constructive relationship between the developed and underdeveloped countries. This relationship is based on equality, mutual respect, and freedom and can only evolve only if and as international aid programs related to development are phased out.

Dancers neglected

To The Editor:

The Collegian has done it again — ie: for all intents and purposes has totally missed a dance concert in the UMass area. The Five-College Moving Company put on an excellent show Monday night and all they got in the Collegian was a four-paragraph story [which was probably written for you by the director of the company — right?] Hey — you're ignoring a great thing that's happening year after year. Watching dancers mature and develop is at least as exciting as speculating who on the gymnastics, football, etc. team will do better this year, and it's way ahead of the warmed-over UPI stories on your front page.

People on this campus like dance — but they still think Nikolai and Ailey are the only people to cheer for. Try something in depth. Try something in advance of performances. Try getting hold of someone who knows something about dance to write for you — you've taken the time to get competent reporters for sports, flicks, music, and other fields. Talk to the Dance Department — they're waiting for you to catch up with the fact that they exist. Be a well-rounded newspaper: remember that the UMies of today are the stars of tomorrow. [It's true!]

It was more like a picnic

As the bus pulled away from Amherst center bound for the impeachment rally in Washington the people on board were quiet, very quiet. Some positioned themselves for sleep, others started playing cards or chess and the rest engaged in peaceful conversation with the person or persons they had come with. The scene was much like that of any other bus I had taken to Boston, the only non-stranger was a three-year-old boy who had made it a point to introduce himself to all the passengers.

We did not know quite what to expect of this trip or of the demonstration we were headed for so those of us that could manage it slept all the way to Delaware where we saw the sun rise over the flat fields and rows of uniform houses.

Entering Washington we rode through the ghettoes which surround the majestic marble edifices, and as we passed in front of the Capitol building the only person we saw was an old, black man in a green work suit and cleaning fungus from a reflecting pool. We got off the bus and strolled through the warm streets of the city and waited for the rally to begin.

The rally started slowly, the Yippies took one park to themselves and the rest milled in front of the Washington Monument looking for organizers to tell them what to do. The Yippies were standing yelling into the microphone that Nixon had John Kennedy shot in Dallas: "THAT ! ¶ &?$!! NIXON HE ----- SHOT KENNEDY IN ----- DALLAS", BUY OUR PAPER AND YOU CAN ----- READ ALL ABOUT THE ----- THING". One of them dressed in a prison uniform and a Nixon mask was on the side having his picture taken with a family of Russian tourists.

The march finally began. People were carrying signs that read "Boycott lettuce and grapes", "Support the Young Socialists" and, of course, "Jail to the Chief". Hardly anybody chanted during the demonstration, many wore sullen expressions that were just like those of the army of police on motorcycles standing guard in front of the Justice Department building under the motto "Without law there can be no freedom".

The march ended in front of the Capital where speakers and singers gave their views on Nixon, Black oppression, the lettuce boycott, and feminism. David Dellinger of the Chicago 7 spoke of justice in America and called for government officials to clean up their acts. Phil Ochs, a folksinger who had been through such things a thousand times before, sang new songs about Nixon one of which was to the same tune as the song "Here's to the State of Misiissippi" he sang in civil rights marches ten years before. Only the names had changed. In the middle of Och's set some of the Yippies waving a banner supporting Patricia Hearst streaked in front the stage. Ochs calmly looked up and said "Let them go by and let's get on with the rally."

As the program went on though, more people were seen lying down getting tans than were seen listening to the speeches. The speakers warned in Last Supper style that some of those among us were not part of the demonstration and were there to betray us but nobody seemed paranoid as the scent of burning dope drifted through the crowd.

There were inspiring moments in the rally but they were forgotten quickly for games of frisbee as the mass dispersed. We boarded the bus again and headed back home.

The rally last weekend turned out to prove that the impeachment of Nixon is not really in the hands of the people. In fact, the people of this country seem complacent to let Congress and the Senate handle the matter by themselves. We can only hope that the right thing happens through this process.

I see impeachment as the only alternative. If it does not occur then we are only saying we approve of the crimes of the Administration. As Jefferson asked in Notes on Virginia "Should a prudent acquiescence at a critical time, be construed into a confirmation of every illegal thing done during that period?"

I thought about that as we were riding back passing acres of New Jersey junk yards, and miles upon miles of look, alike houses with look-alike cars and look alike-children.

"I'm empty and aching and I don't know why.
Counting the cars on the New Jersey
Turnpike they've all come to look for America."

Bob Estelle

Estelle's dream no. 1

Basically, I am a nocturnal creature. I have trouble sleeping nights at a time. No, I don't have a guilty conscience this just happens. So I went to the doctor and he gave me some sleeping pills. Se said to me, "Now Bob, take two of these and I'll guarantee that you'll sleep soundly." So I tried.

As I was lying down, my head felt real dizzy and I fell asleep. Suddenly I felt myself moving, moving upward. I opened my eyes and found myself in a strange place. Most of the inhabitants were pale white and the floors were smoky gray. The walls were made of gold and were studded with precious stones.

I stopped someone to ask where I was. The guy turned around and it was Adam Smith. I could tell, he had a name tag. He said to me, "What are you doing here? You're not dead yet!" I was startled but managed to choke out, "Where am I? All I know is that I took a couple of sleeping pills to go to bed tonight."

Another figure came up to me and this one I recognized to be Babe Ruth. After brief introductions, the Babe told me that I was at the Pearly Gates.

Surprised as I was, I was further shocked when another figure driving a bus came up and asked me if I wanted a tour of the place. "Yes," I was game.

The driver had the look of a reporter and his name tag said Chet Huntley. "I'm the low man around here and I have to drive the bus," he said.

So we drive around the outskirts. I couldn't go too far inside as I wasn't dead yet. I saw many a personality I had read about.

Finally, the gates came into view and after thanking Chet I departed from the bus. As I was doing so, I saw this clean white figure come up to me. There was something majestic about this fellow. He had wings wings on his back. He told me he was Michael and asked me what I was doing there. After explaining the circumstances, he told me I had to leave. Waving his hand, I suddenly felt drowsy and found myself moving.

When I opened my eyes, I was in a place that was colored red and was hot as hell. Some dude with a real long beard came up to me and asked me where I came from.

When I told him my story, he introduced himself as Karl Marx and I spat at him. He said, "Just for that the boss'll have to take care of you."

Just the, an individual came up to me. He was red all over and had funny bumps on his head. "Lu", Marx said to him, "take care of this one, will you."

The red guy came at me and had the meanest, ugliest look about him I've ever seen. Just as he was about to grab me, I started moving and my head started spinning — again.

I woke up and I was back in my own room in my own bed. I saw the little bottle of those sleeping pills and threw them at Mary Lyons, resolving to forget about it all and get some sleep.

Backroom politics

When President Nixon released the transcripts of the tapes earlier this week to the House Judiciary Committee he was heard to say "there's some rough stuff in here". Rough stuff is a good term, there are many statements on those tapes which are going to cost the president popularity with the public and their confidence in him as their leader.

Parts of the tapes sound like smoke filled, backroom scenes from "The Last Hurrah". Nixon is often heard bargaining with his aides, cursing his enemies and figuring ways to protect himself.

On April 14, 1973 Nixon warned the Justice Department through Assistant Attorney General Robert Peterson that they must keep the Watergate investigation away from the office of the Presidency. In this conversation too he all but breaks down to Peterson, "you've got to maintain the Presidency out of this. I have got things to do for this country and I'm not going to have — now this is personal, I sometimes feel I'd like to resign. Let Agnew be President for a while".

"Expletive omitted" or characterization omitted" are other common inserts in the text of the transcript. It is obvious what these explitives are from their positions. On Bobby Kennedy he said "Bobby was a ruthless (characterization omitted)". He also speaks of such people as Sirica and Ervin in such mysterious terms. Nixon does not care at all for opposition.

Most importantly though is the fact that Nixon knew more about the cover-up than he tried to lead us to believe. Way back on September 15, 1972 Nixon said to Dean, "But the way you have handled all this seems to me to have been very skillful in putting your fingers in the leaks that have sprung here and have sprung there." Also, Nixon, though he did not have a direct role in providing the Hunt hush money, he could have easily stopped it just the same. When the President was told about the payoff he said, "his (Hunt's) price is pretty high, but at least we can buy the time on that." In other words the President of the United States would not interfere with a solid case of blackmail. Richard Nixon is a lawyer there is no excuse for this.

Nixon also has raised a few serious questions through subtle hints which he is going to have to answer. When John Dean told him about the work that G. Gorden Liddy had done and described Liddy as "skillful" Nixon interjected with the answer "Oh yeah"...whatever could that mean?

Now that Nixon has been forced to take the first step in the full disclosure of facts around Watergate there are still many questions left to be answered to the public. There is still a long, long trial ahead of us.

MONDAY'S TOWN MEETING WARRANT

TOWN WARRANT

Hampshire, ss.

To one of the constables of the Town of Amherst in said Hampshire County, Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts you are directed to notify the registered voters of the Town of Amherst of the Annual Town Meeting to be held in the auditorium of the Amherst Regional Junior High School in said Amherst at seven-thirty o'clock P.M. on Monday the sixth day of May, nineteen hundred and seventy-four when the following articles will be acted upon by town meeting members.

Art. 1. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise a sum of money to pay unpaid bills of the preceding fiscal year.

Art. 2. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $2,800 to be expended for preservation and restoration of certain early town records.

Art. 3 (Selectmen) To hear the reports of the town officers, the Finance Committee, the Planning Board, and any other Town Boards or Committees.

Art. 4. (Selectmen) To see if the town will revise the Personnel By-law so that the by-law shall conform to the text printed in the pamphlet attached to this warrant and hereby incorporated therein, entitled Town of Amherst, Massachusetts Personnel By-Law, Effective July 1, 1974 as said text may be amended by the town, said text being available for examination at the office of the Town Clerk and copies being also available there for distribution to voters.

Art. 5. (Selectmen) To see if the town will vote to authorize the Town Treasurer, with the approval of the Selectmen, to borrow money from time to time in anticipation of the revenue of the financial year beginning July 1, 1974, in accordance with the provisions of General Laws, Chapter 44, Section 4, and to issue a note or notes therefor, payable within one year, and to renew any note or notes as may be given for a period of less than one year in accordance with General Laws, Chapter 44, Section 17.

Art. 6. (Health Advisory Council) To see if the town will accept the interim report of the Amherst Health Advisory Council on a proposed Community Health Center.

Art. 7. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise such sums of money as shall be deemed necessary to defray the expenses of the current year.

Art. 8. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $5,000 for preliminary architectural studies, surveys and options, all in connection with the acquisition of sites for future public safety facilities generally as recommended by the Public Safety Facilities Committee.

Art. 9. (Public Transportation Committee) To see if the town will request the Selectmen: (1) to take such action that they may deem necessary or advisable to establish and enroll the town as a member of the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Transit Authority as provided for in Section 2 of Chapter 1141 of the Acts of 1973; or (2) if the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Transit Authority is not established prior to September 6, 1974, to take such action that they may deem necessary or advisable to establish a Regional Transit Authority consisting of Amherst and interested area towns and cities as provided for in Section 3 of Chapter 1141 of the Acts of 1973.

Art. 10. (Public Transportation Committee) To see if the town will raise a sum of money for the purpose of making comprehensive and detailed public transportation studies, said appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Town Manager, and the Town Manager be authorized to apply for and accept Federal and State funds in connection with any of the foregoing.

Art. 11. (Board of Registrars) To see if the town will petition the General Court to enact special legislation for the listing of incumbents for all town offices and town meeting members at all elections in substantially the following form: Notwithstanding any general or special law or by-law to the contrary, in all town elections held in Amherst, Massachusetts the names of all candidates for town office and town meeting member shall appear on the official ballot in the order in which they are drawn by lot. Each such drawing shall be conducted by the registrars of voters or by their designees. Each candidate or his duly authorized representative shall have an opportunity to be present at such drawing. After the name of each candidate for an office who is an incumbent thereof shall be added the words "Candidate for re-election."

Art. 12. (Study Commission on the Control of Rents) To see if the town will continue the Study Commission on the Control of Rents, to be known as the "Housing Study Commission", for a period of one year. Present members may be re-appointed and-or new- members appointed at the discretion of the Board of Selectmen.

The Commission shall study the availability of housing, particularly the need or lack of need for low and moderate income housing; other matters relevant to the need or lack of need for same; and submit a report to the next regular Town Meeting with recommendations as deemed necessary.

Further, to see if the town will appropriate the sum of Five Thousand ($5,000) Dollars for a housing study upon which the Commission may base its evaluations and recommendation.

Art. 13. (Selectmen and Citizens Advisory Committee) To see if the town will amend its By-laws by adding Article VI:

ARTICLE VI

SOLICITORS BY-LAW

SECTION 1. Definitions For the purpose of this by-law, the following words are defined thus:

(a) "Soliciting" shall mean seeking to sell or obtain orders door to door for the purchase of goods, wares, merchandise, foodstuffs, and services of any kind for consideration. Also seeking to sell or obtain subscriptions to books, magazines, periodicals, newspapers and every other type of kind of publication, but shall not include the weekly or daily house delivery of newspaper.

(b) "Residence" shall mean and include every separate living unit occupied for residential purposes by one or more persons, contained within any type of building or structure.

(c) "Registered solicitor" shall mean and include any person who has obtained a valid certificate of registration as provided for in this by-law, which certificate is in the possession of the solicitor (on his or her person) while engaged in soliciting.

SECTION 2. Certificate of Registration Every person desiring to engage in soliciting as herein defined, from persons in residences in Amherst is required to make written application to the Police Department for a certificate of registration. Such certificate shall be carried by the solicitor while engaged in soliciting and must be presented upon request by a police officer or persons being solicited except as hereinafter provided. See Sec. 6.

SECTION 3. Application for Certificate of Registration Application for a certificate of registration shall be made upon a form provided by the Town of Amherst and filed with the Police Department at least ten days prior to soliciting. The applicant shall truthfully state in full the information requested on the application. The Chief of Police shall keep in his office an accurate record of every application received and acted upon together with all other information and data pertaining thereto and all certificates of registration issued under the provision of this by-law. The certificate of registration shall state its expiration date.

SECTION 4. Fee Each non-resident registrant shall pay to the Collector, Town of Amherst, a registration fee of five dollars for the period expiring sixty days after the date of registration. Residents have the option of registering on an annual basis for a fee of ten dollars.

SECTION 5. Revocation of Certificate Any certificate of registration issued under this by-law may be revoked by the Chief of Police for cause. Immediately upon revocation, written notice thereof shall be sent by the Chief of Police to the holder of the certificate by certified U.S. mail addressed to the holder's residence address as shown on the application. A record of the date of the revocation will be made upon the original application.

SECTION 6. Exceptions Organizations soliciting funds for charitable purposes must register with the police department ten (10) days prior to the start of any fund raising campaign. Such organizations are required to provide identification for each solicitor. A registration fee will not be required in this case.

The provisions of this by-law shall not apply to officers or employees of the Town of Amherst or county or state or federal governments when on official business.

SECTION 7. Time Regulation Soliciting as regulated in this by-law will be permitted only between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 6:00 p.m.

SECTION 8. Laws of the Commonwealth to be Paramount Nothing in this by-law shall be construed as conflicting with any license issued under the authority of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

SECTION 9. Penalty Any person violating any of the provisions of this by-law shall, upon conviction in the District Court, be subject to a fine of not more than five hundred dollars for each offense.

Art. 14. (Selectmen and Citizens Advisory Committee) To see if the town will amend its by-laws, Article III, Section 6 by adding after the last word (selectmen) of the first paragraph of Section 6, the following:

Political signs may be displayed on Town owned public property in the town, subject to the following restrictions:

1. A political sign may be only displayed on permit from the Selectmen; said permit to be good for a maximum of thirty days; except that, upon application to the selectmen, primary or caucus winners may leave their signs in place until the general election, provided the general election occurs within 45 days of the primary or caucus.

2. All signs must be removed not later than 7 days after the election the permit was granted for or at the expiration date of the permit, whichever comes first.

3. No sign may be longer than 9 square feet in an educational or residential zoning district nor larger than 24 square feet in any other zoning district.

4. The issuing of permits for temporary political signs shall be limited as follows:

a) In Town elections, the selectmen shall issue a permit for not more than 2 signs for each candidate for Town Meeting membership; the signs may be only for the applicant's candidacy and may be placed only within the precinct in which he is a candidate.

b) For any Town-wide office seeker, the selectmen may issue a permit for not more than 10 signs; signs must be for the permittee's candidacy and not more than 3 such signs may be placed in any one precinct.

c) No permit shall be issued by the selectmen without written permission of the immediate resident abutter or, if none, then the abutting property owner.

d) When Referendum questions appear on the Town election ballot, selectmen may issue a permit for not more than 1 sign per precinct for each referendum question to any local civic, church, charitable, or political organization that might want to make known its position on said referendum.

e) In County, State or National elections, the selectmen may issue a permit to any local political organization for not more than 7 political signs. On Referendum questions, selectmen may issue a permit for not more than 1 sign per precinct for each referendum question to any local civic, church, charitable, or political organization that might want to make known its position on said referendum.

5. No permit may be issued for, and no political signs may be placed upon, any town common, park, recreation, conservation, or watershed area; nor shall any partisan political sign be allowed to extend into or over the travelled portion of any public street or highway; nor shall any sign be attached to any tree, or to any pole, building or structure that has been placed on public property for the use of the general public.

6. Permit applicant shall be responsible for any injury or damage sustained by anyone as a result of sign placement.

7. Before issuing any permit under this section, selectmen shall be satisfied that construction and placement of signs will not constitute a danger to the public safety.

8. After issuing any permit under this section, selectmen may rescind it if sign, after being placed, is not kept in good repair and, as such, selectmen are of the opinion that the sign is, or may be, dangerous or a potential hazard. If, after notification to permit recipient, condition of sign is not immediately corrected selectmen may order removal of sign and take any action necessary to correct situation.

9. Selectmen may delegate any or all authority under this section to the Building Inspector or any other person.

In the second paragraph in two places after the word "display" strike out the words "or banner" and insert therein the following: "banner or sign."

Art. 15. (Selectmen) To see if the town will establish as town ways and accept the layouts as town ways each of the following streets:

a.) Chapel Road
b.) Barry Circle
c.) Sherry Circle
d.) Blossom Lane
e.) Surrey Lane
f.) Carriage Road
g.) Iduna Lane
h.) Dennis Drive
i.) Stony Hill Road
j.) Railroad Street
k.) Shutesbury Road

or any of them, or portions thereof, as laid out by the Board of Selectmen on April 20, 1974, and to authorize the Board of Selectmen to take by eminent domain, purchase or otherwise acquire any fee, easement or other interest in land necessary therefor, no appropriation being required.

Art. 16. (By petition of Cecile Denning, et al) To see if the town will repeal, nullify, and void its vote of Article 14 of the Special Town Meeting of October 15 and 17, 1973, which authorized the Selectmen to acquire two parcels of land located east of and off East Pleasant Street for the purpose of erecting a water standpipe.

Art. 17. (Selectmen) To see if the town will vote to appropriate a sum of money for the construction of a standpipe and the laying of water mains not less than six inches in diameter, to determine whether such appropriation shall be raised by taxation, by transfer of available funds, by borrowing or otherwise; and to authorize the application for and acceptance of grants or contributions for said project from the federal government, the Commonwealth or otherwise; or take any other action relative thereto.

Art. 18. (Selectmen) To see if the town will authorize the Board of Selectmen in order to meet the water supply needs of the town including the University of Massachusetts to submit a petition to the General Court under Article 89 of the Amendments to the Constitution for special legislation authorizing and permitting the town of Amherst to explore for a water supply within the town of Hadley, to acquire water, lands, easements or rights in lands or water necessary to develop, protect and supply water from within the town of Hadley and connect said water supply into the Amherst water distribution system or take any other action with respect thereto.

Art. 19. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $50,000 for engineering, geological surveys, test borings, test drillings, land surveys, legal expenses, appraisal services or any other item including the purchase of options in connection with the development of water supplies for Amherst, in Amherst or adjacent towns.

Art. 20. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $20,000 to reconstruct the existing chlorinator building and pumping station in Pelham including improvements to pumps and piping as may be required.

Art. 21. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $40,000 to be added to the previous appropriation under Article 16 of the 1973 annual meeting to construct water mains on Snell Street, University Drive South and Northampton Road.

Art. 22 (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $3,000 to reconstruct an existing four inch water main on Gaylord Street.

Art. 23. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $30,000 for the purchase of lands to protect the watersheds or to acquire and protect ground water supplies.

Art. 24. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $25,000 for the Conservation Commission to be placed in the Conservation Fund.

Art. 25. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $5,000 to be expended under the direction of the Town Manager, with the approval of the Conservation Commission, for an engineering report, plans and specifications for permanent repairs to the Factory Hollow Dam in North Amherst and for plans and specifications for related improvements to the pond and adjoining conservation areas.

Art. 26. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $10,000 to be expended under the direction of the Conservation Commission for repairs and improvements to the "Carriage House" at the Larch Hill Conservation Area.

Art. 27. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $10,000 to purchase a parcel of land adjoining the North Amherst Cemetery (Town Atlas Sheet 5D, Parcel 67).

Art. 28. (Selectmen) To see if the town will appropriate the sum of $720,000 or any greater or lesser sum for constructing or reconstructing the West Street sewage pumping station and a force main and for reconstructing existing sewers in South East Street, Stanley Street and College Street, including engineering services and other costs incidental thereto, and to determine whether such appropriation shall be raised by transfer of available funds, by borrowing or otherwise; and to authorize the application for and acceptance of grants or contributions for said project from the federal government, the Commonwealth or otherwise; or take any other action relative thereto.

Art. 29. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $7,000 to reconstruct about 650 feet of sanitary sewer serving Kellogg Avenue and the westerly side of Smith Street.

Art. 30. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $10,000 to replace the existing sanitary sewer pumping station at the north end of the South Amherst Common.

Art. 31. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $20,000 to construct a drainage system on the easterly portion of Shays Street, the South Amherst Common area, and the westerly portion of Station Road and to complete the reconstruction of that portion of Station Road previously authorized.

Art. 32. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $40,000 to reconstruct, under the provisions of Chapter 90, North East Street and Henry Street.

Art. 33. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $24,000 under the provisions of Chapter 90, for the maintenance of certain roads in town, pending reimbursement to the surplus revenue account from the County and State in the amount of $8,000 each.

Art. 34. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $35,000 to construct new sidewalks and bike paths or combination "bi-walks" on various streets.

Art. 35. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $45,000 to reconstruct or resurface West Pomeroy Lane.

Art. 36. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $11,000 to purchase and install traffic and pedestrian signals on North Pleasant Street at the Kellogg Avenue intersection.

Art. 37. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $4,000 to install an underground 6,000 gallon fiberglass gasoline storage tank at the Public Works Center.

Art. 38. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $73,050 to purchase the following items of equipment and be authorized to turn in corresponding items of unneeded equipment as partpayment:

a.) Pickup Truck, Water Division
b.) Dump Truck, Water Division c.) Pickup Truck, Highway Division
d.) Snow Plows, Highway Division e.) Sanding Body, Highway Division f.) Dump Truck, Tree Division g.) School Bus
h.) Fire Prevention Vehicle
i.) Emergency Medical Vehicle
j.) Tractor and Gang Mower, Recreation.

Art. 39. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $40,000 to exercise its option to purchase for approximately $36,000 a parcel of land situated on the south side of Potwine Lane (Town Atlas Sheet 23A, Parcel 9) containing 12 acres more or less as a future recreational site and to expend the balance of the appropriation to purchase adjoining land in order to increase the size of the site.

Art. 40. (Selectmen) To see if the town will raise $10,000 or some lesser amount for the use of the Franklin-Hampshire Mental Health and Retardation Area Board.

Art. 41. (Michael P. Sullivan, Jr.) To see if the town will request the State Legislature to impose a moratorium on the construction of nuclear power plants in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts until a thorough investigation of the safety of such plants has been conducted and until all other means of producing energy have been fully explored.

Art. 42. (By petition of Leon C.

Jamkian, et al) To see if the town will establish a local Consumer Advisory Commission and raise a sum of money therefor.

Art. 43. (By petition of Franklin A. Dorman, et al) To see if the town will urge our United States Representative Silvio O. Conte to vote in favor of the impeachment of Richard M. Nixon, so that he can answer charges in trial before the United States Senate, as prescribed under Article I, Sections 2 and 3, of the United States Constitution.

Art. 44. (By petition of Sarah Levine, et al) To see if the town will vote to raise and appropriate the sum of $6,000 to provide for social services provided by the Neighborhood Youth Corps, Hampshire Neighborhood Center, Foster Grandparent Project, Retired Senior Volunteer Program, Division of Youth Services Program and Alcoholism Prevention Program, to be administered by the hampshire Community Action Commission, Inc.

Art. 45. (By petition of Clinton E. May, et al) To see if the town will vote to have the Town Moderator appoint a committee to consist of not less than five and not more than nine of professional (or technically orientated to the proposed subject) residents to study and make appropriate recommendations to the town or other interested agencies concerning: 1) The Federal Water Pollution Control Act of 1972 (P. L. 92-500); and 2) alternate methods for the acquisition of municipal water supplies.

Art. 46. (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town will vote: The policy of the Town of Amherst is to universally enfranchise its residents. To this end the Town Meeting passes these by-laws:

1. Information Sheet: Prior to each Annual Town Election a "Census and Voter Information Sheet" shall be mailed by the Town Clerk to each household within the town. Said sheet shall describe a) the census procedure, b) town government, and c) the electoral process including the election calendar, how to register and where to vote.

2. Poster Notice: a) Notice of the election calendar for the Annual Town Election, and b) notice of any Town Meeting shall be posted twenty days prior to the first deadline related thereto. Posters shall be placed at numerous conspicuous places throughout the town and be readable at a distance of ten feet.

3. Political Signs: The town of Amherst shall make no law abridging the right of any resident to speak freely by placing a temporary political sign on his-her property or the adjacent town right-of-way, subject to the following regulations:

a) Each sign shall be located and constructed so as not to endanger the public safety and shall be no larger than two by three feet.

b) Each sign shall be erected upon a permit granted to the candidate or his-her agent by the building inspector with the approval of the resident.

c) A permit shall be granted for a maximum of thirty days prior to the election.

d) Failure of the permit holder to remove the sign within five days after the election shall be a misdemeanor.

4. Ballot Question: Any question shall be placed on the ballot at any regular election within the town upon the signatures of 200 registered voters. The vote shall be binding upon the town.

5. Election Calendar: The Annual Town Primary (Town Caucus) shall be preceded by at least four weeks of classes of the regular spring session of all colleges within the town.

6. Re-apportionment: Town Meeting members shall hereafter be apportioned among the various precincts according to the number of inhabitants including children.

7. University Precinct: The campus of the University of Massachusetts shall be a separate town precinct.

8. Minority Town Meeting Members: a) Prior to each Annual Town Election any group shall establish itself as a "minority constituency" upon a petition presented to the Town Clerk. Said petition shall contain at least the same number of signatures as the number of inhabitants who are represented by one Town Meeting member. The signatures shall be by any inhabitants over 18 years old. Thereafter said petitioners shall vote for Town Meeting members only on a "minority ballot"; b) any petitioner may become a candidate for Town Meeting member only on the minority ballot by filing nomination papers containing ten signatures of said petitioners; c) for purposes of Town Meeting member apportionment, a successful petitioner for a minority constituency shall be counted as an "inhabitant-at-large" and shall not be counted as a precinct inhabitant.

Art. 47. (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town shall vote: Because many parents need alternative means of educating their children, the Town Meeting hereby establishes an Alternative Schools Study Committee. Its charge shall be to advise the Town Meeting on 1) types of alternative schools, 2) means of accrediting, and 3) means of public funding. The committee membership shall be those who favor the concept of alternative schools.

Art. 48 (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town shall vote: Because Amherst needs an alternative transportation system, the Town Meeting hereby establishes a new permanent Bikeways Committee. Its charge shall be to plan, implement, and administer a town-wide network of bikeways. Half of its membership shall be bicyclists from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst Regional High School, Hampshire College and Amherst College.

Art. 49. (By petition of Eric Walgren, et al) To see if the town shall vote to enact the following procedures for the appointment of its committees:

A. The Town Meeting hereby establishes a new permanent Appointments Committee, of five Town Meeting members, so charged to appoint all Town Meeting Committees in accordancc with these guidelines:

1) Committee memberships shall generally represent a wide cross-section of the town, at least half the members to be women.

2) Where specific groups have an interest, group representatives shall be appointed.

3) Non-residents shall be appointed when resident experts or representatives are lacking.

4) Applications shall be encouraged by employing all local media.

B. A Town Meeting Study Committee shall have independent power to expand its membership, determine its rules for membership, and replace resigning members in pursuit of its charge.

Art. 50. (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town shall vote to adopt the following nuclear policy: The Town of Amherst opposes the construction of any nuclear power plant in the Pioneer Valley until such time as we are satisfied that like nuclear power plants have been demonstrated to assure absolute safety from radiation for the lives and health of our citizens and their progeny. To this end:

A. The Town Meeting hereby establishes a Nuclear Radiation Advisory Committee to be charged:

1) To evaluate the danger of low level radioactive releases to the health of people residing in the vicinity of a nuclear power plant.

2) To evaluate the danger of life and health of transporting and storing radioactive waste.

3) To assess the probability of a nuclear catastrophy caused by technical failure, human error, political sabotage, or an insane act.

4) To invite the establishment of similar Advisory Committees in nearby towns.

5) And to urge the establishment of a Pioneer Valley Nuclear Radiation Commission having representatives from each town.

B. The Town of Amherst hereby bans the transportation of radioactive waste on town roads and opposes the transportation of radioactive waste across town lines until such time as said transportation is proven safe.

Art. 51. (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town shall vote: Because venereal disease is a communicable disease and a public health hazard Town Meeting shall appropriate funds necessary to provide Amherst residents with free V.D. testing and treatment. A five member committee shall be established for implementation of this service. Two of the committee members shall consist of sexually active people in the town who feel that they are in need of such services. The committee shall be given full authority to implement their plan.

Art. 52. (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town will vote to repeal the following Town By-laws within Article II, General Police Regulations: By-laws 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 11, 12, 13. In order to keep the peace, the Town Meeting hereby passes the following Town By-laws within Article II:

1. Any person who shall a) obstruct pedestrian or vehicular traffic and b) fail to desist upon request of a police officer shall be liable for a misdemeanor upon the complaint of said officer.

2. Any person who shall a) harass and so deprive another of his-her civil liberty to lead a peaceable life and b) fail to desist upon the request of the harassed person shall be liable for a misdemeanor upon the complaint of said harassed person.

3. In pursuit of personal liberty the following nude conduct shall be permitted: a) Nudity within a dwelling or on private property outside the public view; b) Public nudity at designated places for the purpose of sunbathing and swimming; c) "Streaking", defined as public nudity while running at large for the purpose of free expression or recreation.

Art. 53. (By petition of Jean M. Murray, et al) To see if the town will vote to adopt the following sewage policy: The Town of Amherst fully respects all natural fresh water resources within the Commonwealth for household, recreationa! and wildlife use. To this end:

A. The town absolutely prohibits any release into any waterway of raw or otherwise ecologically damaging sewage effluent produced within the town.

B. The Town Meeting hereby establishes a Sewage Recycling Study Committee, so charged to study whether the sewage-to-fertilizer process, newly approved by the U.S.D.A., suits Amherst's needs, and report to the Fall Town Meeting.

Art. 54. (By petition of Steven A. Gest, et al) To see if the town will vote to adopt the following hitchhiking policy: The Town of Amherst encourages hitchhiking as a needed alternative to private automobile use. To this end:

A. The Town Meeting hereby establishes a Hitchhiking Safety Committee. Its charge shall be 1) to plan, implement, and administer construction of well-marked "pull-over" lanes about town and 2) to seek other ways and means of encouraging safe and effective hitchhiking practices. Half of its membership shall be persons who say they have hitchhiked not less than five times in the town of Amherst. Half of its membership shall be women.

B. The Town Meeting charges the Amherst Police Department to administer a Voluntary "Safe-Ride" Automobile-Sticker Program whereby automobile owners may register their cars with the Amherst Police Department and obtain at no personal cost a numbered windshield sticker which states that said automobile owner guarantees a safe ride to all hitchhikers.

Art. 55. (By petition of Steven A. Gest, et al) To see if the town will vote: Because the center of the town of Amherst often becomes unnecessarily congested with automobile traffic, the Town Meeting hereby established a Pedestrian Rights Study Committee. Its charge shall be to report to the Town Meeting on the feasibility of banning all motor vehicle traffic, other than that traffic which provides essential services to residents of Amherst, from 1) North and South Pleasant Streets from Amherst College to the campus of the University of Massachusetts, and 2) from other Town roads which the committee finds would better serve the interests of the residents of the Town of Amherst if such a ban were applied to said roads. At least half of its membership shall be those who favor the concept of selective bans on automobile traffic.

Art. 56. (By petition of Steven A. Gest, at al) To see if the town will vote: The policy of the town of Amherst is to encourage extensive use of all town parks and greens by town residents for purposes of recreation and relaxation. To this end: The Town Meeting hereby establishes a Parks and Greens Study Committee. Its charge shall be to advise the Town Meeting of 1) methods of encouraging greater and more pleasureable use of town parks and greens by residents of Amherst, and 2) physical improvements and capital expenditures which may be made upon town parks and greens in order to better implement the above stated policy. Not less than one-third of its membership shall be persons who have expertise in environmental design.

Art. 57 (By petition of Steven A. Gest, et al) To see if the town will vote: The policy of the Town of Amherst is that the use of marijuana causes no measureable harm to the town. Therefore the Town Meeting passes the following by-law:

A. Possession of non-profit sale of one pound or less of marijuana in the Town of Amherst shall be punishable by a fine of not more than five dollars.

B. The Town Meeting charges that proceeds from the collection of the above five dollar fine shall be used 1) to distribute drug-use information free of cost to residents of Amherst and 2) to provide drug-abuse rehabilitation services free of cost to residents of Amherst. The Town Meeting hereby establishes a Drug Information Committee. Its charge shall be to plan and implement these programs. Not less than one-third of its membership shall be former drug users.

Some books irreplaceable

Lotsa lit. lifted from library

By EILEEN O'CONNOR
MDC Staff

Some 42,000 books are reported missing since the new 28-story library was opened according to Gordon Fretwell, Associate Director of the University Library.

This figure totals six to seven per cent of the 700,000 books which the library has had in circulation. This does not include the number of unreturned books.

"Many of the volumes we won't be able to replace because they are no longer in print," said Fretwell. "Xeroxing would be too costly so a newer edition or a different book must be substituted. Replacement cost starts at $15 per volume," he said.

Books are found to be missing in either of two ways, according to Fretwell. A person may look for a book on a shelf and if it cannot be found, he will go to circulation to see if it has been checked out. If it has not, then a search for up to ten days begins to see if it has been misplaced. At the end of three of four months it is declared "permanently missing", said Fretwell.

"We've always been aware of the problem," he said, "it is perennial."

Fretwell also said that tighter security would not help, it would only create more problems. Some people do not like to be pressed to open their packs, he said for search while still others are upset at not being more thoroughly searched.

To keep everyone moderately happy, Fretwell said, he strives for "a middle of the road policy"; not too lax and not too much like a police state.

Although the exit desk attendents are hardly what you might call foolproof, they do catch quite a few, said Fretwell. He said that he would like to think that students "absentmindedly forgot to check them out."

The library personnel are hassled between two extremes said Fretwell; one side wanting signs and penalties posted while the other wants to let trust dectate. This "continually shifting controversy" makes it very difficult to take a stand, said Fretwell.

One exit desk attendent, John Collins said, "Somedays we'll catch three, others none, but in the average week, ten will be caught."

Collins said that it is hard to be thorough with 6000 books leaving per day. Seventy per cent of the people who leave do not have library books with them, they only come here to study, said the attendent.

Collins expressed the same view as Fretwell in that, "You're hassled if you check and you're hassled if you don't."

The thoroughness of the checkers varies, said Collins. Some students are embarrassed to have to ask their friends to open their packs for search, when they shouldn't be, he said.

There are three uniformed institutional protection men in the library who, according to Fretwell, "Create an atmosphere of security and they are there to investigate instances which might occur."

IBM cards have been in use since January, which will soon avoid the nuissance of having to fill out a takeout form, said Fretwell. He also added that this automated circulating system may cut down on some of the loss.

An effective means of detecting unchecked books would be special equipment. Fretwell sees this as a "superior system but costly. I can't say for sure if the savings would justify the expense."

Collins said that if somone is intent on stealing a book, they will somehow, and he really can't stop them. He, too, would like to see the electronic system instituted.

A public appeal campaign will begin May 9th with WMUA announcements and flyers in the mail.

Fretwell is hoping to "Make people generally aware of the problem." For now, he added, "I'd like to see all the students who have borrowed books to return them by the end of the semester."

Southwest Mardi Gras

Southwest is welcoming Spring with its second annual Mardi Gras, Saturday May 4.

The Southwest Environmental Concerns class, under the direction of Ray Werbe, has organized the festival to be held from 5 p.m. until ?. The Mardi Gras is one of the class projects to help improve the living in Southwest.

The outside mall of the dorm complex will be decorated with an array of artificial flowers. The area will be kept bright with assorted colored lights.

Booths selling international foods and hand-made crafts will be set up along the mall. Games of skill will also be at hand.

Raffle tickets will be drawn at 11 p.m. for the first prize of a 10-speed bicycle. Sixty other prizes will also be drawn at that time. They include free dinners, discounts, and specified articles donated by local establishments.

Live music will help set the Mardi Gras mood.

Olympic Refinery - Part IV

Peter Booras: olympic spokesman

From the AP Special Assignment Team

EDITOR'S NOTE — Aristotle Onassis made one brief visit to New Hampshire after his Olympic Refineries, Inc., started seeking a refinery site there. The day-to-day spokesman was a New Hampshire resident, Peter J. Booras. Here, in the last of our reports on the refinery plan, is a look at Olympic's local representative and his associates.

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — When Olympic Refineries, Inc., unveiled plans for a $600 million oil refinery the man who did most of the talking for the company was Peter J. Booras, a Greek-American businessman who had dabbled in politics.

Variously described as a spokesman or New Hampshire representative for Aristotle Onassis' refinery company, Booras has been among the most active supporters of the proposal to build the complex on the New Hampshire seacoast. Both he and Olympic say he is not on the company payroll, has no financial interest in the project and is acting only as a citizen who believes the state would be well served by a refinery.

Booras heads a greeting-card manufacturing company in Keene, N.H., but spends much of his time shuttling between Olympic's temporary offices in Concord and Dover.

In 1972, he organized a New Hampshire primary write-in campaign for then-Vice President Spiro T. Agnew to counter what Booras perceived as pressure on President Nixon to dump Agnew from the ticket.

Booras also ran in that primary as a candidate for the Republican nomination for U.S. Senate. Although he outspent his competitors by a substantial margin, he lost the race. Campaign records show the Booras campaign was financed almost entirely by $30,000 of the candidate's personal funds and more than $15,000 in contributions from outside the state.

One of the largest individual contributors listed by Booras was William Hammerman of 10 Light St., Baltimore, Md. who gave $1,500. That address is the office of the Hammerman Organization, Inc., headed by I. H. "Bud" Hammerman, identified by the Justice Department as an Agnew confidant who set up the cash payment scheme for illegal kickbacks.

A reporter telephoning the Hammerman Organization was told that no William Hammerman is associated with the mortgage banking firm.

New Hampshire Atty. Gen. Warren Rudman recently announced his office is investigating several apparent violations of the state campaign finance law in the Booras campaign.

Booras says he was responsible for getting Olympic President Constantine E. Grastos interested in New Hampshire as a potential site for a refinery.

Booras did not elaborate.

Before Olympic announced publicly that it was looking at New Hampshire as a refinery site, several Greek-American real estate men began buying options for land on durham Point and on the Isles of Shoals, small islands off the coast.

Eventually these options put together about 3,500 acres on the mainland, most of it farm and woodlands.

The options promised more than $5 million if the land is purchased. No firm estimate is available on the price paid for the land options, but from what is known, they probably cost several hundred thousands of dollars.

Booras said the real estate men were acting "on my behalf" but that he was actually spending "Mr. Gratsos' money."

Business associates of Onassis, however, say it is not his style to risk his own money so early in such a risky venture. They suggest the option money came from other sources who hoped to gain if the Olympic proposal went through.

> A citizen who believes in the refinery...

One source in New Hampshire's Greek-American community said "Papanicolaou told me that Onassis was paying for the promotion, nothing else." Nicholas F. Papanicolaou is an Onassis protege and listed in corporate records as vice president, treasurer and a director of Olympic Refineries Inc.

George Pappademas, a Nashua real estate broker, helped Booras buy the land options, and town records show he bought a few parcels of land bordering the refinery area for himself.

Olympic spokesmen say the company owns the options, but they remain in Pappademas' name in town records.

Since the town of Durham voted overwhelmingly against rezoning Durham Point, the options covered land on which the refinery cannot be built.

Olympic Refineries Inc., appeared to withdraw to Onassis' offices in New York after it lost the showdown in Durham. It announced the closing of its Concord, N.H., office, and refinery opponents began to drift back to their everyday lives.

Then, at a special towm meeting in Newmarket just south of Durham, the townspeople voted in April to welcome a refinery proposal for their community.

Olympic sprang back to life.

Engineers were summoned to redraw their plans, and meetings were scheduled with the governor.

"Of course we are going to make a proposal," announced Olympic President Gratsos. "It would be ridiculous if we didn't."

Sunseed spiritual

"Sunseed", the first feature-length film on the emergence of the spiritual movement in America, is being shown at UMass Tuesday, May 7, in Campus Center room 101, at 4:00 p.m., and 7 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. at Hampshire College west Lecture Hall.

From Yoga to Tibetan Buddhism to Sufism to Zen, "Sunseed" gives a fascinating overview of some of the many spiritual paths that are attracting Americans in large numbers.

The film was shot in India, Nepal, Persia and the United States and introduces us to ten respected holy men - among them Baba Ram Dass, Swami Satchidananda, Yogi Bhajan, and "Sufi Sam." They are seen instructing pupils, giving interviews, talking with friends and relatives, and going about their daily lives.

Admission is one dollar. Sponsored by the Arica Institute, Harvey Wasserman, and Room to Move.

Intro to Arica

The Arica Institute, which Psychology Today called "the nearest thing we now have to a university for altered states of consciousness," is offering a free introductory evening on Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. at their facility at 1 Cook Place in Amherst.

The evening will include introduction to the Arica techniques of meditation, breathing, movement, and social yoga, as well as music, dance, and refreshments.

The 40-day training, which costs $400, is being offered twice this summer; once in Amherst starting June 3, and again in Lyndonville, Vermont, starting July 3.

For information call Arica at 256-0634.

Bike registration

Bicycle registration will be held every day next week from 3 p.m. until dark, according to Diana White, Staff Assistant for the UMass Department of Public Safety.

Last year a thousand bicycles were registered, but White feels that there are still quite a few unregistered bikes on campus. Those who have registered their bicycles in the past need not do so again.

Registration will be held at Hampden Dining Commons on Monday and Tuesday, at Worcester on Wednesday, at Franklin on Thursday, and at the Campus Center on Friday. Registration is free to students and non-students alike.

CCEBS bake sale

The CCEBS Dorm Counselors will be sponsoring a Bake Sale Saturday from 10:00 a.m. until everything has been sold. The Bake Sale will be at The Malcolm X room and New Africa House. Please help us with our endeavors.

All CCEBS Dorm Counselors are reminded to bring their baked goods to New Africa House, if you live on the Hill and to the Malcolm S room, if you live in Southwest at 9:30 a.m., May 4, 1974.

Want to park?

Registration materials for next year's parking system are now ready. Persons presently registered in the system will receive a registration packet by campus mail. Those who did not furnish a valid campus address when applying for parking last year will be able to pick up the forms at the Parking Office in Hampshire House. If you have not received a packet by May 1, assume that it was not mailed.

Persons presently in the system have the options of renewing their present assignments (if the assignment was received by March 15) or applying for a change to another lot. The deadline for exercising the renewal option is May 15. A continuation of the present assignment for all renewals received by that date. Persons presently in the system who apply for a change (in the assignment they held on March 15) will be given priority over new entrants into the system until May 15; after that date, all applicants will be considered as new.

Persons with unpaid parking fees for the current year, and persons who have defaulted on court summons' covering parking tickets, will not be issued registration materials until the amount owing has been paid.

Questions should be directed to the Parking Office, 103 Hampshire House, Tel. 545-0065.

Demo caucus Saturday

Registered Amherst Democrats are urged to attend the town caucus that will be held Saturday at 10:00 in the Amherst Regional Junior High School.

The purpose of the caucus is to elect 12 delegates to represent Amherst Democrats in the 1st congressional district caucus, to be held on June 1st.

All registered democrats are eligible to be nominated with consent from the floor at the Amherst caucus. Eligibility will be checked from the latest available list of democratic registration in Amherst. There is no prior registration or fee required for participation. Child care services will be provided by the Amherst Democratic Town Committee.

Cross-cultural

The Center for Outreach Programs has announced an on-campus internship position in Cross-Cultural Programming.

The student selected for the workshop program will assist Ms. Ann G. Silva in designing and evaluating the Southwest curriculum development in cultural affairs.

The intern will be involved in publicity and recruitment for the workshop as well as leadership training and career option studies. The Southwest program is a collaborative effort to draw together language study, area study and intercultural communication skills in order to examine career options.

Students may receive details on the new internship by contacting the Outreach office in room 408 of the Goodell Building.

Living Theatre

"The Living Theatre", with Julian Beck and Judith Malina will present "Seven Meditations on Political Sado-masochism" in the Alumni Gymnasium, Amherst College at 10:30 p.m. on Saturday, May 4, and Sunday, May 5.

Black internships offered

Black students with an interest in agricultural economics are encouraged to apply for an internship through the Center for Outreach Programs.

Bill Burke, director of the Outreach office, is currently recruiting candidates for a full-credit, work study program in conjunction with North Carolina Agricultural and Technical University in Greensboro.

The positions will be open in January 1975, but Burke said the students must apply before June 15 to be considered for the internship.

The program is limited to undergraduates and applicants must have a 3.0 cume and at least 12 traditional credits in economics and statistics to be considered for the internship.

Interested students may contact Bill Burke at the Center for Outreach Programs, Room 408, Goodell Building, for the necessary materials to apply for this special internship.

How would you like to sign the work you do?

It's a shame that most of us don't get to sign our work. Because we'd probably do it better. Just out of pride. And that could mean better products and services for everybody. So, even if you don't have to sign your work, do the kind of work you'd be proud to put your name on.

America. It only works as well as we do.

The law and you

Neither sleaching nor disrobation

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

Spring and Summer, like every other season, have their own predictable legal pitfalls. In this week's column I will list and briefly explain some of the problem areas in the hope that students will be able to avoid them.

1. Automobile Inspection: It's the time of year (again) to have your car inspected. The deadline is May 15. You cannot operate on a "Rejection" sticker after that date. If your car does not receive a white sticker by May 15 you run the very high risk of paying the cost of towing, plus a fine, plus the cost of inspection plus the cost of any repair. If you get it inspected now, it will cost about a buck.

2. Alcohol Abuse: According to every rational survey and expert in the field of alcohol use, young people are using the chemical, alcohol, more than any other for behavior modification today. Unlike the crimes associated with drug abuse which are generally non-violent, alcohol associated crimes are more violent and tougher to control by the user. An inordinately high number of the crimes of rape, assault and battery, armed robbery, breaking and entering and a variety of aggravated assaults, malicious damage claims and disorderly persons are also under the influence of alcohol at the time of commission of the crime. A fair number of students will also probably lose their licenses for a year for driving under the influence. There are some protective measures that one can take, but unfortunately, they depend on reasonableness and that is rarely equated with drunkeness.

A usually safe rule of thumb for drinking and driving WHICH NO ONE CAN SAFELY EXCEED is do not drive anywhere at all if you have consumed more than three units in hour, four in two or five in three. A unit is one usual serving of beer or wine or whiskey. The usual servings differ in size, but they are equivalent in alcohol as it is measured by a breathalyzer. The rule of thumb: 3 in 1 — 4 in 2 — 5 in 3.

If you choose to exceed that and drive, you don't need to call me when you are arrested to ask if you should take the breathalyzer. The answer is that you will almost surely fail. If you refuse the test, you lose your license for ninety days and then, almost surely, you will lose it for an additional year. The best legal advice is to observe the rule and never have that legal problem at least.

3. Disrobation: This term encompasses a variety of exquisite summer pastimes. A reasonable inquiry suggests that while this term is not a word, there is no good reason for it not to be one. I view it as the common thread from streaking through skinny dipping to mutual enjoyment of nudity in its most fulfilling aspect by consenting adults, publicly. Students will find that very few jurisdictions may be said to embrace these public "disrobations" within their accepted legal practices. In most cases practitioners may anticipate modest fines and indiscreet jail terms.

The most terrifying risk is that a very unsympathetic court may consider some conduct worthy of psychiatric evaluation. Use your head in advance of escapades. Incidentally, it is my understanding that the liberated state of Vermont recognizes that there is virtue in bare bathing on the premise that those offended may cast their eyes elsewhere. Both the bare bather and the shocked starer are expected to divide up the available territory in a reasonable fashion. Before you take it all of in the first Green Mountain puddle, though, you might check and make sure that the law is still as I have suggested.

4. Slamping, [Sleaching]: This art, although some identify it as a craft, is successfully practiced by those who survive a full night on the beach at Provincetown, Truro or Hampton Beach. No one in recent memory has made it. It is a combination of camping, but without a camp, slumming but without a slum, tenting but often without a proper tent and absolutely never, a permit. It has the thrill of the chase as in hide and seek and all the rise of jaywalking. The arrest and fine that inevitably follows can be avoided by sleeping in permitted areas (with a permit) or making rapid and intense friendships with resident natives.

Chess, chance, and choice 1974 sigma x , lecture

The 1974 UMass Sigma Xi lecture will be given by Dr. Max Black, Susan Linn Page Professor of Philosophy and Humane Letters at Cornell University tonight at 8 p.m. in room 113 C.C.

Dr. Black's lecture, entitled "Chess, Chance, and Choice," will be given following the Sigma Xi initiation ceremonies and annual banquet, and will be open to the public.

Professor Black joined the Cornell faculty in 1946 and was appointed Susan Linn Page Professor in 1954. He was the first director of the Society for the Humanities and held that post from 1965 to 1971. He has been director of the Cornell Program for Professors-at-Large since 1965.

Born in Russia in 1909, and educated in England, Black has been an American citizen since 1948. He received the degrees of B.A. (honors in mathematics) from Cambridge University in 1930, Ph.D. in mathematical logic from the University of London in 1939, and D.Lit. (doctor of letters) from the University of London in 1955.

Black taught at the University of London from 1936 to 1940 and has presented the "Special University Lectures" there on two occasions, in 1955 and again in 1968. He was a professor philosophy at the University of Illinois from 1940 to 1946. He has been the Spencer Trask Lecturer at Princeton University and the Matchette Lecturer at Wesleyan University and Brooklyn College.

Black's numerous publications include books entitled Critical Thinking, Models and Metaphors, A Companion to Wittgenstein's Tractatus, The Labyrinth of Language, and Margins of Precision. He has contributed scholarly articles to the Encyclopedia Britannica and the Encyclopedia of Philosophy and was a consulting editor for Webster's International Dictionary.

He was an editor of the Journal of Symbolic Logic, 1946-51, and has been editor of The Philosophical Review since 1950 and the Contemporary Philosophy series of Cornell University Press since 1956. He was awarded National Science Foundation research grants in 1962-63, and again in 1970-71, and served as a visiting lecturer in India for the State Department in the fall of 1962. He held a Fellowship at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences and a National Science Foundation Fellowship (1965-1966).

During the summer of 1966, he was a Visiting Fellow of the Australian National University (Canberra). In January 1969, and November 1972, he was a Visiting Professor at The Hebrew University, Jerusalem. During 1970-71 he was a Visiting Member of the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton. He has been appointed the Tarner Lecturer at Cambridge University for 1976.

The Massachusetts Chapter of Sigma Xi, The Scientific Research Society of North America, is the local Chapter of a continent-wide Honorary Society whose primary purpose is to encourage original scientific investigation.

Practical reasoning

Professor Max Black of Cornell University will be speaking at 3:30 this afternoon in room 105 of the Campus Center. The paper topic will be, "Some Questions About Practical Reasoning." This is a non-technical paper, easily accessible to any interested person.

This event is sponsored by the UMass Undergraduate Philosophy Club. Refreshments will be served.

Tout en Francais

The all-French speaking program Tout en Francais will devote two programs to the coming French elections which will take place on Sunday, May 5th.

On Thursday, May 2nd, there will be a short interview with Alain Clement, columnist for the great French newspaper "Le Monde" on the subject of the forthcoming French elections; and the monthly "French Press Review to be broadcast May 9th will be devoted entirely to the results of the election.

It is hoped that time to present interviews with a representative of the French Information Service and the Washington representatives of "Le Monde" and "France-Soir" and to follow their remarks with a round-table discussion.

Gay Festival

Vito Russo's montage "Homosexuality in Film", depicting Hollywood's depiction of homosexuals, will be shown Sunday morning, May 5 from 11 a.m. in Thompson 104.

The film is part of the 4th annual UMass Gay Festival and admission is 50 cents.

Christians, Jews

The last of a series of four dialogues on "Christians and Jews - A New Relationship?" has been postponed from May 5 to Sunday, May 12.

The topic for the final session will be "Jesus, Savior, and Salvation: A Jewish View and Christian Response."

Leaders in the dialogue series are Rabbi Aryeh Meir of the UMass Hillel Foundation and the Rev. Thomas Lindeman of the United Christian Foundation at UMass.

The May 12 meeting will be held in Folsom House, 367 N. Pleasant Street, just north of Wesley Methodist Church in Amherst. Starting time will be 7 p.m., with the dialogue and discussion going from 7:30 to 9:30.

The meeting is open to all interested persons.

although it may "be shaved a bit."

Fisher said that the group began with the "idea of starting a student union as one speaks of a labor union." The Project is to represent the interests of the student. This includes dealing with all groups that affect the students — among these are Whitmore, the state legislature, and institutions in the area affecting the student. This is as opposed to the student government, which sets regulations and laws but is not primarily looking after the direct interests of the student.

While acknowledging that apathy would be a problem in the raising of student support, Fisher said that he did expect a good amount of support. "This certainly isn't 1968. We're not planning to go after political abstracts, unlike the movements of the 60's. For example, we're concerned with racism, but racism as it exists on the campus."

Fisher said that 6 full time staff people would be hired, as well as about 12 part time staff members, who will be students.

The group is to be made up of six collectives, each of which will overlook a specific student interest. These include a Student Organizing collective, which will be responsible for organizing students around issues which affect their academic environment and overall day to day living. Also, a Student-Employee Collective, which will look after the interests of the working student. An Economic Development Collective is also planned, which will press for more student input in areas like the Campus Center, and is also considering the formation of a Credit Union.

In pointing out the need for such an organization, Fisher said that the Campus Center serves as a good example. "Students, who had nothing to do with the decision, were left holding the bag" of the 7 million dollar cost overrun.

"We'll be laying the groundwork for this over the summer," said Fisher, "so we'll be ready to pull together in the fall. You'll hear a lot more of us come September."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarius teaches, comments in a philosophical manner. Gemini hurls ideas with the speed of thunderbolts. Virgo analyzes and Aries gets to the point. Leo dramatizes while probing the heart of matters. Taurus can communicate views in an unhurried manner, while Libra balances, presents analogies and seeks a variety of opinions. Cancer teaches essentials in a practical, matter-of-fact way while Scorpio espouses passionate causes. Capricorn relates tests of life and how to meet them, while Aquarius flashes cards, illustrates and presents graphic views in order to make indelible impressions. Pisces deals with undercurrents, secrets, privileged information and imparts arcane knowledge in a sensitive, poetic manner. All of us gain knowledge by sharing it; we all learn by teaching.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be impatient due to obligations, restrictions. Key now is to make inquiries, to read and write, return calls and initiate contacts. Gemini, Sagittarius persons are involved. One close to you may not be in mood to co-operate. Make do with material at hand.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check details. Be specific. State case in clear, unobstrusive manner. Accent is on employment, coming to terms with rambunctious individual. Avoid rushing in traffic....call or message may require correction.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some changes occur quickly — and can be costly. Know it and protect yourself. Be analytical. Delve into reasons. Show that you are not a babe in the woods. Otherwise, you could be recipient of a number of proposals — aimed at getting something for nothing from you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your ability to serve as mediator in family dispute can be constructively utilized. Diplomacy is your ally. Go slow. Build on solid structure. Avoid one who leans and takes and gives nothing in return. You will understand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look beyond the immediate. Get behind the scenes; perceive potential. Deal with Pisces, Virgo persons. Much that appears solid is actually flimsy. Test materials. Perfect techniques. Take cash in lieu of credit.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accept added responsibility. Rewards can be substantial. What appears bleak is due to receive benefit of greater light. Know it and maintain confidence. Capricorn, Cancer persons may figure in important ways.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Finish what you start. Added recognition is due. Aries, another Libra may figure prominently. Accent is on quick changes, personal appearances and evaluation of costs, property values. Long-range proposal works to your advantage.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight creativity, new starts in new directions. Write and read — get ideas on paper. Visit one confined to home, hospital. Travel plans can be discussed, but final arrangements are delayed. Be receptive to individual who wants to share experience.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Some of your desires are revised, changed. Relationships are put to test. Discard concepts which hold back progress. Family member may appear timid. Be understanding but stick to principles. Closed-door meeting could be featured.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Wait and see — take time to test, experiment. Ask questions. Give full rein to intellectual curiosity. Sagittarius, Gemini persons could be in picture. You will be able to make room for yourself at top. Surprise call lends encouragement.

McKay: a radical and a winner

By BILL DOYLE

There's a guy named McKay from Southern California that's pretty well known around the coaching circles and there's another ugy named McKay who isn't quite as well known who coaches right here at UMass. Although Jeff McKay, junior varsity baseball coach at UMass, isn't as famous as John McKay, head football coach at USC, he has some unique coaching theories that could bring him recognition in the future.

McKay is from New York originally but he has done quite a lot of traveling. He attended Middlebury College in Vermont where he played baseball. The summer after he graduated in 1965, he played baseball in the Cape Cod League.

"I caught for Orleans. I was pretty good but no star. The year after I caught for Orleans, carlton Fisk caught for the, so everyone just forgot about me," McKay said about his ball playing days.

McKay then spent two years in the army, "not by choice" as he puts it. Then he coached varsity baseball on the high school level in Millbrooke N.Y. From there he went to So. California where he was assistant baseball coach for two years. Possibly because Southern California could only take one McKay at a time, he then moved on to the University of California at Berkley where he was J.V. coach for one year. He received his Masters from U of Cal at Berkley in, of all things, Journalism. From there he finally landed up at UMass where he is in his first year as J.V. coach.

Coach McKay is a UMass Graduate student who is trying to set up a program which at present UMass doesn't have. It consists of one-half physical educcation and one-half education.

SPORTING FEATURES

"I'd like to combine the two," he says,"because I think physical education and education should be interrelated. Athletics should be educational."

McKay says, "I try to stress the fact that it's the players team not the coach's team. The coach can help but he can't go out on the field and play, that's up to the players. Coaches shouldn't be asskickers. They can do only so much, the rest is up to the ball players. The players should kick themselves not the coach."

McKay is pretty liberal with his players. "We have team elections about once a week to decide our starting lineups. Hair length is completely left up to the individual's discretion," he says.

Some people think he is crazy because of his coaching theories, McKay says. "They're probably just jealous because the theories are interesting and unique, but most of all they work."

"Winning isn't everything but it's important. I try and get everyone in the ball game and let everyone have a good time," he said.

"My first concern is that each individual do the best they can. Secondly, I want nine guys out there on the field putting it all together ie. team work. Add to this just a little talent and you'll be a winner." Coach McKay adds, "One thing about my philosophy of sport is that I've always had winning teams."

By gradually giving players more freedom and by stressing the fact that it's the players' team not the coach's team, McKay says that he hopes he can sit back at the end of the season and watch the ball club perform on their own.

"There's more to baseball than baseball. There's learning respect for your opponent. There's self-discipline. Mostly there's a chance to learn about life in general," McKay says. This is quite different from what most coaches say. Most coaches are wrapped up in winning at all costs, which Coach McKay says in unfortunate. Most coaches don't try to give their players so much autonomy. Most coaches don't care about the individual. Luckily this doesn't happen very often at UMass. Most coaches don't try to make physical education educational at all but Coach McKay does.

"Academics are important because that's the reason the student is at UMass," he says. "Academics come first."

McKay must be doing something right because his players really work for him. They are constantly hustling. They run to first when they receive a base on balls. They run off the field when the inning is over. They always hustle on the basebaths. They seem to thrive on Coach McKay's philosophy.

From a player's stand point it must be unusual not to be under extreme pressure to win at all costs. It must be different to learn other things from a coach besides the sport. It must be revolutionary to have a say in what goes on in the club. It must be great.

"I just want our ball club to look good and play the best they possibly can. If they do then they'll win. Looking bad and winning is no good.

"UMass has a very good baseball program." McKay concluded."Coach Bergquist runs it extremely well. I'm just proud to be a part of it." UMass should be proud that McKay is a part of it.

These lobsters are not for boiling

By PEGGY GEROW

There are Boston lobsters and there are Boston Lobsters. The first are for eating and the second... well, good luck! And if you are still wondering why in the world lobsters are being mentioned on a sports page, the answer is simple; the Boston Lobsters represent one of the sixteen teams comprising the newly formed World Team Tennis League. Owned by Ray Ciccolo, an automobile dealer, the Lobsters open match play May 8 in Philadelphia against Billie Jean King's Freedoms and May 9 at B.U., their home court, against the Honolulu Leis.

Playing for Boston is player-coach Ion Tiriac of Rumania, whose personality on the court parallels that of Ilie Nastase so much that he is referred to as Ion the Terrible, and Australian Kerry Melville, the fifth ranked woman player in the world. Just recently the Lobsters announced the signing of England's Roger Taylor and Janet Newberry of LaJolla, Calif. Also pending signing for next year is Jeanne Evert, Chrissie's younger sister.

Last Friday, during the quarter-final matches of the Virginia Slims Tournament of Philadelphia, I got a chance to ask Ms. Melville how she felt about playing for Boston. She said, "I really haven't been to Boston but I think I'm going to like it. I'm looking forward to playing there." Although she lost to a phenomenal Rosie Casals 6-2, 6-4, Kerry has a great strong serve and forehand which has attributed to the consistency of her game this season. In the seven Virginia Slims tournaments she's played in this year, she's been to the semi's three times and the finals three times.

In other quarter-final action, Janet Newberry with a good strong backcourt game rallied from a 1-5 deficit against Billie Jean King, only to lose 7-5. Ms. King also took the second set 6-0.

All in all, the Lobsters should have a fairly successful season. Games are scheduled for the months of May, July, and August with June being free for Wimbledon. For all of you who watch tennis matches, the team tennis format is somewhat altered than regular match play. Each match will consist of two halves comprised of a set each of women's singles, men's singles, and mixed doubles with emphasis shifting slightly toward the latter. A player may appear once in each half and can switch to another event in the second half. Scoring is done on a point basis, with each set count contributing to the final tally which will determine the winning team.

Well... here's to a good season Kerry, Janet, Roger, and Ion. Any for Lobster?

A wild run for the roses

By the time you read this, I'll be in Louisville, Kentucky preparing to make the ultimate water in any gambler's lifetime, a bet on the Kentucky Darby.

The run for the roses, celebrating its centennial birthday, promises to be one of the wildest in its hundred year history. There are no Secretariats in the field and though there are some standouts like Judger, Rube the Great, Agitate, and Canonade, the possibility of a 20 or 22 horse field could produce a wild finish.

Although I'm not one of those insane, habitual gamblers who'll bet this week's paycheck on anything from the craps table in Vegas to a race between two raindrops on a window, I'll probably bet my life savings on the nose of Judger.

As I said, this is the hundredth running of the Kentucky Derby, Derby winners in the past have had such thirst quenching names like Bubbling-over ('27) and hairy finishes as was the case with Wiskery ('26). But in the first Derby in 1875 the winner was Aristides, I figure that's a scholarly Greek kind of name, so this year I'm going with "Judger", not Greek but somewhat scholarly.

If you don't see a column in this space next week it means that things didn't go too well and that I can't afford a pen or the paper to write it on.

But as I always say, "never bet on a sure thing unless you can afford to lose."

Rangers 4, Flyers 1 series tied

NEW YORK [UPI] – Ron Harris, who has risen from spare defenseman to star right wing during the playoffs, and Ted Irvine score 1:38 apart in the final period Thursday night to lift the New York Rangers to a 4-1 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers and a 3-3 deadlock in their Stanley Cup semi-final.

The seventh and decisive game will be played at Philadelphia Sunday afternoon with the Flyers still seeking to become the first expansion team to knock off an older club in the playoffs. Sunday's survivor will challenge the Boston Bruins for the Stanley Cup.

After Don Saleski and Brad Park exchanged first period gaols, Harris notched the winner with the final period only 4:10 old. Taking a pass from Dale Rolfe at the Philadelphia blue line, he spun to the right as he skated in and fired the puck around Simon Nolet, who was just in front of him. Goalie Bernie Parent hardly made a move on the 40-foot drive.

For Harris, who scored only two goals during the regular season, it was his third goal of the playoffs including the winner in overtime in the fifth game of the quarter-finals against Montreal. Normally a defenseman, Harris has been spotted at both defense and right wing during the playoffs.

The clincher came a minute and a half later when the puck apparently skidded off the skate of irvine and dribbled past parent, who had just made a save on Jerry Butler. Steve Vickers added an empty-net goal with 21 seconds to play for the Rangers.

With 36 minutes in penalties, the Flyers set a club record for penalty minutes during a single playoff series. Philadelphia has 231 minutes in six games against New York, snapping the mark of 206 in 1970, also against the Rangers.

Ranger Defenseman Jim Neilson and goalie Ed Giacomin eye puck put in the net by Philadelphia Flyers' Don Saleski (L) in the first period of the Stanley Cup Playoffs between the two in New York last night.

Portland $ bags Walton

PORTLAND, Ore. [AP] – UCLA superstar Bill Walton has signed with the Portland Trail Blazers for a salary estimated at more than $2 million, the National Basketball Association team said Thursday.

Walton agreed to sign a contract before coming to Portland for the weekend, Herman Sarkowsky, president of the Trail Blazers, said at a news conference.

Figures were not disclosed, but estimates ranged as high as $2.5 million in the multiyear pact.

Men's crew in New England Championships

By BOB ESTELLE

In preparation for next week's Dad Vail, the varsity crew will be entering the New England Intercollegiate Open Championships tomorrow. This race will be held on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester and is in the midst of great controversy regarding New England rowing.

Normally, the Rusty Callow Regatta is held there at this time every year. Many problems have occurred since last year's regatta and it all centers around having the UMass varsity compete in that race.

It all started when Trinity coach Norm Graf introduced a resolution in January of 1973 stating that if a non-member varsity crew doesn't compete 1 year, they must sit out the following year. This affected the Minutemen rowers as it was made retroactive to 1972, a year UMass did not choose to compete. So UMass was rejected from entering the Callow in 1973.

UMass Coach Mike Vespoli did not find this out until the third week in April, one week after they had beaten Trinity badly at the Mason-Downs Regatta in Hartford.

Then, UMass won the Dad Vail last May. Finishing behind them, in order, were Temple, 1972 champion Coast Guard and Trinity.

The following December, Graf put forth another proposal stating that, when it was passed, that "it was decided that the U. of Mass had reached such a high level of competition that their participation in the 1974 Regatta would not enhance our regatta or their program." Of course, Graf failed to mention that UMass wanted to enter the Callow very badly.

Then, the Chairman of the Callow Regatta resigned in protest as he had told UMass coach Vespoli that he should be able to enter the 1974 race.

Another vote came and another reject followed.

A twist of events followed, lead by WPI coach Dave Ploss and Holy Cross coach Jack Foley. The result is that the Callow will be run in Connecticut tomorrow with only Trinity, Wesleyan and Marist participating.

Tomorrow's race in Worcester includes UMass, Harvard, WPI, Holy Cross, UNH, Assumption, Clark and Amherst.

Batswomen edge Westfield, 5-3

By DAVE VARG

UMass went with the subs yesterday against unaccomplished Westfield State, and it almost cost them. The game went right down to the wire and had to be saved from the fire in extra innings. The final score was 5-3 and extended UMass' win streak to three games.

At the outset, it looked as if the contest would be a laugher. Westfield's pitcher was exceptionally, slow, while UMass hurler Vic Lentine was (to quote catcher Biz Bradley) throwing like a madman.

But the Massachusetts women, both regulars and subs, alike, just couldn't adjust to this inert delivery, while their Westfield counterpart were managing to bang out a few timely hits. And after a 7th inning home run off a Westfield bat, the highly favored Women from Amherst found themselves tied and heading into extra innings.

But in the top of the eighth the old veterans decided to end the masquerade. Jenny Edminster wasted no time in slamming a single to left and stealing second base. Shortstop Karen Fruzzetti blasted another hard hit. Edminster scored and the off target throw allowed Karen to advance to third. Then pitcher Vic Lentine cracked a long fly to center and Fruzzetti came home. UMass had a two run lead.

And it was all that Lentine needed. She fanned the first Westfield batter in the bottom of the inning, then gave up a weak little pop to short. And she ended the annoyance by blowing three fast balls by the final Westfield batter.

Vicki's performance was outstanding yesterday. She gave up only four hits, fanned eight batters and walked only two.

The rest of the team didn't play badly either, except they couldn't get good wood on the ball. Those tempting lobs were producing many big swings, but few solid hits.

UMass shouldn't have to worry about slow pitching for awhile. They play Keene on Saturday, which has excellent, fast pitchers.

Water polo team excells

By MDC STAFF

Last weekend the UMass men's water polo team competed in the Brown Invitational Tournament, and finished as one of the top teams. The team completed the tournament with two wins on Saturday after losing a tough game to Brown Friday night.

Due to cancellations and scheduling hassles the UMass team was unsure whether it would be able to play in the tournament at all. This proved detrimental to the team as many starting players were unable to make it to Brown on Friday night for the first game. As a result UMass succumbed to a strong Brown team in the first game. On the second day, after returning to UMass to pick up more players and again traveling down to Brown the team showed it's true strength by defeating Queens, New York in the first game and RPI, New York in the second.

In losing to Brown, captain Henry McClean scored most of the UMass goals in the 12-5 loss. On Saturday without the presence of their star shooter, McClean, three UMass forwards, Duncan Lomas, Ron Boucher, and Kevin McGinn scored goals for UMass in defeating Queens 10-8 and RPI 12-10.

Goalie Mark Gordon was chosen as the most valuable player for his amazing saves against some of the best players in the East.

As a result of the UMass team's fine playing, many of the teams in the tournament tried to get games with and invited UMass to tournaments of their own. Because of the fact that the team has to pay for it's own transportation they only accepted an invitation to a tournament at RPI for next weekend. This will be the team's last game of the season and they hope to come out as the winner and show why the UMass is considered one of the best water polo teams in New England.

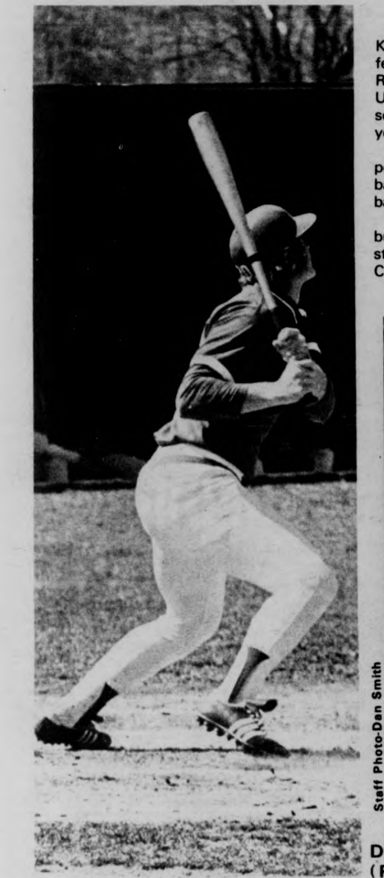
Silent sluggers wrangle Rams



By MIKE BROPHY

Dick Bergquist will take his squad to Kingston, R.I. today for a Yankee Conference baseball game with the University of Rhode Island before returning home against URI on SAturday. The Rams have failed to score on UMass in the last four contests (two years).

The Minutemen are coming off a disappointing loss to Springfield in which they did basically nothing right in nine innings of baseball, dropping their seasonal mark to 4-9.

Rhody, on the other hand, is 3-7 overall, but has split with Maine and defeated a strong UConn squad for a 2-2 Yankee Conference record. UMass' record is 0-4.

Jeff Reardon is slated to start for UMass and will put a 1-1 record on the line as URI is looking to snap a four-game losing streak that saw them drop a doubleheader to Brown on Monday after losing two single games during the past weekend.

URI plans to start junior righty Fred Baglioni who is 0-1 on the season with an ERA of 3.00 "He has only worked three innings for us but looked good and needs the chance to prove himself," said URI Coach John Norris.

Pitching has been the downfall of URI this season. They lost two of their aces to graduation after last season. Unlike the Minutemen, however, their hitting has been improving and could be the deciding factor in the home-and-home weekend series.

What has been happening to UMass baseball this season can perhaps be best put in the words of captain Ron Beaurivage who said, "We are beating ourselves most of the time."

It is certain that there will be some changes made in the porous line-up that has commited 15 fielding errors in the past three contests. "Teams do not make five errors per game and come out winners very often," said Yankee scout Bill Monbouquette at the game Wednesday.

It is beginning to look as though he was right as UMass simply has not shown the pitching or hitting power to bail out their mistakes in the field, both mental and physical in nature.

Five senior trackmen in final home meet

By SCOTT HAYES

Five seniors will bid farewell to UMass, tomorrow, in the track team's last home meet of the season. Bob Bocash, John Osborne, Barron Littlefield and co-captains Jim Hennessey and Jack Maloney will go out with class, however, by way of the unscheduled meet. Opposition will be provided by the Greater Boston Track Club, made up of track stars who have graduated from college and are presently living in New England. The GBTC is the equivalent of an all-star team, and from past performances, the contest shapes up as an all-star encounter rather than a dual meet.

Brian Moore, who was an All-American at MIT and John Dupuis are outstanding weightmen. Tom Kelly, who transferred from Maine to Bentley, won the long jump against UMass during the indoor season. Former UTEP (Texas at El Paso) star, Bob Gledhill, is the top high jumper for the GBTC. Pole vaulter Dave Wilson was the NE champ while at MIT. Bill Macombe, from Northeastern, is another top vaulter.

Although Greater Boston looks strong in the field events, they are even stronger in the running events. Coach Jack McDonald, Don Ricciato, Bob Sevene, Bernie Lancaster and Bill Martin are expected to go in the mile for Greater Boston. Ricciato was a 4:05 miler at BC a few years ago and Martin was the high school mile champion.

Other members of the GBTC include George Thurston and Jim O'Brien in the half, Will Rogers, Charlie Diehl, Tom Hollander and Jim Cappezuto, all three-milers. Will Rogers is probably the best long distance runner in New England and Hollander is a runner from Eastern Michigan.

The star-studded meet is sure to be super competitive and will provide a chance for track fans to see some of the best trackmen in New England at a home meet.

To say that the mile will be stacked would be an understatement. Bill Gillin, Randy Thomas, Chris Farmer, Devin Croft and Jack Maloney will all run the mile, and great times are almost inevitable.

Mike Gillen should also be pushed by the competition in the 880, and Littlefield will be attempting to come off another layoff successfully.

Tom Maguire will get his chance to qualify for the Nationals in the three-mile. The throwers will be looking to qualify for the New Englands, with Bob Bocash, Bill Cooke and Steve Mason leading the weightmen.

The meet will be a test in the field events, and an indication as to how well the team will do in the New Englands. The distance runners have already showed that they can stay with the best in New England, now the key to a NE championship will be wehterh or not the rest of the team can. TRACK TOPICS - - - - -An added event will take place before the start of the meet. Marian Kulick, Merry Cushing and Kathy Kelly will be competing in the women's mile, which won't count in the scoring, but is expected to draw a field of about ten runners. The ladies are members of the Sugarloaf Mountain Club.

UVM track coach Bill Nedde announced his retirement earlier in the week.

Statistic-stacked stickers set to slaughter wildcats

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garbers's Gorillas will travel to Durham, New Hampshire on Saturday to face the University of New Hampshire Wildcats in a game starting at 2 p.m.

The Gorillas have a 7-2 record thus far and are presently ranked ninth in the nation. Since losing their first two games they have won seven games in a row. Their last win was a 20-0 shutout of Amherst College.

UMass has some remarkable scoring statistics to go along with their record. Harry McVey leads the team in scoring with a total of 61 points (24 goals and 37 assists). Jeff Spooner is second with 48 points on 32 goals and 16 assists. McVey has a 4.1 assists per game average and an equally amazing 6.78 points per game average. After only six games, McVey was ranked second in the nation in assists with a 3.7 per game average and sixth in points, with a 5.7 per game aveerage. Spooner was also ranked high. After six games he was placed fifteenth in goals, with a 2.8 per game average. Now, however, he has a total of 32 goals – an average of 3.6 per game.

UMass also has some fine defensive stastics. Goalie, John Rutledge was ranked eighth in the nation in saves after six games. He then had a total of 94 saves and an average of 15.7 per game. His average has gone down since then, however, because his teammates controlled the ball so much in the last three games that Holy Cross, Williams, and Amherst were held to a total of 33 shots on net.

Team statistics have been as amazing as personal ones. In nine games the UMass team has scored 137 goals while limiting their opponents to 51. On the average, they have been outscoring their opponents by a 15-5 margin.

Statistics are important but they do not reveal how a team is actually playing. The UMass statistics are remarkable, but the team has not been playing consistently. They have not been playing an all around game of lacrosse. The 21-1 win over Williams College last Saturday was the best they have played all season. The defense was sharp and the running, passing, and stickhandling was excellent.

UMass will face UNH in a game which will be an important warmup for the battle with Brown on Wednesday. The Brown game could determine whether the Gorillas will go to the NCAA post-season tournament. However, they must first play UNH. New Hampshire has beaten Dartmouth, UConn, Springfield, Middlebury, and MIT while losing to Bowdoin. Coach Dick Garber has said that UNH is the best defensive team that he has seen this year. He was impressed with both their defense and attack.

Senate ponders "in contact" hrs

By BILL DENSMORE and MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

The State Senate is meeting at 1 p.m. today to consider a proposal requiring all state college and university professors to spend 12 hours a week "in contact" with students in classrooms or laboratories.

Saying the vacation in education is over, State Senator James Kelly (D-Oxford), said he is sponsoring the bill because he has received complaints from his constituents about the number of hours professors spend teaching.

UMass president Robert Wood said in a 3-page press release that "if classrooms were production lines and graduates were automobiles, it might make sense to pay faculty members by piecework rates."

Referring to Kelly's claim that UMass professors spend only six hours a week with students, Wood said a recent faculty survey from the Amherst campus "suggests that for every hour he spends in the classroom, the faculty member spends another hour in direct instructional relationships with his students and an additional three hours in duties supporting that teaching."

Wood also noted that classrooms are not always the best setting for real education: "We have at Amherst a University without walls, whose students – many studying at the same time they hold full-time jobs – rarely enter a formal classroom setting. All of these important programs require intense faculty support. None could take place if the teacher were chained to his blackboard."

Wood was joined in his criticism by Chancellors Randolph Bromery (Amherst) and Carlo Golino (Boston).

Bromery said the faculty here works a 56-hour week, including 14 hours a week in direct instructional contact with students. "It is the essential nature of the University," he said, "that faculty workloads are continually shifting between classroom teaching, individual student tutorials, advising and other scholarly pursuits."

Golino said UMass-Boston professors work 50 to 60 hours a week, on the average, counseling and talking to students, preparing courses and lectures, and conferring with groups.

Newly elected Student Government Association president Rick Savini joined the bandwagon saying, "I believe, as well as many students who have been consulted on this issue, that the decision on the time committment should be made at the University level where the philosophy and goals of the University are best understood."

Savini said the proposal, whpch in his interpretation would mean five three-period classes per week for a professor, could mean the end of student faculty relationships beyond the classroom.

The proposal, if passed today, will go before a Joint conference committee consisting of House and Senate education leaders.

Administrators enjoy dorms

By DONALD WILHELM
MDC Staff

The elevator doors opened on the fourth floor of Coolige, and there was a bit of shock on the face of the residents of that floor as they watched its largely middle-aged cargo empty into the corridor. Did the Campus Center Hotel mistakenly book two conventions at once and send the surplus over to Coolidge? Was this a Gray Line tour of Springfield that somehow went awry?

No, this was a ratner novel experiemtn at UMass. Several top-level UMass administrators were spending Thursday night at Coolidge House in Southwest, and at Field House on Orchard Hill. They included Phil Amico, Director of Campus Center Food Services, John Corker, Director of the Campus Center, Ken Dean, the top administrator in charge of Food Service, the Campus Center, and Housing, Mary Anne Purnell, of the Admissions Office, Charlotte Rahaim, on the Chancellor's Special Staff, and Art Warren, Acting Director of Food Service. The men stayed on the fourth floor of Coolidge, the women on the seventh floor of the Field House.

They were shown to their rooms - Ken Dean and John Corker received one of the notorious corner rooms - and were given a grand tour of Coolidge, and, for comparison, John Adams. After getting settled in, these administrators met for four hours straight with many students and discussed university problems. Through previous conversations - they ate with students at Berkshire DC and were available for individual discussion at that time - and through this meeting, many insights were gained on various campus problems.

The administrators were fairly open about various campus problems. The administrators in charge of the Dining Commons said they ate there roughly five times a week, and felt that the food, while admitedly not all that great, was adequate and the best that could be done with the limited funds available. They felt the fact that one-third of the meal ticket goes to pay for the DC buildings and that another third goes to labor, which is pretty high, makes the amount of money actually available for food, and hence makes meals poorer than they could be. Full-time DC employees are state employees, get paid much more than employees of private restaurants, and can't be shifted from one type of job to another. The need for money to pay for the dorms and DC's also necessitates the forced patronage of the DC's and dorms.

The high Campus Center fee was viewed as being the end result of overly idealistic planning that backfired. One-third of the building was going to be a state-funded continuing education center, but a law forbidding the funding of sections of buildings canned that source of funds. The building was expected to be supported by revenue from hotel and conference business, but the legislature forbade the CC from advertising, because it was felt that it should be unfair competion with private enterprise, and hence business, though rising, hasn't been extensive enough to cover CC costs. The architect was in effect told to create and forget about the expense. He forgot, and the building's cost soared several million dollars.

SHOPLIFTING:

CC fee "going up"?

By NICK MACCHIO
MDC Special

Student Attorney General James Pappas says that if nothing is done about shoplifting at the University Store, the Campus Center fee is "going up."

Since the beginning of the semester, he noted, 162 cases of shoplifting at the store have been prosecuted.

In the past, the policy of the store has been not to prosecute undergraduate students in Northampton District Court. Instead those caught stealing have been handed over to the Student Judiciary.

Security personnel at the store do not believe the policy is effective in deterring shoplifters. They feel the fines handed out to offenders are "slaps on the wrist," soon to be forgotten and making no impression on those who may pick up a five-finger discount in the future.

In comparison to the fall semester, there has been a sharp increase in shoplifting, says Security Manager Dave Ferrier. He said this is probably so because books and other items are easier to conceal under bulky winter clothing.

Ferrier employs eight security guards who casually cruise the aisles keeping an eye on student shoppers. "They do a good job, but it's impossible to catch everyone who comes in to steal small items," he said.

According to Glen Rockwell, assistant manager, losses to the store because of shoplifting are incorporated into the inventory shrinkage percentage, which also includes paper errors in bookkeeping and inventory figures.

"At present the store operates with a shrinkage figure below 2 percent, but if the figure goes above that, say to four or five per cent then the store is in serious trouble," Rockwell said.

What will inevitably happen, he says, is that prices in the store will go up, and if that fails to recoup the losses then the Campus Center fee must be raised.

Senate cuts may limit Umies admitted in fall

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
MDC Staff

The state Senate Ways and Means Committee's recommended state budget authorizing $66.4 million for the UMass Amherst campus will "translate into a reduction in the planned number of students to be admitted next year" a "severe reduction in force" according to Warren Gulko, budget director.

The Senate will vote next week on the recommendations, which were made Thuusday.

Gulko is not sure of the impact the new budget will have on next year's enrollment. He said, however, that it will affect last-minute enrollment and mid-year transfer students.

"With this budget, we cannot accept any new students for next year," said Gulko.

The recommended budget, which would mean a 4¼ per dent reduction in personnel new positions which the University requested for Fiscal '75, according to Gulko.

The Administration didn't expect the Committee's recommendations to be so low. They are trying to go through President Wood's office in order to persuade the Senate of the "severe impact" which the budget would have on the Amherst campus.

"We are very concerned about the reduction," said Gulko, "because of the rising cost for all goods and services."

Gulko is not sure how much campus activities will be cut if the Senate approves the recommended budget, although what he said indicates that cutbacks would be necessary.

The Committee's recommendation is $4.1 million less than the $68.5 million which the University requested, and $2.1 million less than the $66.5 million budget approved by the House, The current budget is $62.4 million.

UMass researchers visit African drought site

By PATTY MORIN
MDC Special

During intercession, while most students were devouring home-cooked meals, or skiing down the snow-capped mountains of Vermont, Dr. Ralph Faulkingham of the Department of Anthropology, led a research project in the West African nation of Niger, where people subsist on cooked leaves as a result of the six-year long drought. Others on the project included Linda J. Faulkingham, John Belding, a graduate student in Anthropology and Kitie de Lacoste, an undergraduate Anthropology major.

The research was conducted amont the Hausa-speaking, sedentary farmers of the central part of the country, where Dr. Faulkingham did research in 1968.

"I developed a rapport with the villagers before, so I expected they'd be truthful. They are always hassled by tax collectors and government people," Faulkingham said.

The investigators looked at the totality of drought: declines in rainfall and crop yields, health and nutrition shifts, demographic changes, social and cultural adjustments, and the implications of the international aid and the encapsulating politico-economy of the state.

"The situation right now is very serious," Faulkingham said. "In December and January, just two months after the harvest, some people were going hungry two or three days at a time. The American sorghum which we gave to the people of Niger was being sold at very high prives - $3.60 for a 110 lb. bag, while profits went to pay for some transportation costs, and also to government officials. Niger is the second poorest country in the world, with an average annual adult wage of $45.00."

Research indicates that an ecologic balance exists in the area as a result of the combination of very high fertility (the average number of children born alive to women is nine), with high mortality caused by drought famine, and epidemic diseases.

While studying 75 children aged two years and under, John Belding concluded that the deterioration of health begins usually at six months when food other than breast milk becomes progressively more important. He observed three or four cases where children up to two years old were still breast-feeding and weighed only ten pounds.

"You see pictures, but you just can't believe it until you actually see it," he said.

One of the most shocking experiences that Dr. Faulkingham related, occurred at the end of January. In the middle of interviewing a villager about the number of people in his household, the man's wife emerged from the house, laid a baby in his arms and said, "I think it's dead." And it was.

The annual amount of rainfall is by itself far less important for an adequate crop yield than a good distribution throughout the rainy season of whatever rain does fall. Dr. Faulkingham reported that 1973 yielded almost no grain, as the rains were altogether insufficient both in duration and amount.

The colony of Niger was set up by the French in 1960 even though the area was not in a position either agriculturally or economically, to survive.

When asked what the French were doing to alleviate the situation, Dr. Faulkingham replied, "Nothing ... absolutely nothing, and the people who are callous about it don't realize that the situation was created by the Europeans with the aid of Americans."

Apparently, through A.I.D., The Agency for Internation Development, the United Nations recently funded a project oriented to building deep cement wells to replace the dirt ones, into which people and animals had been falling. Unfortunately, people abandoned the dirt wells completely and concentrated themselves on the few cement wells destroying their usefulness.

Dr. Faulkingham proposes that what is needed is self-help projects independent of economic and political ties, such as Project Relief, a program of the Oxford Famine Relief.

Oxfam, as it is referred to, arranged a benefit concert with Holly Near, Wednesday on the Amherst Common.

As far as family planning goes, Faulkingham thinks that's a decision for the Africans to make.

"I think we should encourage governments to coordinate the economic, agricultural and population policies; if they want high growth, then they should develop the economic and agricultural means to reach self-sufficiency. My way ... get Africans involved in this sort of basic research. Get Americans to support independent relief efforts like Oxfam."

Local efforts help Africans

By THOMAS LINDEMAN

Over $1000 was raised here last week by a variety of volunteer workers collecting funds for Sub-Saharan African famine relief.

Organizing efforts for the Five College area began just two weeks ago, and climaxed with a rally and concert on the Town Common May 1, featuring Hollywood folksinger Holly Near.

The first UMass group to respond to the need was the Southwest Center for Racial Understanding. With aid from Vangie Brookfield and the Southwest Resource Center, volunteers were gathered to put up posters, distribute leaflets, and staff collection tables. About $500 has been raised in Southwest thus far.

Another group of volunteers was pulled together by the United Christian Foundation. Working with people from Hampshire College, posters were distributed across campus and in shopping centers. Fasting was encouraged. A collection table in the Campus Center has brought in over $300 to date.

Other groups began to appear spontaneously. Several persons who attended the April 27 Impeachment Rally in Washington came back and launched their own efforts. One woman, Bobbie Goodin, read of the need in the New York Times and started her own collection center. A local band, Seagull, has invited representatives to speak to their audiences this weekend.

The May 1 Rally with Holly Near resulted in a small but enthusiastic group raising another $150.

Through notices sent out to Five College Religious Workers and area churches, Immanuel Lutheran Church sponsored a fast meal, which raised another $300.

Funds will be distributed through Oxfam-America, a branch of a British organization with over 30 years of experience in working with long-term reclamation programs, and through Project Relief. Local contributions may be taken to the Southwest Center for Racial Understanding, in Moore House, or to the United Christian Foundation, 319 Hampshire House.

Wood suggests three approaches to ret. ed.

University President Robert Wood has suggested three different approaches to provide additional veterinary medicine education in the region in a statement approved last week by the Board of Trustees.

The approaches follow:

1.) To establish contractual agreements with states which have existing schools and which would, in return for established payments, agree to accept specified numbers of New England students each year.

2.) One of the New England states might establish a veterinary school with the understanding that the five other states would establish contractual arrangements for education of their students.

3.) To establish a regionally supported and operated facility.

The presidents of the six New England Land Grant institutions have appointed a task force on veterinary medicine to work with a New England Board of Higher Education advisory committee. They will report to the six New England governors in the fall.

Conte pushes energy research

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
MDC Staff

Declaring it is "imperative that the United States remain on the pinnacle of technology," Representative Silvio O. Conte praised Saturday the past achievements of engineers in the development of the country.

Speaking to the First Annual UMass Engineering Alumni Association Awards luncheon, the Pittsfield Republican also expressed confidence that the current shortage of engineers is only a "temporary phase."

Rep. Conte singled out transportation and energy research as the areas with the greatest potential for technological breakthroughs. Saying that America has depended upon the automobile and other "conventional modes of transportation" for too long, Conte looked to the new developments in this field. Pilot projects in what he called "people movers," such as air-cushioned or magnetic vehicles, were cited as recent developments by engineers.

Conte called upon the engineers to make a "public commitment that would match the Manhattan Project" to make alternative energy souces commercially available. He noted that this was particularly important to New England, which he said depends upon imports for 70 per cent of its heat and power.

Rep. Silvio Conte

As a member of the House Appropriations Committee, Conte said there is a "strong concern within Congress that top priority be given to meeting the energy crisis." He mentioned several energy bills currently in Congress, including one just passed by the House which allocated two-and-a-quarter billion dollars solely for energy research. It was the first time that the House appropriated money for such projects without funding the entire agency at the same time, according to the Congressmen.

Conte blamed disenchantment over the defense establishment, the space program and the environment as major reasons why the engineering fields declined. He noted that people were concerned that technology had polluted the earth, but were unable to clean it up. However, he expressed his belief that the achievement of what he called "our higher goals" would be done "because of-not despite-scientific and technological progress."

Conte presented awards to three members of the UMass Engineering Department, including former Dean George Marston, whom he praised for his "countless contributions" to the school. In doing so, Conte also remarked that much research is occuring at UMass, in such fields as air pollution control, ocean thermal differences and transportation, from which valuable data has been obtained.

"Great Pretenders" mouth off, and pack 'em in

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
MDC Staff

A long line of people were waiting to get in at the door, and Chequers was filled to capacity. The reason — "The Great Pretenders" appeared there this past weekend. One employee said that Chequers is not usually so crowded on weekends "except when they — The Great Pretenders — are playing here."

The Great Pretenders are another one of those acts that attempt to recreate the 1950's on stage, Sha Na Na style. They wear "greaser" hairstyles and pink suits with black trim. Remember those days when "D.A." haircuts and pink shirts with black neckties were de rigeur?...

The Great Pretenders do not actually sing or play musical instruments. Instead, they lip-sync popular oldies-but-goodies. They mouth the words of songs so that it looks like they are really singing. It is well done. If you've had a few drinks, it looks almost realistic.

The songs that the Great Pretenders "perform" include, predictably: "Sixteen Candles", "Chantilly Lace", "Book of Love", "Poison Ivy", etc. The original versions of these songs are used, leaving no doubt in the listener's ears as to what bygone era the Great Pretenders are trying to imitate.

They move around on the stage too, with those highly stylized gestures and posturings that are so typical of pseudo-50's greaser-rock groups. The act looked like it had been practiced for a long time; The Great Pretenders moved with the precision of well oiled mechanical dolls.

There was very little verbal rapport between the group and its audience. It was easy to envision the Great Pretenders performing in an empty room, because nothing about the act would change.

There is nothing original about them. Who do they imitate? Bill Haley and the Comets? Danny and the Juniors? No, they are not a believable copy of anything from the fifties era. They do not even succeed as a parody, much less as an imitation.

The Great Pretenders are more like an imitation of Sha Na Na and similar greaser-type bands. The Great Pretenders imitate the imitators. They are a stereotype image and their act is a series of cliches with no real substance of its own.

Nevertheless, The Great Pretenders have a crowd of faithful followers. Many of the people who waited in line at Chequers were going to watch this act for the second or third time. The Great Pretenders have appeared many times in the five college area during recent weeks.

One wide eyed and adoring fan said that the Great Pretenders "are really, really great" and that they get "a good reaction — everywhere they play." Crowd response to the group was generally very favorable.

There is no doubt that The Great Pretenders do draw business to the establishments where they appear. Saturday night's spectators were mainly of high school and college age. There were many fraternity and sorority persons present.

A lot of people were willing to stand in line for a long time to see the Great Pretenders. Strange but true. There must be something appealing about what the Great Pretenders have to offer for entertainment, but I don't know what it is. Can all of those people be wrong? Go see the Great Pretenders and judge for yourself, if you haven't already.

Freshman enrollment sees women's interests changing

In increase in total freshman applications and some marked changes in traditional patterns - particularly by women applicants - have been reported by William D. Tunis, dean of admissions and records.

A mid-April tally reveals 15,504 applications for the 3600 places in the 1974 freshman class - an increase of 1.6 per cent over last year's total of 15,265.

Applications by women in such non-traditional areas as business and engineering, however, show increases as high as 75 per cent. In the School of Business Administration, for example, freshman applications by women are up from 163 to 233, or 42.9 per cent. Male applications in the same school are up from 1229 to 1418, a jump of 15.4 per cent. The total percentage increase for the school is 18.6 percent.

This year 56 women have applied as freshmen to the School of Engineering, an increase of 75 percent over last year's 32. The total for men is up 26.2 percent, giving the school a total increase percentage of 28.

Tunis attributes the larger number of applications in non-traditional areas by women to the emphasis placed on career opportunities by the University's admissions staff when they visited high school guidance counselors last fall.

The largest increase in applications is in the College of Food and Natural Resources, but this is due in part to the incorporation of most School of Home Economics courses in the College. applications to the College of Arts and Sciences remained about the same, and there were small decreases in health related areas such as nursing, physical education and health science.

"It is interesting to note that our academic profile has not changed much over the past decade, and our entering freshmen still average in the top 14-15 percent of their high school class."

Transfer applications numbered more than 4100 this year, an increase of nearly three percent over last year. The Massachusetts Community College System will provide the greatest percentage of the 2000 transfer students who will be enrolled next fall, according to Tunis.

Appley says Clark U could profit from 5 College contact

Mortimer H. Appley, former dean of the graduate school here and president-elect of Clark University, says the Worcester school might benefit from the Amherst "five college experience."

Appley will become Clark's sixth president July 1.

"I'm not out to make Clark a part of the state education system," he said, "but I think we (Clark) can profit from the Amherst experience and even do it better."

Appley told the Worcester Sunday Telegram that he is leaving his UMass tenured position because he wanted to be "part of the effort to keep private institutions alive."

He said that he also wanted a more "comprehensible environment than the one here. I ran (at UMass) a large amorphous empire. I really wanted something I could get my hands on, get involved in."

Appley says UMass President Robert Wood wants the UMass medical school in Worcester to enter into an arrangement with Clark to share some programs and facilities.

"Ideally a medical school should be located on campus," said Appley. "The medical school needs support facilities which we (Clark) can give them. In the end both Clark and the med school will profit by saving money and duplicated efforts in the biological sciences and humanities."

Appley is presently commuting to Europe as part of his year-long Fulbright Fellowship in Germany where he is making an intensive study of the foreign student program in that country.

Appley will become the first Jewish of Clark University but says he attaches more importance in the fact that he is the second psychologist president of Clark.

Appley was at the home of the U.S. ambassador in Berlin when he was notified he was selected to become Clark's president.

Administrators live in, and "enjoy"!

problems with Physical Plant - no weekend maintenance of dorms, the long delays between requesting and getting work done - were pinned mainly on the lack of money available for these activities. Administrators sympathize with student complaints, but felt there wasn't much they could do without more money. Other problems discussed included minority and women admissions and the lack of weekend dining facilities.

But this experience wasn't completely one of solemn discussion of problems. After the meeting, all of the administrators and students adjourned to the Cooledge 4th Floor lounge, where dancing and informal conversation became the main activities. Both students and administrators were struck by how well they got along with each other - they even danced and got drunk together. One evidence of how well things went was that administrators and students weren't asleep until 4:30 a.m.

I asked John Corker, Director of the Campus Center, what he felt about his night in a corner room on a co-ed floor in Coolidge. He said, "I've had experience working at other state universities. I felt the facilities were only satisfactory. The noise is a problem - you can't escape it, due to the close, crowded dorms here in Southwest. I was impressed by the good-naturedness of the students, however and I enjoyed the experience. It's too bad that many of the administrators who need new insights on students the most wouldn't participate in the program."

Mary Anne Purnell, of the Admissions Office, spent her night on an all-women corridor on the 7th floor of Field House. She said, "I liked the room, and the quiet of the floor. If I was going to school now, I'd enjoy living there. I enjoyed the interaction of the students, with the administrators and I felt it was very valuable for explaining what UMass is like to prospective students. It also helped increase my personal understanding of UMass quite a bit."

Peter French, Counselor and Peer Sex Counselor on the 4th floor of Coolidge, and Marcia Lovell, of Field House got the whole thing together and had a good time at it. The event as a project for a psychology course, and the professor took part in the discussion.

The administrators felt that they gained a lot of knowledge about student life and student problems, insight they felt they would never get sitting behind a desk and coping with everyday management problems. They enthusiastically endorsed the idea of making this a frequent event.

No change since 1946

House may reform committees

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Democrats vote this week on whether to accept proposals to reform the House committee system for the first time in 28 years in hopes of making it more responsive to public needs.

The majority party votes Thursday on whether to accept the reforms or refer them to another committee, effectively scuttling them for a time. Approval by the Democrats would be tantamount to House passage.

The "Committee Reform Amendments of 1974" resolution is in trouble, however, since it tinkers with the power structure which Democrats control. For that reason Republicans generally support it.

Not since the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 has anyone come up with a serious plan for restructuring the House committee system where the real legislative spadework of Congress is done and bills are fashioned to attract a majority of votes on the House floor.

Speaker Carl Albert set the machinery in motion early in 1973 and the House created a 10-member committee, five from each party, which was headed by Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., a 26-year veteran who is considered the leading expert on House procedures and rules.

Democrats debated the Bolling proposal for two days in a party caucus last week, and Thursday will caucus again to vote on a move by Rep. Philip Burton, D-Calif., to refer the whole resolution to another study committee for further "refinement."

"We must make Congress and particularly its committee system, more responsive to the public's needs," said Bolling, in fighting for his committee's resolution in the caucus debate.

In capsule, the Bolling committee proposals would create major and minor committee categories and limit the number of committees on which congressmen could serve at one time. Some jurisdictions would be transfered and the Education and Labor Committee would be split. Proxy votes would be banned in committees and the minority membership would be assured on third of a committee's funding.

Haig claims Watergate inquiry creates 'injustice'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — White House Chief of Staff Alexander M. Haig said yesterday the Watergate inquiry may be creating "injustice, excesses and distortions which in effect result in the cure being worse than the illness."

Haig said the White House-edited transcripts of President Nixon's Watergate conversations contain "very, very few deletions." He also indicated Nixon would release no more tapes or documentary evidence to Watergate and impeachment investigators.

He said he approved of Nixon's refusal to allow him to testify last week before the Senate Watergate committee and suggested that would be the standard for White House aides from now on. He said last summer's parade of White witnesses before the Senate panel was "an exception" to the doctrine of excutive privilege.

"At what point in the review of wrongdoing does the review itself involve injustice, excesses and distortions which in effect result in the cure being worse than the illness itself."

Nixon speech lowered rating, poll shows

PRINCETON, N.J. [AP] — Forty-two per cent of the people who watched, heard or read about President Nixon's televised Watergate speech last week came away with a less favorable opinion of the chief executive than before, according to a special Gallup poll.

Seventeen per cent of those polled said they had a more favorable opinion of Nixon after the speech and subsequent released of the edited Watergate transcripts; 35 per cent said their opinion stayed the same; and 6 per cent said they had no opinion.

The poll showed 44 per cent of those contacted believe there is enough evidence for impeachment - trial by the Senate. Forty-two per cent said there was not enough evidence.

Kissinger in Jordan to continue talks

AMMAN, Jordan [AP]- Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger flew here yesterday and his Soviet counterpart Andrei Gromyko arrived in Syria in an apparently coordinated effort to end the fighting in the Golan Heights.

Artillery duels on the Israeli-Syrian cease-fire line continued yesterday but Israeli Information Minister Shimon Peres expressed guarded optimism the fighting might subside "in another day."

American officials had said Kissinger won an agreement from Syria on Saturday to slow down the 55-day-old Golan fighting.

Kissinger arrived in Jordan yesterday afternoon after extended talks with Israeli leaders. He was expected to talk to King Hussein about the Palestinians, the Geneva peace talks and Israeli-Jordanian disengagement.

Peres said Israel had amde a re-evaluation "of our current position" after the latest round of talks with Kissinger, and observers understood this as a hint Israel might modify its refusal to surrender any territory taken from Syria in 1967.

The Israeli government met yesterday to discuss compromise proposals but a spokesman said no decision had been reached.

Mitterrand is French victor

PARIS [UPI] — Francois Mitterrand, the candidate of a leftist coalition including Communists, ran first yesterday in the French presidential election but computer predictions said he would fall short of an absolute majority and face Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing in a run-off May 19.

At 9:18 p.m. 4:18 p.m. EDT, more than three hours after most polls closed, results were as follows:

Francois Mitterrand, 1,929,156 votes, 41.6 per cent.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing, 1,489,702 votes, 32.1 per cent.

Jacques Chaban-Delmas 783,630 votes, 16.9 per cent.

Others: 432,774 votes, 9.3 per cent.

Total votes: 4,635,262.

The electorate totals some 30 million and the computer projections said Mitterrand would wind up with 43.5 per cent against 32.5 per cent for Giscard d'Estaing. Chaban Delmas, the official Gaullist candidate, was given only 14.5 per cent.

Georges Marchais, secretary-general of the Communist Party, said: "Mitterrand is way ahead of other candidates. The strong popular swell which surpasses by one million the left-wing vote in the 1973 parliamentary election, shows the Frenchmen's desire for true change.

Vietnam and Cambodia find only desperation in 'truce'

An AP News Analysis

SAIGON [AP] — Fifteen months after an agreement was signed to end the war in Vietnam, there is no peace - in Vietnam or in neighboring Cambodia.

The battlefields of Vietnam and Cambodia are as turbulent and bloody as ever and troubles - economic, political and military - continue to mount.

There is a prevailing desperation among the people. The young say there is no future: they are put into a meat grinder that hasn't stopped since the cease-fire agreement was signed Jan. 27, 1973.

Official Saigon command statistics show nearly 100,000 South Vietnamese killed, wounded and missing since the cease-fire began, nearly 60,000 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong claimed killed.

In Cambodia, 40,000 people - half of them children - are surrounded and cut off by insurgents, more than a score dying or being wounded each day as the Khmer Rouge tighten their ring around Longvek, 25 miles north of Phnom Penh.

Their desperation is evident as they try to scramble onto the few hovering Cambodian helicopters that dare to land, hurling themselves inside, a last minute grasp to hang onto the skids, dangling from the air as the aircraft takes off.

Whites in Mozambique fear change in rulers

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique [UPI]-Thousands of European settlers chanting slogans met on the steps of city hall yesterday to urge the new military junta in Lisbon to continue the African policies of the deposed Portuguese dictatorship.

The rally by an estimated 5,000 people was part of a burgeoning white reaction to last month's military coup in Portugal. The junta has promised to end more than a decade of guerrilla war in Portugal's African colonies of Mozambique, Angola and Guinea.

Yesterday's demonstration at the colonnaded city hall was organized by a right-wing group calling itself FICO-The Front for Independence and Western Continuity.

Loosely translated in Portuguese, the acronym means "I stay."

The all-white crowd sang, chanted and shouted the slogan "Mozambique, our land until death," but there were no incidents with the armed police nearby or left-wing groups which marched through the city Saturday.

Many of the estimated 200,000 Portuguese settlers in Mozambique have expressed fear that the new regime in Portugal will abandon them by granting independence to its african colonies or reaching what they consider an unfavorable agreement with FRELIMO-the black guerrilla organization operating in the territory.

5 killed in India

NEW DELHI [UPI] – Hindus and Moslems, fought each other with guns, stones and firebombs yesterday in rioting in the old section of New Delhi. Police said at least five people were killed but eyewitnesses said the toll was higher.

Police said they opened fire on surging mobs and threw teargas only after charges with bamboo staves proved ineffective.

Ambulances sped through the Sadar Bazar section of old Delhi to evacuate an undetermined number of wounded including two high police officials and 10 firemen who suffered gunshot wounds while trying to extinguish fires set by looters.

The embattled market area was placed under a dusk-to-dawn curfew and ten companies of the border security force were ordered in to back up regular police. The army was also placed on alert.

Calley goes to court

COLUMBUS, Ga. [AP] – Lt. William L. Caaley Jr., convicted of slaying 22 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, will appear in federal court today to hear arguments for and against returning him to confinement.

The hearing will be held before U.S. District Court Judge J. Robert Elliott, who freed Calley in February on his own recognizance in lieu of $1,000 bond.

Government attorneys have petitioned the court to revoke his bail, maintaining it is unprecedented for a military prisoner to be granted bail.

Art thief sought

DUBLIN [UPI] – Police launched a manhunt yesterday for an Irish Republican Army leader allegedly involved in the world's biggest robbery following recovery of all $20 million worth of paintings, apparently undamaged.

Police transferred the 19 masterpieces to Dublin yesterday from the rented cottage where they were found Saturday. They questioned the woman who was renting the cottage, Dr. Rose Bridget Dugdale, 33.

N.H. teachers out

PLAISTOW, N.H. [UPI] – By a 3-1 margin, voters in the Timberlane regional school district Saturday night endorsed their school board's decision to break off negotiations with 92 striking teachers.

With nearly half of the registered voters taking part, the vote was 1,780 for and 589 against.

The teacher's union, which has been on strike for 10 weeks, called a meeting for 1 p.m. yesterday to decide what action to take.

The teachers have been demanding a master contract, but the school board refused to grant it, and said there was no purpose to be served by further negotiations.

District schools have remained opened using substitute teachers since the strike began.

Drivers speed up with crisis over

AP NEWS SPECIAL

Americans generally are ignoring the nationwide 55 mile-an-hour speed limit imposed to save gasoline, but they are driving more slowly than they did before the energy crisis, an Associated Press survey shows.

The AP sent reporters in the 48 contiguous states to drive on the highways on May 1, keeping at a steady 55 m.p.h. pace. In all but a handful of states, drivers whizzed by cars traveling at the legal limit.

Authorities say the number of speeding tickets is up. Troopers in Oregon and Texas say they've made more than twice as many arrests for speeding this spring than they did last year.

Accidents and traffic deaths are down. The National Safety Council says traffic deaths this March were 25 per cent lower. Some states reported that the fatality rate had been cut in half.

The average speed of cars in most areas covered by the AP survey was between 65 and 70 m.p.h., above the legal limit but below the rate motorists used to travel when the legal limit was 70 m.p.h.

An AP road check in January showed that motorists in states which lowered their speed limit before the deadline were obeying the law, driving at about 55 m.p.h.

The latest survey indicates however, that the growing availability of fuel has made motorists careless about conservation.

The survey gave this report for Massachusetts:

MASSACHUSETTS: Very few motorists are driving at 55 m.p.h.; most seem to be going a maximum of 65 m.p.h. - the same as before the speed limit was lowered. A state police spokesman said the impact of the energy crisis "has kind of worn off now" and driving speeds are "just about back to normal."

Flood victims clean up; cite need for hydro plant

FORT KENT, Maine [UPI]-There was a foot of mud in the lobby of the Fort Kent Hotel yesterday as weary citizens continued a massive clean-up effort in the wake of disastrous floods which ravaged this northern Maine community for five days.

"There's still a lot of work to do," said Paul Marquis of the Civil Defense Office. "This just better not happen again, people have had it."

A six-mile long ice jam on the St. John River let go last week spilling tons of water, mud and debris into the town. Almost miraculously, no one was injured. By yesterday, the river had receded and was still subsiding. What has not subsided however, is the bitterness felt by townspeople.

Citizens are angry about environmentalists' pledges to stop the proposed Dickey-Lincoln project, which would dam up the St. John to create hydroelectric power. Officials here believe it would also help prevent the floods which ravaged the town every spring.

"Iv'e heard about the 'Friends of the St. John River'," said Marquis. "Well, they're not our friends, In fact, the way we feel is if they ever come up here, they won't leave alive."

The Friends of the St. John a coalition of some 15 environmental groups, was formed last week just before the floods began. Their timing was unfortunate. Town leaders have not tried to hide their fury at attempts to stop the project.

"If you happen to see any conservationists down your way," Fort Kent Civil Defense Director Condy Lizotte said, "send them up here - we'll make hamburger out of them. I don't see any of them up here mopping up."

Sen. Edmund Muskie toured the stricken area over the weekend and promised to do what he could to procure federal help to build a system of dikes that town fathers believe would help check the floods until the Dickey-Lincoln Project could be completed. But Muskie warned not to count on the project.

"Environmental arguments against the dam have been raised before and should be raised again and talked about in public before the issue is decided, Muskie said.

Gov. Kenneth Curtis visited the area Friday and was less cautious. "I feel more confident of Dickey-Lincoln now than I did five years ago," Curtis said. "If it hadn't been for Congress and some of these other groups we could have had it on the line by now and maybe prevented some of this."

Ecologists oppose the project because they say it would damage much of the beautiful wilderness area in the Allagash-St. John area. The townpeople however, point out that they are the ones who have to live with the terror of the flooding.

Curtis has declared the region a disaster area and applied to the White House for Federal Disaster Relief Funds. Townspeople suffered more than $3 million worth of damage to their homes and businesses. "We need the funds and we'd be happy to get them," said Marquis.

Cell Block Theatre

By DOROTHY MULLER
MDC Staff

I live in a dungeon am provided for by the state
my home houses many men 800 as of this date
we were all put here for allegedly committing a crime society tries to reform us by making us do some time society must be blind or otherwise they'd see that they'll never break our spirit our earnest desire to be free.

On May 5, 1973 Clarence Rhea, number 41250, of Bordentown prison wrote the poem which opened the Saturday's performance of Cell Block Theatre. Cell Block is a volunteer group of professional theatre artists of convicts and ex-convicts who conduct touring poetry presentations "of a sound so quite...to hear it, you have to come through prison gates and listen, to men decay..."

Although the group receives no money from the Federal Government "because it sounds frivolous when we tell them we're theatre people," the Rockefeller Foundation and the New Jersey Council on the Arts along with private donations enable the troup to show audiences that "ex-cons are still folks. We're not here as freaks!"

Cell Block takes actual inmates out of prison for performances who return to the prison that night. They feel they are supplying the added dimension to what's missing in the rehabilitation programs. They make the inmate, the ex-convict and particularly the audience face the reality of the prison experience. "People are treated as objects. Why teach a man a trade ignoring those years he's been through. It isn't going to work."

"It seems like the rehabilitation program isn't worth shit!" Most of the Federal money is sent to so-called visible programs teaching people trades they can't use. "Send a rapist to class, put him in a college education program and what have you got? An educated rapist... Why train a guy as a barber when he can't be licensed when he gets out?"

One actor spent five months in a government drug rehabilitation program. "It just made me feel like I'm a thumbtack on the wall or a piece of dirt on the floor."

"Guys in prison don't ask for much; decent food, proper medical care, no mice. Don't knock me in the head, kick me in the corner and throw me in a strip cell. Do something for me while I'm here!"

Mike Dalakian, a former ex-convict who addressed the audience said, "I'm proud of these people but I'm not proud of you! You're doing more and worse time. We've done something with our lives. We don't need you! But there are kids out there who do. Do something!"

Yesterday, someone smiled at me.

Yesterday, I heard the word 'hello' said to me.

Yesterday, I felt the warmth of a helping hand.

Yesterday, I was free.

WMUA Interviews AFSC's Johnson

Tonight at 10 p.m., WMUA (91.1 FM) will broad cast an interview with Russell Johnson, New England program director for the American Friends Service Committee, concerning continued American military and economic involvement in Southeast Asia.

The hour-long interview is being presented as a special feature of "Focus."

Mosakowski interviewed Johnson following his return last month from an extensive tour of South Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Thailand, the Philippines, and several other Asian nations.

Exhibition extension

Because of the popularity of the exhibition "The Graphics and Sculpture of Valerie Maynard" The Black Cultural Center announces an extension of the show until May 31 so that the entire community will have a chance to view the works of this talented artist. Gallery hours are Monday - Friday, 11 a.m. - 6 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday, 2 - 6 p.m.

The Steering Committee of New Africa House is presently soliciting proposals for the operation of the New Africa House Barber Shop for 1974-75. All proposals should be addressed to the Steering Committee, New Africa House, University of Mass.

Collegian elitist, insensitive, self-indulgent, wrong

By ROBERT S. MCDONNELL

Well, well, we have finally found what "...the majority of the editors of the Collegian" is good at, namely, putting on concerts! They must, since they profess to be able to judge the faults of concert production at UMass and, since it is obvious that they do not know very much about newspaper production (it is true that there is a corrections column Editor?), it's safe to assume that the editorial of 4-24 reflects the concerted (pun intended) ability (or lack of it) on the Collegian staff.

I originally intended that this be a biting sarcastic editorial rebuttal, but the whole topic of concert programming is to expensive and significant to be treated facetiously! The "...majority of the Board of Editors of the Collegian" believes that a variety of defects exist within the staff and structure of Concert Committee.

Well, the Collegian is absolutely, categorically and entirely wrong in its observations, implications, inferences, attitudes and conclusions. Reid Fishman dealt with the particulars of Concert Committee last Thursday so my comments will be directed toward the Collegian. For the past seven months, I have been directly involved with much of the programming which has occurred on Campus and within the Campus Center-Student Union. The Program Council has sponsored and produced a wide range of events during the past year. Do you know that UMass had the 5th nationally ranked amateur bowler in the country (sponsored by Program Council)? Do you know that UMass was the site of the first public appearance for "Creative Consciousness" a group of ex-convicts performing in concert on behalf of their brothers in NorfolkPrison (sponsored by Program Council)? Do you know who brought Pearl Bowser to the Third World Women's Film Festival or Carolyn Rodgers, Marge Peircy and Sonja Sanchez to the EVerywoman's National Poetry Festival? Every above item was sponsored by Program Council with student money. But few people know it because the Collegian is too involved with recruitment ads, UPI and staff editorials to note that the news of significance to its readership is being ignored. Program Council (and the same is true of Concert Committee) has gone to extremes to get the information out through the campus media and, though we have had fine cooperation from WMUA, we have also met with little or no cooperation and sometimes absolute resistance from the staff members of the Collegian. Interviews have been given to a variety of reporters, assistant news editors, news editors, issue editors, managing editors, executive editors, etc. Press releases have been submitted on a number of occasions on a variety of topics, including every one of the previous examples. Unfortunately, at no time have any of these items appeared in print. Our efforts are dependent upon the support and assistance of the Collegian but it has NEVER been given! What has become true for us, has become true for others too. Many other programming groups have found themselves shut out from the printed media. This view is shared by representatives of Third World Council, Everywomen's Center, DVP, Concert Committee and even certain staff members of the Collegian. And this particular reflection of self indulgence is matched by others. The most recent editorial, like other articles was poorly researched.

Mr. Fishman was the only representative of the*Collegian* to talk to any member of Concert Committee. I am reminded that Gary Gomes saw fit to print a column on programming weeks ago which was totally inaccurate. He even defended his actions by saying to me that it was worth deliberately printing misinformation because it stirred things up! I can only observe that the editorial philosophy at the Collegian seems to be that only Collegian staff members are allowed to produce news stories and that inaccurate Collegian articles are better than accurate ones from outside sources.

The accusations about wastefulness on Concert Committee could and should be made against the Collegian and the Senate would be well advised to (1) expand their investigation of Collegian finances to include how the needs and desires of the readers of the Collegian are being served and (2) demand that a restructuring and reorientation occur so that elitist, insensitive attitude of the Collegian be terminated!

Robert S. McDonnell is the Chairperson of the Program Council.

Letters to the editor

Awareness, no nit picking

To The Editor:

I would like to correct two errors made in the article on the Chinese Students Association. One is because of a recent change, and the other, perhaps because of a misunderstanding.

*First, the Japanese-American Club has changed its name to Japan-America Club, because it is made up mostly of Japanese foreign students and those other students who are interested in Japan, not Japanese-Americans. Second, the Asian-American Student Association is not a "local association of American-Chinese"; it is an associan of Asian-*American students and anyone ELSE who may be interested in the Asian-American and promoting understanding of the Asian's situation in this country.

It may seem like I'm nit-picking, but there is a need for increased awareness of the differences among Asian groups on this campus. We are related in being Asian, but each group has its own function.

Time to cut out the fat

To The Editor:

Jerry Lund, in his article concerning a serious budget cut at UMass, asserts that such a cut "would seriously damage public education." I am forced to take issue with that statement.

Student programs such as Everywoman's Center, BDIC, Afro-American Cultural activities, and many similarly ridiculous additions to the University's curriculum, would perhaps be cut either in part or altogether. It's about time! Such programs have no place in an institution of higher education. As for the cut in the acquisition of books for the library, it is clear that no more are needed. Residential College programs also face serious curtailments in funding, but once more I must say that it is about time. Most of the colloquium courses are geared toward the remedial basketweaving and elementary organic gardening variety of student.

This leads to one of my stronger points which is the possible cutback in the number of admissions to UMass, thereby further relieving pressure on the scant financial aid resources available. I must concur with President Wood of UMass in his endorsement of the Governor's Economic Opportunity Program which permits poorer students an alternative to UMass. After all, it's high time that State schools cease their glut of funds, for as President Wood has stated, "a number of private schools are in great financial difficulty."

Mr. Lund also states that graduate students and TA's face significant cutbacks in financial aid. While a reduction in the number of teaching assistantships might considerably increase the size of many classes and the workload of the T.A.'s, perhaps the assistants, though I doubt it, might finally Earn their $45 a week and above salaries.

In conclusion, I urge the graduate and undergraduate student population to support Chancellor Bromery, President Wood, and the State Legislature in their combined efforts to trim away a meager few million dollars of fat from this institution's budget.

Student input important; Moriarty right

To The Editor:

I would like to respond to Ms. Moriarty's letter appearing in the Collegian Monday, April 29, both personally and in my capacity as Chairman of the Department of Anthropology.

Personally, I feel that participation by students [both graduate students and undergraduates] is essential to the proper functioning of the decision-making machinery of the Department. Therefore, I welcome as broad-based student representation as is appropriate. I recognize that this opinion is not universally shared among the faculty of the University or within the Department of Anthropology. However, we are here not primarily to maintain our status as professionals but to broaden the perspectives of our students and-or to train them for their own eventual professional status. Although the "and-or" does present some perennial problems, it seems clear to me that our clientel is entitled to some [not all] say in important departmental decisions. I feel that Ms. Moriarty's letter was in part justified, not on the basis of the sentiment expressed by a few faculty members that student input was irrelevant and unimportant.

As Department Chairman, I would like to clarify what I think is a misrepresentation of fact [but perhaps not of the total situation]. In its meeting of April 22, the Department of Anthropology voted not [as the letter says] "to wipe out student representation and input into departmental affairs," but that: Under no circumstances would any student have access to faculty personnel files, except those of job applicants; or to files of other students, including those of graduate applicants.

Students will still be represented on committees and their opinions sought. It can be argued [and is being] whether or not it is appropriate to allow these students access to personnel information that is denied to faculty colleagues not on the committee. This is an issue that is still being pursued actively within the Department by undergraduates, graduate students and faculty. While no single solution will satisfy all, we can hope that by open discussion and the airing of different positions we can maintain communication and understanding within the Department of Anthropology — and continue to provide an atmosphere in which all can learn from each other.

Thomas M. Fraser, Jr.
Chairman
Department of Anthropology

Abbot wrong, course guide "inspired"

To The Editor:

After reading Richard Abbott's letter to the Editor condemning the "adds at the front and back and the quotations sprinkled throughout" the Course Description Guide for "being used to impose the women's movement on people looking for courses," I fearfully and timidly decided to see for myself what my fellow sex had done.

After looking at the front page and back page several times I finally found one — Virginia Woolf saying that a fiction writer must write in a "woman-manly" or a "man-womanly" way in order to have her-his thoughts "grow in the minds of others," instead of writing purely as a woman or purely as a man, because then the writer has a "conscious bias" which "ceases to be fertilized" and is "doomed to death." Well, that's what I have always privately thought. What a revelation and relief to read Virginia Woolf saying it.

After several minutes of this, I remembered why I had begun to read the Guide in the first place — Abbott's condemnation. Why were they so fatal to him? To me they are the most significant part of the Guide. Perhaps that is where their fault lies...they are addictive...one may not be able to pass-up the boxed paragraphs that help to fill the page evenly. They made me remember how little this society accomodates women, and that made me remember that women are the only ones who can make it change, because the men who have made decisions for us certainly don't consider it in their interest to change things.

There are so few courses and places in this university that encourage women to reach for the stars. And if you believe that, as I do, then you would be well pleased to find encouragement to women so thoughtfully presented in the Course Description Guide, right when it is needed — when women are choosing courses. Congratulations to those young women on the cover and back, and to the women who were "inspires" to include those pictures and quotations.

Time to move

My favorite pair of pants was a battered, gray, non-permanent press affair with huge pockets that I got while driving my milk route for Hood's.

I wore them about 185 times a year, and they fit perfectly and were the most comfortable garments known to man.

But they finally wore out, got a little too small to button, and now my cat uses them as bed in the cellar back home.

The Collegian used to be like that, kind of ragged, not too stiff, and real comfortable. It wore well.

Now the fit is a little too big, and the material a little too stiff, so it's time we parted company.

It's been great fun, and hopefully started me off on a career. So I'd like to close out by saying thanks to a lot of people, like: Mike Gregory, John Marciniec, Steve Tripoli, Ben Hamblin, Jim Lally, John Hildreth, Mike Campo, Bob Olivier, Steve Bloom, Mike Archdeacon, Denis Burke, John Harrington, Paul Holleran, Eric Johannesen, Kevin Chandler, Les Horne, Howie Poulten, John Binkoski, Kevin Conners, Alison Climo, Chick Rheault, Jim Lynch, Pat Keenan, Mike Ellis, Steve Nims, Brian Mulcahy, John Muse, Jim Pappas, David Booker, Rick Savini, Paul Hamel, Linda Craven, Karen Lynch, Bill Densmore, Don Bishop, Bob Scheier, Sharon Hughes, Howard Ziff, Ted Nielsen, Tom Bohn, John, Tim Meyer, Al Oickle, Earle Barroll, Marty Kelley, Mike Brophy, Annmarie Griffin, Cindy Gonet, Joan Fassnacht, Steve Crowe, Judi Cohen, Steve Walczak, and Betty, Chuck Schnider, Ted Pettine, Joanne Perlis, Bill Manburg, Gib Fullerton, Alan Chapman, Dean Tucker, Bob Estelle, Jack Canniff, Russ Kidd, Joe and John Kiah, Dick MacPherson, Jack Leaman, Steve DeCosta, Nathan Gorenstein, Dave Eibel, Dan Kamal, Steve Ruggles, Larry Carpman, Jud Sparling, Barbara Voorhees, Elaine Stoegel, Arlene Peltola, Gary Castaline, Bill Gillen, Russ Small, Paul Allan, Tom Kolodjieczak, Avis Yuni, Jim Gold, Ed Bryant, Dick Howland, Don McGilvray, Chris Dillard, Fred Gosiewski, B.J. Last week the President tried to put something over on the American public. As usual, it didn't work. He went on television, complete with props, and stated his intention to release to the Judiciary Committee, and to the public, the transcripts of taped White House conversations relating to Watergate. He never mentioned, of course, that the House subpoena had specified that the tapes themselves should be released. This fact alone, it seems to me, demonstrates the President's attitude that he is so far above the law, that he can go on television and flaunt the fact. The President, in all his staged and twisted glory, was admitting to the country that he was knowledgeably disregarding a lawful subpoena. Unbelievable!

The President read selected passages, from the transcripts, on the air, directly challenging John Dean's credibility. Of course the passages were selected by the President, and read by him in the manner in which we are to believe they were said originally. Some statements, to be sure, could change meaning altogether, simply by changing the accent on certain words, such as "but it would be wrong." If said one way, it can be construed to mean, "sure it's wrong, but so what?"

It's interesting to remember that, a few months ago, Nixon stated that he could not release tapes or transcripts to the public, because it would embarrass the people who had given advice to the President. Also, it would serve to challenge the testimony of a witness, in this case Dean, and that, according to the President, would be improper, outside of court. Well, it seems that Mr. Nixon no longer feels that these things are worth worrying about. In fact, portions of the tapes are pretty embarrassing, especially the talk concerning Lyndon Johnson, and the Kennedys. They are also embarrassing to the little old lady in Podunk, who was shocked to see that the President cursed a lot. Personally, I'd hate to think of the deletions in a Lyndon Johnson tape.

But should the President take comfort in the release of the transcripts? Do they in fact prove his innocence of either knowing about the Watergate break in, the cover up, or the payment of hush money? In short, why is this man smiling? Depending on your point of view, the transcripts can serve to either show the President in a good light, or just deepen the suspicion even more. There is room for doubt in most of the conversations, and that alone is an indictment of Nixon, not the people who have read the words. The hazy areas are too many, and the clear cut areas are too few. The transcripts do give us a good indication of the atmosphere of the White House, and a slight insight into the character of the President. The Oval Office was definitely concerned with limiting the testimony of the "operatives," at the lower rung of the ladder. Even the most objective person in the country can see that. There was definitely concern that these individuals would blackmail the White House into granting them executive clemency or money. All this, and yet the President can maintain his innocence, and straightfacedly.

Since Nixon took the liberty of quoting a few lines of the transcripts, I feel as though I can too. These are from March 21.

Dean: "...Hunt has now made a direct threat against Ehrlichman. As a result of this, this is his blackmail. He says, "I will bring John Ehrlichman down to his knees and put him in jail. I have done enough seemy things for he and Krogh, they'll never survive it." And later:

Dean: "...Mrs. Hunt was the savviest woman in the world. She had the whole picture together."

And about the money:

Pres: "How much money do you need?"

Dean: "I would say these people are going to cost a million, over the next two years."

Pres: "We could get that. On the money, if you need the money you could get that. You could get a million dollars. I know where it could be gotten. It is not easy, but it could be done. But the question is, who would handle it. Any ideas on that?"

Dean: "That's right. Well, I think that is something that Mitchell should be charged with."

Pres: "I would think so too."

Dean: "And get the pros to help him."

A few lines later:

Pres: "What do you think? You don't need a million right away, but you need a million. Is that right?"

Dean: "That is right."

Pres: "You need it in cash, don't you? I am just thinking out loud here for a moment. Would you put that through the Cuban Committee?"

Dean: "No."

Pres: "It is going to be checks, cash money, etc. How, if that ever comes out, are you going to handle it? Is the Cuban Committee an obstruction of justice, if they want to help?"

Dean: "Well, they have interests in it."

Pres: "Just looking at the immediate problem, don't you have to handle Hunt's financial situation damn soon?"

Dean: "I think, that is — I talked with Mitchell about that last night and —."

Pres: "It seems to me we have to keep the cap on the bottle that much, or we don't have any options."

Dean: "That's right."

Pres: "Either that or it all blows right now?"

Dean: "That's the question."

As I said, it is the atmosphere that is apalling. Does this sound like a President who has been shaking up his staff to come to the truth, or does it sound like a man willing to contemplate measures to keep "the cap on the bottle?" The only positive thing about the transcripts is that the White House was scared, very sacred, and that the President curses a lot. That's another example of the tension in that office. Of course that's my opinion, and it just could be that Nixon is simply a (expletive deleted), which is my opinion as well.

Survey opinion on athletics

In the wake of the recent decision of the Athletic Department to terminate the contract of Men's Gymnastics Coach Tom Dunn at the conclusion of the 1974-75 season, there are certain issues which have cropped up which potentially have more importance to the student body of this university as a whole.

The athletic budget of this university is composed of in part (approximately 26 per cent) by the athletic fee of thirty dollars which every undergraduate pays every year. Of those thirty dollars, six go towards the payment on the debt of Alumni Stadium.

The athletic fee has remained stable at 15 dollars a semester since 1961 while every other fee has gone up. For example, the health fee which was 30 dollars in the spring of 1970 had risen to 38.50 by the fall of 1973, an increase of 28 per cent. Yet the athletic fee has remained stable for thirteen years and will probably remain stable unless certain parties decide otherwise.

During the sixties, when enrollment increased yearly, the Athletic Department could always count on increased revenues from students, but as UMass has reached a growth rate of zero, the athletic fee is now woefully inadequate to cover the rising costs of funding athletics on this campus and cannot even battle on even terms with the specter of inflation.

It is obvious that something must be done.

The Collegian feels that a survey should be taken as soon as possible, perhaps under the auspices of the Student Senate, to gauge students' feelings on athletics in general and the fee in particular.

Furthermore, it has been pointed out in many quarters recently that of all the fees which students pay, the athletic fee is the only one which is not controlled by students. In other words, the students have no say in how their money is spent.

The Collegian feels that this must change and do so starting with the budget for fiscal 1975 which will come out in the middle of May.

If the athletic fee was raised, students must have the right to say how these extra funds would be used. If the students chose to use extra funds to rehire Tom Dunn, or expand the intramural program, or grant more funds to club teams like the men's and women's crew team is really not the crux of the matter.

The most important thing is that the students have control over student monies. That would only be logical and democratic.

There's no easy way for Charlie Nelson to become Dr. Nelson.

But there is a way to make it somewhat easier. Our way. The Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program. It won't soften the demands of your professors, or those you make upon yourself —but it may free you from those financial problems which, understandably, can put a crimp in your concentration.

If you qualify, our scholarship program will cover the costs of your medical education. More, you'll receive a good monthly allowance all through your schooling.

But what happens after you graduate?

Then, as a health care officer in the military branch of your choice you enter a professional environment that is challenging, stimulating and satisfying.

An environment which keeps you in contact with practically all medical specialties. Which gives you the time to observe and learn before you decide on your specialty. Which may present the opportunity to train in that specialty. And to practice it.

You may also find some of the most advanced medical achievements happening right where you work. Like at the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Texas, long noted for its Burn Treatment Center. Or the home of Flight Medicine, the famed Aerospace Medical Division, also in San Antonio. Or the National Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, recognized worldwide for its work in Medical Research.

And if you've read this far, you may be interested in the details. Just send in the coupon and we'll supply them.

Black, humanist contributions 'whitewashed' out of history

By JERRY LAZAR
MDC Staff

Both black and white UMass Students are equally ignorant of Third World contributions to American history, and both groups are also equally unaware of the contributions of humanistically-oriented Americans throughout our nation's history.

That is one of the conclusions reached by Dr. O.C. Bobby Daniels, director of the Office of Community Development and Human Relations at UMass, who bases his findings on a multiple-choice test administered to 2070 dorm residents (including 122 Third World residents) during fall semester, 1973, as part of Project RATE (Racism: Awareness, Tolerance, Evaluation).

Educational system is the culprit

"The Daniels Test of Inter-racial Apperception and Ideology," he explains, "is a prototype culture-fair instrument designed to assist Americans of different racial backgrounds to get in touch with their cognition and tolerance of each other."

Since its inception in 1972, the DTIAI has been administered to over 3000 students, teachers, and administrators in school systems, colleges and universities throughout the country. The test, which takes 28 minutes to complete, is in three parts.

Part I is a cognitive scale of 60 multiple-choice items, measuring the examinee's knowledge of parallel black and white contributions to American history. One question, for example, asks who composed "Rhapsody in Blue", while another question seeks to identify the composer of "Afro-American Symphony". Two other questions ask the months in which we celebrate, respectively, George Washington and Martin Luther King's birthdays.

Part II is a visual literacy scale of 40 multiple-choice items, in which the test group is shown slides of photographs and paintings of personalities --- politicians, musicians, sports figures --- and asked to identify them. Again, the items in this section are equally divided between black and white luminaries.

Part III is a tolerance scale of 12 forced-choice items, in which the examinee indicates his stand on contemporary social issues, including busing, open housing, legalization of marijuana, and the theory of genetic inferiority. The answers to this subtest are scored not in terms of right and wrong, Daniels said, but rather in terms of "open-mindedness".

The test showed that, in general, the more a white person knew about black history, or vice versa, the higher his level of tolerance.

Daniels blames the educational system for "blacking out" or "whitewashing" American history.

"I want to point out very clearly that we are ALL victims of the American educational system," he said. "That's the culprit. By acts of omission in history textbooks, (black contributions) were never adequately treated in balanced perspective. Historians throughout the world, with only a few exceptions, have written patronizingly about the black man. In far too many instances they have ignored him or treated him as an appendage to American history rather than an integral part of its."

Daniels believes that taking his exam in itself is a step towards racial understanding.

"The more people know about other people's differences and commonalities," he said, "the more acceptance we'll have. I'm not going to change behavior, but I'm going to make people more aware. The DTIAI gives individuals a diagnostic reading of their level of inter-racial ideology and makes them take responsibility for their own behavior," he said.

Dr. O. C. Bobby Daniels, director of the office of Community Development and Human Relations and founder of Project RATE.

Daniels entered the UMass School of Education in 1971 and, limited to the use of personal funds in his research, developed the DTIAI as the integral part of his doctoral dissertation. The original field test was conducted in Palm Beach County, Florida ("a microcosm of our nation:" Daniels notes, "ultra affluence, abject poverty, decaying cities, racial unrest, and fashionable suburbs"), on 118 teachers (43 black, 75 white) in four elementary schools. The teachers' scores in April, 1972 were dramatically similar to the scores of UMass students tested eighteen months later.

"The conclusions drawn from the findings of this (Palm Beach) study," Daniels wrote in his dissertation, "unequivocably placed the onus for the low level of inter-racial apperception and ideology among the teachers of this study on oppressive, inhumane, racist scholarship ubiquitous in educational media and the vapid curricular experiences being fostered by insensitive and inhumane teacher training institutions in our nation."

Daniels' recommendations then called for:

a) the establishment of a permanent committee of professionals and laymen charged solely with the task of scrutinizing existing educational media and the formulation of humane criteria for future selection of these media;

b) the establishment of a cooperative pre-teacher education program which will stress the importance and utilization of human relations in the classroom through cognitive, affective, and psycho-motor experiences;

c) the continuation of busing to achieve school desegregation as long as the pattern of segregated housing exists which poses a barrier to equal and humane educational opportunities for teachers and students who are racially different.

Since the Palm Beach study, Daniels has travelled around the country administering the test, finding that, despite geographical differences, the results are invariably the same. The test has been used by professors in their classes. One such professor is Dr. Dee Appley, of the UMass Psychology Department, who used the test last semester in her course, "Personality Development".

"I was using it as one more measure in a class on personality where students learn about themselves," she said. "All tests are limited," she conceded. "I use (the DTIAI) to raise questions. I don't worry about the completeness of the test; whether it measures anything is secondary. It's interesting to take, not to get a score, but for educational purposes --- to get personal data on yourself.

"It's a stimulus for further discussion," she continued. "As for the construction of the test, it's well designed --- short enough so that people aren't bored, but long enough to tap enough information," she said.

"The good part about the test is that it doesn't label people as racist, it simply points out the limitations of racial awareness --- that we don't have information on other people, and the more informed we are, the less likely we are to put people in boxes."

Bobby Daniels is a non-violent warrior who, on the battlefield of the classroom, has set out to "smash social mythology" and, ultimately, "end man's inhumanity to man."

His "enemies" include Dr. William Shockley,the Nobel prize-winning physicist who claimed that blacks were genetically inferior to whites, and Dr. Christopher Jencks, who published research indicating that schools are at best marginal institutions in our society and the differences between schools have very little effect on what happens to students after they graduate. Needless to say, both Shockley's and Jencks' theories have been the basis for many an anti-busing argument.

"I'm particularly critical of scholars who inadequately research issues in American education," Daniels said, referring to Jencks and Shockley. "I'm trying to call attention to this inept scholarship and stop rewarding it (in the Skinnerian sense)."

Dr. Daniels has set out to smash social mythology

Having grown up black in Little Rock Arkansas and Gary, Indiana, Daniels can recall being unable to attend the "white" Lutheran Church two blocks from his home and having to walk a half-mile further to the "colored" Baptist Church; he remembers being forced to give up his bus seat to a white man.

"Some people say I ain't black enough," he says. "And I say, 'Why not?' I had my ass kicked in the south, and if I ain't black enough yet, well to hell with it."

How did you RATE?

By JERRY LAZAR
MDC Staff

Here is a close-up look at the results published last month of the Daniels Test of Inter-racial Apperception and Ideology (DTIAI) administered to dorm residents in all five residential areas on campus, between September 17, and October 19, 1973:

—non-whites had a higher visual literacy level than whites, although there was no significant difference between these two groups on the cognitive and tolerance scales;

—coed dormitories' cognition and visual literacy were lower than non-coed dormitories, although there was no significance between the two groups' tolerance levels;

—there was no significant difference between the scores of all-male dorms and other dorms;

—all-female dorms were more cognizant and visually literate than other dorms, although no significant difference exists on the tolerance scale;

—desegregated dorms scored higher than all-white dorms on cognitive and visual literacy scales, but not on the tolerance scale;

—regular dorm counselors had a higher level of tolerance than CCEBS counselors, although there was no significant difference between them on the other two scales;

—area administrators scored significantly higher than students in all areas of the test;

—students who have completed 1-4 semesters on campus scored higher than incoming freshmen in all areas of the test;

—students who have completed 8 or more semesters on campus scored higher than students who have completed 5-7 semesters on campus in all areas of the test;

—females have a higher tolerance level than males, but males are more visually literate;

—Central Area scored above average on tolerance but below average on the cognitive and visual literacy scales;

—Northeast Area scored about average in all aspects;

—Southwest Area scored about average in all aspects;

—Sylvan Area scored above average on cognitive and visual literacy scales, but below average on tolerance; —Orchard Hill Area scored above average on tolerance, but below average on cognitive and visual literacy scales.

Daniels' recomendations after studying the results of Project RATE include:

"a) curriculum revision on all levels which would result in a balanced account of the building of our nation in all disciplines;

"b) the requirement of at least one basic course in Afro-American history for all students; and

"c) adherence to affirmative action guidelines."

Arthur Knight, Saturday Review and Playboy film critic, will speak on "The New Repressiveness in Films" and "Who Listens to Movie Critics?" tonight at 8 in the Student Union Baalroom

He is the author of The Liveliest Art and The Hollywood Style and the co-author of "History of Sex in the Cinema" for Playboy.

He will discuss the Supreme Court censorship ruling and its impact on the future of the movie-making industry.

School of Ed beefs up FSV Program

By FRANK FAULKNER
MDC Special

"We haven't been able to please all our volunteers," said Rich Sockol, director of the Foreign Student Volunteer Program (FSVP), "but we are steadily improving the situation." This semester FSVP placed nine foreign students as paraprofessionals in community action programs in western Massachusetts population centers.

The program, sponsored jointly by Outreach and the Office of Internation Programs, is designed to enable foreign students to sample the unpublicized aspects of American life and expand their learning experiences while attending the University.

"Now that we have run the program for two semesters," said Sockol, "we are today in a position to invite experienced volunteers to aid us in administering and enlarging the progaam. Having foreign students as admin. assistants will enable FSVP to serve the needs and expectations of other students from the vantage point of a foreigner to American society."

The revitalized program will be offered again next semester for three credits through the School of Education. Foreign students interested in becoming volunteers in neighboring communities will be given a tour of three or four service agencies and then become involved in a two-week orientation session — 10 to 20 hours per week — at the agency they have chosen. During their participation, the students earn academic credit by assisting the agency for five to 10 hours per week.

Foreign students interested in participating in the summer or fall volunteer positions may contact the Center for Outreach Programs in Room 408 of the Goodell Building.

Vocal concert

"An Evening of Popular Vocal Music" will be presented by Dr. Horace Boyer's integrated Afro-American Vocal Music class on Friday, May 10th, at 8 p.m. in Herter 227.

Featuring approximately 15 members of the class accompanied by a piano and rhythm section, the concert will be free and open to the public.

Contemporary Popular, Blues, Jazz, Folk, and Gospel music will be performed. There will also be three short improvised song sessions.

This event is the result of a semester's study and rehearsal in performing popular music on the part of the students.

Student survey

A survey written for the Student Organizing Project of the Student Senate, has been designed to help find alternatives to the ineffectiveness of the Student Government.

Author Jim Dellemonice says it's important that students do this to gain some control over student lives.

This survey will determine the first steps of the Student Organizing Project to lead ultimately to a goal of maximum student involvement in a form of government that answers students needs.

The survey consists of some 300 randomly selected students.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Theoretically, the fastest typists should be Gemini, Virgo and Sagittarius. These persons get up a head of steam and the clicketyclack creates a definite, strong rhythm, with few corrections necessary. Leo is fast but margins are not even and the typos or mistakes are numerous. Aries types with a vengeance while Taurus is apt to be slow but sure. Pisces can be an artist on the keyboard but intervals of daydreaming are par for course. The typewriter and the signs — share your findings with me.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Check resources. Don't promise more than can be delivered. Family member can aid if you make diplomatic request. Taurus, Libra individual are likely to be involved. Take inventory, Get facts and figures.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Defer temporarily to judgment of others. You gain by waiting, listening and planning ahead. But direct action is not for you at this time. Mate, partner has something to say and you should listen. Secret is revealed and it could be somewhat of a shocker.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Work, responsibility are featured — some associates lean on you. Key now is to be helpful without making yourself a doormat. You will understand. Health is a factor; keep medical, dental appointments — and diet resolutions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Now you can put finishing touches on personal efforts. Aries, Libra individuals figure prominently. Be ready for encounter of romantic nature. Routine changes. You make adjustments and are happy to do so.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get news from individual who played important role in your past. You can make amends for unintentional slight. In effect, you receive proverbial second chance. Take initiative in nailing down costs, locations, building materials.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Hunch, intuitive flash dominates. You know without knowing. You understand without knowing. You perceive, see and touch without formally making an announcement or move. Brothers, sisters and other close relatives hurl a barrage of questions. Remain flexible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent in on money, personal possessions, your ability to protect valuables. Highlight versatility. Study Virgo message. Your instincts now may be more valuable than intellect. Know it and do it and be happy about it. Puzzle will be resolved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You will be dealing from position of strength. Realize it; be confident. Take initiative in making new contacts. Emphasize originality, creativity, personal style. Lead the way. Set your own pace. You are making a sound, solid impression.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Someone is whispering, spreading rumors. This is more childish than harmful. Nevertheless, it will pay you to keep informed. Make clear that you are aware — do so without being belligerent. Gemini, Virgo persons are likely to be in picture.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friends play significant role. Entertain at home and include family. Repay favors. Seek harmony. Diplomacy now becomes a valuable ally. Throw aside any tendency to be pugnacious. Taurus, Libra figure prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis is on how far you want to go and what you will do to arrive at destination. Study values. See through sham. Select quality. Association with professional superior proves fruitful. Don't hide your own light. Assert needs. Request will be fulfilled.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Concentrated study effort now will pay dividends.

Ties series at 2-2

Bucks outlast Celts, 97-89

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON [AP] — The Milwaukee Bucks built a commanding lead early in the second half behind Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and withstood repeated Boston challenges Sunday for a 97-89 victory over the Celtics, deadlocking the National Basketball Association Championship playoff at two games apiece.

The victory enables Milwaukee to return home for the fifth game Tuesday night, tied in the best-of-seven series.

Abdul-Jabbar scored 34 points but got plenty of help from Bob Dandridge and unheralded Mickey Davis as the Bucks regained the home-court advantage.

Dandridge scored 19 points and Davis, a surprise starter in the back-court, contributed 15 while helping stop Boston's tenacious pressing defense.

The Bucks rallied for 11 straight points late in the second period and took a 49-39 lead at halftime.

Milwaukee built the advantage to 53-39 before the Celtics regained their shooting form.

Led by John Havlicek, the Celtics closed within two points five times in the third period, the last time at 67-65, before Abdul-Jabbar connected on a right-handed hook shot and cashed a free throw just four seconds before the buzzer. That put Milwaukee ahead 70-65 and the Celtics could not get any closer than three points the rest of the way.

Havlicek scored 16 points in the third period but the Celtics comeback kept falling short. Finally, the Bucks pulled away again in the fourth period.

John McGlocklin, who suffered a torn calf muscle in the series opener in Milwaukee, returned to action with his leg heavily taped. He contributed two key baskets early in the fourth period to help the Bucks ward off Boston's final challenge.

Havlicek led the Celtics with 33 points, while Dave Cowens, playing head to head to Abdul-Jabbar, connected for 24.

After the fifth game in Milwaukee Tuesday night, the two teams will return to Boston for another meeting Friday. A seventh game, if necessary, will be played in Milwaukee next Sunday afternoon.

MILWAUKEE 97: Dandridge 7 7-7 21, Warner 1 1-2 3, Abdul-Jabbar 14 6-7 34, Robertson 5 0-0 10, Davis 5 5-5 15, McGlocklin 4 2-2 10, R. Williams 0 0-0 0, Perry 2 0-0 4, Totals: 38 21-24.

BOSTON 89: Havlicek 12 9-10 33, Nelson 1 0-2 2, Cowens 10 4-4 24, White 5 0-2 10, Chaney 3 2-2 8, Silas 3 2-2 8, Westphal 1 0-0 2, A. Williams 0 0-0 0, Finkel 1 0-0 2. Totals: 36 17-22. Milwaukee 28 21 21 27-97. Boston 27 12 26 24-89.

Flyers finish Rangers 4-3

In winning the semifinal series, four games to three, the Flyers became the first expansion team ever to eliminate an older club from the playoffs. They will be at Boston Tuesday night for the opening game of the finals against the Bruins.

Philadelphia, younger and stronger than the New York team which may have gambled away the future in an effort to solidify the present, throughly overwhelmed the Rangers while building a 3-1 lead after two periods.

It wasn't until the final period that the Rangers, trying to wipe away a "fat cat" image that has pursued them, began to open up their artillery.

Steve Vickers and Pete Stemkowski both scored in the third period as New York applied its first real pressure of the game against Bernie Parent, but it wasn't enough as Dornhoefer's second goal of the game, at 9:01 of the final session, stood up as the winner.

New York killed whatever chance it had to pull out the game when it was penalized for having too many men on the ice with only 51 seconds remaining.

The persistent and close-checking Flyers took charge from the very beginning after their good luck recording of Kate Smith's "God Bless America" sent them charging. Never the less, it was Billy Fairbairn who scored first for New York at 13:43 of the opening period. But MacLeish got that one back less than a minute later and until the Rangers put on their last period effort it was simply a question of how many goals New York netminder Ed Giacomin could prevent as the Flyers bombarded him with 37 shots in the first two periods.

Orest Kindrachuk scored an unassisted goal at 2:27 of the second period, batting in his own rebound, to put the Flyers ahead for good and Dornhoefer made it 3-1 at 11:26 as he poked the puck over a fallen Giacomin.

Golfers 6th in New England

By RICH SEVIERI

Williams College, led by team captain, and tournament medalist, John Sutter, captured their 6th New England Intercollegiate golf championship this weekend at Manchester (N.H.) Country Club. The UMass golfers finished first in the Universtiy division but 6th overall, as the College division teams dominated the tournament.

Williams grabbed the tournament lead after the first round and held on to post a 638 total for the 36 holes. Salem St. finished 2nd, 6 strokes back at 644. Amherst College was a surprising 3rd at 645, UMass shot 656 for 6th place behind 4th place Bryand, and 5th place Tufts.

The 6th place finish was the highest ever by a UMass golf team in the New England Intercollegiates. The disqualification of UMass's No. 1 player, Joe Artman cost the Minutemen 4th place. After Artman's disqualification, UMass was forced to use John Lasek's team high, 85-83 - 168 total.

Artman's disqualification resembled that of Roberto DiVenzio in the Masters a few years ago. Artman signed an incorrect scorecard that had the right total score on it, but a 6 on the 11th hole where it should have been a 7. That mistake cost UMass 8 strokes as Artman's 79-81 - 160 was thrown out.

Howard Terban was team medalist for UMass over the rain and windswept New Hampshire course with 80-81 - 161. Dave Kern and John Olson improved their first rounds by 3 strokes posting 80's and 163 totals. The best 4 out of 5 team member scores were used in the tournament.

John Sutter of Williams edged out Mark Plummer of Maine for the individual title by one stroke. Sutter, who plans to turn pro next month shot 73-77 - 150. Plummer 3 putted both 17 and 18 for bogeys in his final round 75, and it cost him the individual championship. Freshman Guy Rittman of Rhode Island had a final round of 73, which gave him a total of 153 and a tie for 3rd place with Joe Cedi of Tufts. Howard Terban's 161 total was good enough for 15th place.

Softballettes squeak past Keene 5-4

By DAVE VARG

Riding a four game streak, UMass takes to the North Campus diamond today at 3:00 for a game against Smith College. Vic Lentine will handle the mound duty for the home team, who on Saturday brought their record to 4-1 with a tension packed, hair greying, extra inning win over Keene State by a score of 5-4.

The weekend opposition was the strongest UMass has faced since the opening game against Springfield. But some excellent pitching by Micki Locke and some clutch hitting by Barb Doucet and Terry Pudlo caused an afternoon that was much happier than the one which kicked off the season.

In the top of the fourth inning with UMass trailing by three runs, leadoff batter Pudlo started things off. She beat out a bunt single and swiped second and third. Nancy Caruso contributed an infield single and runners were on first and third. Then, the game's big gun, Barb Doucet, slashed a single to right and the bases were cleared.

B.D. took a page out of Pudlo's book and stole 2nd and 3rd. And with two outs she scored on a hit by Karen Dolphin and the catch up process was complete. The score was tied 3-3.

Terry Pudlo scored in the sixth on a single by Karen Fruzzetti and UMass had the lead. But they couldn't put it away. Keene tied it up in the bottom of the seventh and for the second time in two games UMass had an extra inning game on their hands.

In the top of the eighth, Doucet, who had either scored or drove in all but one of the teams runs, drove a two out double to center. Sue Brophy then singled to left and Coach Oglesby held up Barb at third. But B.D. wanted no part of it. She blazed through the sign and tore towards the plate. She was safe at home on a close play and UMass again had the lead. Mick Locke breezed through the bottom of the inning and sewed up the win.

The J.V.'s also played a good game on Saturday. They faced fast pitching and hit it. The final score of the junior contest was 9-2 and put their record at 1-2.

Battering Rhody rams Mass

RON BEAURIVAGE — Gave UMass an early lead

By DAVE EIBEL

The UMass baseball team continued to play itself into the ground Saturday, and when the action was completed they'd dropped both ends of a twin bill to Rhode Island, 12-5, and 6-4.

On a blustery day in which Earl Lorden Field seemed like old Candlestick Park the Minutemen went out of their way to give Rhode Island a doubleheader sweep. But as it's been all season long, it was the fundamentals which sealed UMass' doom.

In the first game, after the Minutemen had moved into a 4-0 second inning lead keyed by a two-run single by Ron Beaurivage, Rhode pecked away with single runs in the second third and fourth innings and scored the winning runs in the fifth when starter and loser Jeff "the walks'll kill you" Reardon couldn't find the plate, loaded the bases after a basehit, and gave up a two-out, two-run single to third baseman Richie Zyons who was four-for-four in the opener with four rbi's.

Rhody salted the game away in the bottom of the seventh - they were the home team in the first game because Friday's game in Kingston was rained out in a "horror" of an inning.

Reardon had two away and nobody on but then walked the bases loaded which brought Coach Dick Bergquist out of the dugout and reliever John McManus into the game. John had an 0-2 count on Ed Zabilski, and just as UMass seemed out of danger, Zabilski rocketed a triple to the power alley to right center fieid, cleaning the bases and putting the game out of reach.

In the nightcap Rhode Island went in front 2-0 with single runs in the second and third innings, the run in the third coming on leftfielder Scott Campbell's line drive homer over the 405 mark in straight away center field.

But the Minutemen came back with four runs of their own in the bottom of the fourth. Mike Koperniak led the inning off with a single, Beaurivage walked, and third baseman John Seed reached base when the umpire called catcher's interference as Seed tried to bunt the runners over. Leftfielder Rick Hansen then cleared the bases with a double to right and scored on a single by rightfielder Mark Fontaine.

But any UMass hopes for a split disappeared in the top of the sixth when Zabliski, the designated hitter who pitched a complete game victory in the first game, led off with a single, and went to third on a perfect hit-and-run by second-sacker Paul Donovan. Both men scored ahead of centerfielder Lou Pullano's opposite field homer to right off starter Craig Allegrezza which gave Rhody a 5-4 lead. They then added a tainted insurance run in the seventh off UMass relief pitcher Jerry Erb without benefit of a hit.

First baseman Joe Ledoux walked and when John Seed charged a Dave Zyon's sacrifice bunt, but forgot to go back to third, Ledoux went all the way around to third and scored on a sacrifice fly by Donovan which clinched a sweep of the double header for URI, and for UMass an 0-6 Yankee Conference record, and an overall record of 4-11.

Judging from Saturday's lackluster performance, nothing short of a miracle will prevent UMass from finishing this season with their worst record in recent history. And how soon things change. Last year at this time, the Minutemen were unbeatable in the Conference, but a year later they're the patsies of the YanCon with no hope in sight, ...at least this season.

Red Sox split, snapping streak

FROM WIRE SERVICES

Rookie shortstop Rick Burleson's first major league home run in the seventh inning of the second game gave the Boston Red Sox their winning Margin Sunday in a 10-8 triumph over the Texas Rangers which enabled them to split their doubleheader.

Boston lost the first game 5-3, as the Rangers' Steve Hargan won his second victory of the season against three losses.

Boston led 7-6 after 6 1-2 innings when Dick McAuliffe opened the Red Sox' seventh with a single and advanced to second base on Bob Montgomery's bunt. Burleson, who was called up from Boston's Pawtucket Farm Club in the International League less than a week ago and playing in his second major league game, squared to bunt on a 2-0 count and then blasted a Jim Shellenback pitch over the left field wall.

Texas threatened in the eighth when Dave Nelson homered with two out and Lenny Randle aboard. Reliever Reggis Cleveland, who had come on in the sixth inning in favor of starter Juan Marichal, then settled down to get the next four ranger batters and end the game.

Marichal received credit for the second game victory, setting his record at 1-1. Henry Bibby took the loss for Texas to go 5-3.

Dwight Evans provided Boston with four hits and four runs batted in. Evans drove in the first and scored the second of Boston's two runs in the second inning and drove in another three with a home run to left field in the third inning to set the score at 5-1.

Tom Grieve singled home the tie-breaking run in the sixth inning and the Texas Rangers went on to defeat the Boston Red Sox 5-3 in the first game of the doubleheader.

It was Boston's fifth straight loss and its 10th in the last 11 games.

Grieve's single off Luis Tiant, 1-4, capped a two-run Texas rally. Singles by Jeff Burroughs and Jim Spencer and a sacrifice fly by Toby Harrah accounted for the first Ranger run of the inning.

Boston got two runs off winner Steve Hargan, 2-3, in the fourth when Carl Yastrzemski singled, Dwight Evans walked and both scored on a double by Carlton Fisk. Juan Beniquez homered in the eighth for the final Boston run.

Singles by Alex Johnson, Burroughs and Spencer gave the Rangers a run in the first inning and they added two more in the eighth on a double by Burroughs and a single by Grieve.

Gorillas skin Wildcats 22-8

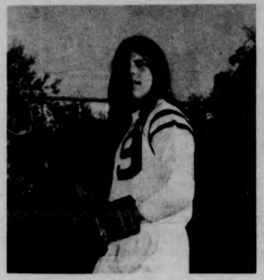
By MIKE ELLIOT

The machine keeps jolling on. The machine in reference is the UMass lacrosse team which trounced the University of New Hampshire, 22-8, on Saturday.

Once again Garber's Gorillas displayed their firepower, before a crowd of about four-hundred on a cool and windy day. It took the Gorillas just two minutes to warm up and then John Martin collected a pass from Harry McVey and put it past the New Hampshire goalie. McVey netted another goal by himself less than a minute later. New Hampshire was not out of the game yet, however. They scored two quick goals and suddenly the score was tied at two. The Gorillas got back on the track and by the end of the first quarter they held a slim 5-3 lead.

The UMass stickers continued to build their lead. They played well both defensively and offensively. They notched six goals in the second period while keeping the New Hampshire Wildcats off the scoresheet. By halftime, they had boosted their lead to 11-3.

In that first half the Gorillas displayed their potent fast break several times. The sixth UMass goal was one example. Jeff Spooner finished it off after taking a Peter Connolly pass. The tenth goal for the Gorillas was also a result of a perfect fastbreak. UMass was down by three men due to penalties. Andy Scheffer finished the break as he took a Spooner pass and bounced an easy shot into the New Hampshire cage.



HARRY MCVEY eight points

UMass continued bombarding the New Hampshire netminder in the final two periods of play. They scored another eleven goals, four in the third period and seven in the fourth. UNH could only manage one goal in the third quarter and in the fourth period, when the game was all but over, they scored four. The Gorillas continued to dominate the game both offensively and defensively. New Hampshire didn't test the UMass goaltenders (John Rutledge and Bobby Durland) too often. Both goalies made some remarkable saves but the UMass defense prevented the Wildcats from getting many good shots on net. In three periods of play Rutledge had eleven saves while letting up four goals, while Durland stopped two of six shots against him.

The UMass players had another field day offensively. Jeff Spooner was the top scorer with five goals and 4 assists. Harry McVey also had 5 goals to go along with three assists. Hirsch Seidman and Andy Scheffer each had one assist but Scheffer had four goals to Seidman's two. Midfielders Ken Michaud and Gene Hardiman both scored their first goals of the season. Other UMass goal scorers were: John Martin, Pete Connolly, Bruce Sibson, and Vin LoBello. Assists went to: Connolly (2), and John Martin, Steve Pappas, Jack Moran, and Terry Keefe (1 each).

The Gorillas blasted the New Hampshire the way they had been doing all season. This was the fifth game in which they had scored twenty or more goals. Saturday they played well. They passed well and ran well. The fastbreak was executed to perfection. UMass even scored on several long shots. One goal in particular was the 19th. Pete Connolly brought the ball upfield. About 15 feet outside of the restraining line he whistled the ball into the UNH net.

The game was also filled with penalties. Each team was assessed with 15. With about 5:07 remaining in the first half a fight broke out, with both benches emptying. Order was soon restored, though. Despite the penalties, UMass played well. However, they will have to play to the best of their abilities when they meet Brown on Wednesday.

Tracksters edged by Greater Boston Club

By SCOTT HAYES

The Umass Track team played host to a band of blue-chip tracksters more commonly known as the Greater Boston Track Club and came out on the short end of a 77½-76½ score. The trackmen used Saturday's meet as a tune-up for the season ending YanCon's and New Englands.

The jumpers contributed 18 points to the team total, sweeping both the long and triple jumps. Ken Adamson led the leapers, taking first in the long jump and second in the triple jump. Ron Harris and Ken Banda combined with Adamson's winning jump of 21-9 for the first sweep. Then in the triple jump, Mike Geraghty took charge and captured first with a distance of 46-7. The Adamson brothers backed up Geraghty and gave the Minutemen their second sweep of the afternoon.

Jimmy Shea came up with his second best throw of the season to pace the javelin throwers to the only other sweep of the day. Shea's toss of 193-4 was good enough to take first place and teammates Kevin Hall and Dave Seward completed the sweep. Hall's throw of 184-2 was a personal best.

With three of the top four hurdlers out because of minor injuries (muscle and tendon strains), Jim Hennessey and his crew had to settle for seven out of a possible 18 points. Hennessey finished second in the 220-yard high hurdles with a time of 14.9.

In what was the most exciting race of the day, Randy Thomas battled Greater Boston's coach, Jack McDonald and just missed breaking the school record in the mile. The race featured three different leaders during the four lap battle. Thomas, McDonald and Bob Sevene took turns in the driver's seat and with 300 yards to go, McDonald moved into second by passing Thomas. Thomas came right back and moved in front with just 100 yards left in the race. McDonald put on a spurt to pass the school's top harrier and Thomas failed in a bid to overtake the veteran McDonald before the tape. Thomas missed the record by just four tenths of a second, and ran a fine 4:10.6, one-tenth behind McDonald.

Steve Crimmins churned a 49.6 in the 440 while Devin Croft and Mike Gillen ran the 880 in 1:56.8 and 1:56.9 respectively.

In the three-mile run John McGrail turned in a 14:17.4 in winning the event and Chet Mysliwicz proved that he can fill in when needed. Mysliwicz took third with a time of 14:35.2.

The throwers fought their opponents to a standoff, as both teams picked up 18 points in the throwing events. Bob Bocash and his heavyweights were helped greatly by the sweep in the javelin. The biggest margin was enjoyed by the jumpers, who outscored their foes 23-13. In the running events, the scoring by both teams was well-balanced. AROUND THE TRACK ----- In comparing Paul Segersten and John McGrail's times in the six-mile test of endurance, it was discovered that the two UMass runners are just behind one of the all-time greats in New England Track and Cross Country. Art Dulong, an IC4A cross country champion and four-minute miler from Holy Cross, ran the sixer in 28:56 during his collegiate days. That leaves Segersten just six seconds back and McGrail eight seconds behind. The comparison serves as an indication of how good the group of distance runners at UMass really are.

Last dual meet of the season is Tuesday at URI. Then the tracksters will compete at the Yankee Conference Championships on the 11th and a week later at the New Englands.

Goldmark here to explain role

Sargent responds to Daniel's case

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Gov. Francis W. Sargent has absolved top officials in the Departments of Human Services and Mental Health of failure to provide adequate treatment for Russell Daniels — the mentally retarded inmate in Norfolk Prison serving a life sentence on a murder conviction.

In a letter addressed to a group of UMass students supporting Daniels' appeal, the Governor defended the activities of Assistant DMH Commissioner Louis Klebanoff and Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark.

Goldmark, who the students asked that the Governor investigate over two weeks ago, plans to meet with the group here this afternoon to explain his role in the case.

Sargent responded to a list of demands presented by the Daniels' supporters April 20, the Collegian learned from the 9-page letter obtained yesterday.

Answering the group in five parts the Governor outlined:

—Daniels' history as it relates to state agencies

—Daniels' current status

—the performance of DMH and state efforts to organize and improve community-based care services

—civil and legal protection for mentally retarded citizens

—executive inappropriateness of investigating the Springfield police and the judicial process by which Daniels was imprisoned.

The Governor previously had acknowledged his administration was to blame for the poor treatment of Daniels, who had "lost his rights unfairly."

"The Russell Daniels case was very obviously poorly handled ... I hope the state can be helpful in the future in avoiding instances of this type," Sargent said during an hour-long session with the group last month.

However, Sargent seemed to justify his administration's handling of the case in his May 1 memorandum.

He wrote that a rehabilitation counsellor's record of telephone calls and visits "documents involvement from the time of the arrest to the present: 13 visits to Mr. Daniels in prison; 8 conversations with Mr. Daniels' lawyer, Arthur Hickerson; 7 days of work at Belchertown related to gathering support for Russell Daniels; 10 days in court or jail; and five days conferring with the Daniels family and DMH officials about the case."

Also in contradiction with previous comments, Sargent wrote: "After examining thoroughly the full record of Russell Daniels' history at Belchertown and in the community half-way house, I'm convinced that the Belchertown staff's decision to place him in the community was a reasonable one."

"Moreover, Mr. Daniels continued to receive supportive social services once in the community."

Sargent told the Collegian last month that Daniels was released at a time when "we didn't have adequate half-way houses or community based centers."

Sargent indicated that Daniels is eligible to be transferred from Norfolk to Belchertown as soon as he submits his request.

The transfer is possible by statutory authority which allows an inmate to commit himself voluntarily to a mental health facility with the approval of the superintendent of the corrections facility, Sargent said.

Willy Brandt resigns

UPI Telephoto

BONN, West Germany [AP] — Willy Brandt, plagued by a series of provincial election setbacks and a damaging spy scandal, submitted his resignation late Monday night as chancellor of West Germany.

In an official announcement, the federal press office said Brandt asked President Gustav Heinemann in a letter to name Vice Chancellor Walter Scheel as head of a caretaker government until parliament can choose a new chancellor.

Scheel also is foreign minister and leader of the Free Democrats, principal partner in the coalition government with Brandt's Social Democrats. He called off a planned Tuesday trip to Brussels.

Brandt's dramatic move followed behind-the-scenes negotiations all day Monday among Brandt, his coalition partners and the opposition parties, informants said.

Brandt's popularity has begun to wane from its high point in 1971 when he won the Nobel Peace Prize for his Ostpolitik, or efforts at accommodation with the Communist Eastern bloc.

Mental health firing controversial

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

On April 25 Dr. Seymour Cabin, a clinical psychologist for UMass Mental Health Services, was told that his contract would not be renewed when it ran out in six months.

Barry Averill, director of Health Services, says that Cabin was terminated "for not assuming the professional responsibilities that he should have."

Cabin said that his termination by Averill and Dr. Leighton Whitaker, present director of Mental Health, has political implications.

"There's a great polarization among the staff," he said, "which has been there ever since I've been here, and I feel that my firing was an attempt by Whitaker to solve that problem."

"Whitaker had two alternatives to the polarization problem," he said, "he could have tried to get everyone together or he could get rid of the dissidents. Because he never directly or indirectly voiced any complaint to me prior to my being fired, it leads me to conclude that he chose the latter alternative."

Averill said that the final decision to terminate Cabin was his, not Whitaker's, and added that the two previous directors of Mental Health, under whom Cabin also served, had problems with Cabin as well.

"In no way is Dr. Cabin's firing intended to be a criticism of his capabilities," he said, "rather we feel that his professional performance has been questionable and I think that his personal goals just haven't agreed with the basic goals of the department."

Averill cited as examples of the "questionable" performance, the facts that Cabin has had difficulty in working with directors and staff members, that he did not respond to crisis calls when he was supposed to, that he concentrated on a few long-term patients rather than a larger group of students as is department policy, and general unsatisfactory performance.

"I agree with most of Cabin's ideas," said Averill, "but I don't think it would be in the best interests of the department to maintain him as a counselor. His inability to function in the organization is a definite detriment to our attempts to serve the student population as best we can."

In response to charges that he was antagonistic, Cabin said "I've been very angry about certain issues and I've voiced that anger. I feel that anger was justified and that a complaint against my behavior should have been lodged against me at that time, rather than now."

Counselors at Room to Move, for whom Cabin serves as an advisor, were reportedly "totally shocked" by the news of Cabin's firing.

John Barbaro, one of the counselors and coordinator of the Alcohol Action Team, claims that Cabin was "canned because he was too effective."

"I think that whole department needs some serious reevaluation," he said. "Seymour is undoubtedly their best therapist. Their goals must be way off-base to do something like this."

Fred Bemak, assistant director of Upward Bound, for which Cabin has served as an advisor, said "The general feeling of minority people on campus is to stay away from the Mental Health Center. The staff are thought of as perverse, unaware, and unable to relate to minority people. Seymour Cabin is thought of favorably however and is seen as a link between minority groups and the Mental Health Center."

"Seymour's not at all caught up in his professional role. He's very out front and says what's on his mind. Most of the other people there seem too caught up in their roles and unapprochable."

Averill said that he wanted to stress the fact that Cabin was not fired for political reasons. He also stated that he would be meeting with interested parties later this week and would be amenable to talking to other people if they made appointments through his secretary.

9 hrs. weekly minimum

State backs increased teaching load

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Senate passed on a voice vote without debate yesterday a preamble to the fiscal 1975 budget requiring UMass faculty to spend nine-hours per week "in contact" with students.

The amendment, originally set at a 12-hour minimum, now goes to a joint conference committee of the House and Senate and will be reported to the House for a vote within a few weeks along with the rest of the state budget.

The nine-hour amendment was approved after senators defeated 17-5 a move to strike all teaching hour requirements sponsored by Sen. Edward Burke (D-Framingham) and John Olver (D-Amherst).

UMass President Robert Wood was on hand during the late afternoon senate voting after lobbying unsuccessfully yesterday morning to have the budget preamble eliminated.

Campus chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, contacted last night for comment on the vote, called it "unfortunate in two respects."

"My problem is basically the principle of the thing," said Bromery. "First it impugns the integrity and casts dispersions of the faculty at Amherst ... as well as implying that the trustees can't do their job."

Second, the chancellor said, professors in non-traditional programs like University Without Walls, University Year For Action, Cooperative Extension Service, Outreach and Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration will be restricted by the proposed legislation.

Honors Program

Nominations sought for director

By AVIS YUNI
MDC Staff

The Search Committee for the new Director of the Honors Program is interested in receiving nominations from any student or faculty member, T. O. Wilkinson, Chairman of the committee, announced.

Wilkinson explained the committee is interested in receiving nominations from as many sources and areas as it can, such as students in the program or professors associated with it.

Presently the committee has 10-12 names that it's working on that were submitted by faculty. Wilkinson emphasized that they would like to receive many more either through self-nomination or any University student or faculty suggestions.

The names are to be given to Michele Biddle in the Honor Office, E-23 Machmer. It would be helpful if the person submitting the name has talked to their nominee to see if they want their name to be submitted at all but that's not necessary.

"Any faculty member who in terms of his-her own professional activities can afford to give what initially will be full time to the Program is eligible," Wilkinson said. The position is officially open as of June 1st, since that is the date when the resignation of the present Director, Cynthia Wolff, takes effect.

Wilkinson explained that the summer responsibilities and the release time and responsibilities of the nominee with his-her department will be negotiated through Robert Gluckstern, the Provost, and Robert Woodbury, the Assistant Provost.

Whether or not the appointment will be a full time one the Fall semester to facilitate adjustment to the position is also negotiable, as is the actual term of the appointment, he said.

"It is an indefinite appointment at this time but that's negotiable. I would think we would not want someone there for less than two years," Wilkinson said.

Wilkinson said he thought three years would at least be the appointment term but that's negotiable. "It's not the kind of position one would want permantly. The person becomes exhausted if the job's done well."

The nature and length of the appointment will depend on the particular department and program the nominee is associated with, Wilkinson said. "We hope the person would want to continue teaching - it is a teaching emphasized position and we want someone in that process."

"We want someone who is keenly interested in the kind of program we now have, "Wilkinson said. "We have a rather unique Honors Program. It's uniqueness is that honors courses are open to any student that elects to take them. There is no commitment on the part of the student to become a Commonwealth Scholar."

This program "can give the opportunity to select a more intensified, harder course with more credit," Wilkinson said. "We've had a marvelous response. The enrollment is limited to a relatively small number. The students volunteer for a more intensive course," he said.

There is no differentistion made between Commonwealth Scholars and regular students," Wilkinson said. He explained, "The program is designed to get students interested in doing Honors work without becoming part of the program."

This eliminated eliteness because anyone can take the courses and have the intensive learning experience, Wilkinson said. The program is attractive to both students and faculty with participation voluntary for any student in any University-wide program, he said.

"We want someone for director who is interested in developing, borrowing, or copying any kind of situation that would develop more intense work for students and satisfy the faculty," Wilkinson said.

"We want someone who realizes that running this program requires administrative patience. It's not all God and glory but a great deal of scut work. The essential qualification is someone who believes in the program," Wilkinson said.

He explained that a certain amount of administrative skill and extensive experience or motivation to deal with and guide students within a scholarly emphasis is necessary.

Wilkinson said that the job focuses on the intellectual part of the student so a great amount of time is spent in academic counselling. Thus skills in listening to students and hearing demands are needed.

He said that the committee wants a director that will be aware of all the opportunities available and how one can get what he-she wants out of the system. Wilkinson said the director should be familiar with and know how to work with the flexibilities of the system.

After the Search Committee makes a recommendation, Wilkinson said the Provost's office will negotiate the terms of the appointment with the candidate. If they successfully reach an agreement the Provost will then make the appointment.

Wilkinson said that of the 10-12 nominations received, a number of them have declined because of disenchantment with the administration of anything, upcoming sabbatical, etc.

The Search Committee is made up of three faculty members and two honors students. Representing the faculty is T. O. Wilkinson, Sociology Professor; Micheline Dufau, Chairperson of the Department of French and Italian; and Dean Ernest Bock, Associate Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources. Rosanna Falabella and Janet Atwater are the two Honors Students.

Academic Affairs Comm. tackles communications

By JOE BROUSSEAU
MDC Staff

The Student Academic Affairs Committee decided last night to broaden communication between the various area programs and work on improving the system of evaluation for colloquia offered by the various residential areas.

There are numerous problems in these two areas according to Committee chairperson, Marty Miller.

On the communication problem, the committee decided to issue a policy statement to the Provost's office at the beginning of next semester. The committee members agreed that some sort of standardization is necessary in order to justify the existence of the colloquia programs to the Trustees and the Faculty Senate. They decided to send out letters to the area governments as soon as possible on this question.

It was suggested that the entire program be brought under the auspices of a central committee, possibly the Academic Affairs Committee. However, Miller rejected this notion saying, "This committee could become a really bad thing if it gets into a power trip."

The problem of student evaluation of colloquia was discussed at some length, but no direct action was taken at the meeting.

Committee member David Simmons is currently preparing a questionnaire combining objective type questions with open-ended ones to evaluate the performance of the instructors and the content of the colloquia themselves. "We should be concerned," he said, "with what constitutes a valid educational experience."

Faculty monitoring and sponsorship of colloquia is also a problem according to Cindy Waldron of the Greek area. She said that faculty sponsors are supposed to visit the classes regularly but rarely do.

The content of colloquia was also discussed. According to Simmons, there are three basic types, consciousness raising colloqs in subjects such as racism and sexism, skills dealing with subjects like auto mechanics, and academic which relate to courses offered by the University.

The biggest problem is with the skills colloqs which the Trustees feel have little to do with academic matters.

In this context, Simmons cited the example of a colloq offered by the Northeast Area in the B'hai faith which encountered problems with the American Civil Liberties Union due to a First Amendment prohibition against "religious proseletizing" on the campus of a state university.

Chairperson Miller called colloquia "little peoples' education", and said that the Committee wants to see them continued.

Fair weather brings more crime

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

"Campus crime is increasing, but should peak shortly," said Saul Chafin, Assistant Director of the Department of Public Safety at UMass.

"We anticipated this increase because it happens every year with the coming of warmer weather. It will drop off when the semester ends."

According to police reports four non-students were arrested Saturday in and around Patterson dorm and charged with disorderly conduct.

Michael L. Hespelt, 20, David B. Ferioli, 20, Joseph A. Scroter, 21, all of Springfield, and Wayne F. Payeur, 20, of Holyoke were arraigned in Northampton District Court Monday. All pleaded not guilty.

In addition, Hespelt was charged with larceny and indecent exposure, to which he pleaded not guilty. All four cases were continued until May 29.

Michael J. Kearney, 18, of Weymouth, a student, was arrested and charged with breaking and entering in the nighttime, malicious damage of state property, and larceny under $100 say police.

He and another subject were observed by Officer Edward Honneyman leaving the Old Chapel through a window. Following a chase in which Officer Richard Besse joined, Kearney was caught, but his companion escaped. A cornet was discovered lying on the ground near the window; nothing else was discovered missing.

Kearney was arraigned in Northampton District Court on Monday and pleaded not guilty to all charges.

Jerome Thompson, 19, of Hadley, a non-student, was arrested for operating a motor vehicle without a license, or registration, and for possession of marijuana, following a routine car check by UMass police.

He was arraigned in Northampton District Court on Monday and pleaded not guilty.

Judicial action seen as citizen's forum

Beryl Cohen, legal counsel for the Belchertown State School Friends Association, will speak tonight at 7 in Dickinson main lounge on the necessity of using the third branch of government to resolve citizen problems.

Besides successfully representing the Friends in a suit filed two years ago for inhumane conditions existing at the state school, Cohen is co-defender of Russell Daniels, the former Belchertown resident waiting to appeal a murder conviction for which he is now serving a life sentence in Norfolk Prison.

Cohen, a graduate of Boston Law School, served as a legislator of Brookline for 10 years.

The lecture is being held in conjunction with a special Orchard Hill Course on problems of delivery in health services. Instructor Benjamin Ricci said all students are invited to attend.

Walgren contends Justice Garrity directly contradicts the Twenty-sixth Amendment.

Eric Walgren continues case on town elections

By DENISE MATTEAU
MDC Staff

AMHERST – Eric Walgren hald a press conference yesterday afternoon in the Board Room of the Amherst Town Hall to speak about the present state of appeals on the suit regarding student disenfranchisement in the 1973 town election, which was held during intersession.

Eric Walgren is a local resident who was a candidate for selectman, backed by the now defunct Tea Party. The Tea Party had built its platform around certain issues especially affecting students, such as laws regarding hitchhiking or marijuana-smoking. The Tea Party lost the election, allegedly because the entire student body of UMass was absent at the time of voting.

Immediately before the election, the U. S. District Court in Boston was asked by the Tea Party to issue an injunction stopping it. Justice Friedman heard the case, and did not rule until after the election was held, at which time he "threw it out", in Walgren's words.

"We then appealed to the U. S. Court of Appeals, which covers the New England Circuit. That Circuit court remanded for a new trial," said Walgren.

"So we went back to the U. S. District Court, this time with Justice Garrity," he continued, "for a retrial on the merits of the case in which, in a more elaborate and less judiciously spurious way, Garrity ended up holding the same (decision) as Friedman. Now we're appealing again."

Walgren's more optimistic this time, however, because he is confident of getting a copy of the transcript of the trial, based on Justice Garrity's written opinion of the case. Walgren contends Justice Garrity directly contradicts the intent and meaning of the Twenty-sixth Amendment, which granted 18-year-olds through 20-year-olds the right to vote.

Justice Garrity, in the decision handed down, dismissed Walgren's claim that the de-facto disenfranchisement of students was an oppressively discriminatory act by saying "...We view the protection afforded students under the Twenty-sixth Amendment as fundamentally different than the protection afforded under the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments... The decision that a man shold not be discriminated against because he is black rests upon a far more fundamental value perception than the decision to bring 18, 19 and 20-year-olds into the political process."

In 1974, the decision was made by the selectmen, - "We twisted their arms" said Walgren -to have the election on March 5, during the spring semester. Walgren wants to make it a permanent victory.

Amherst town meeting

Selectmen favor mass transit

By KATHY SHEEHAN

The Annual Town Meeting of Amherst approved last night an article requesting the Town Selectmen to take action in establishing and enrolling the town of Amherst in the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Transit Authority.

At the meeting which was held at the Regional Jr. High School, a number of other warrant articles were approved. Among them were:

—a petition that would require listing the names of candidates for town office and town meeting member on the official ballot in the order in which they are drawn by lot.

—approval of the Budget for the fiscal year 1975 as proposed by the Finance Committee.

—a revision of the town By-Laws concerning personnel

—acceptances of interim reports from various committees

—appropriation of $7,500 for a comprehensive and detailed public transportation study

Debate over the Budget centered on the expansion of the Conservation Program which would include a full-time director, and the School Transportation Budget which would provide transportation for children attending private schools. Both articles eventually received approval.

The Board of Selectmen openly supported the article on public transportation, and indicated that after a detailed study of routes, fares, and costs, they would probably vote to join the Authority. Joining the Authority would not necessitate participation in contracting public transportation but would enable the town of Amherst to have a say in the By-Laws of the Authority. If the Selectmen defer to enroll Amherst in the regional authority at the time of its formation, it will be difficult to bargain for routes and costs, and to receive federal and state subsidies.

A meeting of the 15 towns able to join the Transit Authority is expected to be called within the year, and the Selectmen must decide then whether to permit the town to enroll.

The support by the Selectmen at the Town Meeting gave optimism that Amherst might see public transportation in the near future.

The Town Meeting will meet again Wednesday night, May 8 at 7:30 p.m. at the Regional Jr. High to vote on the remaining articles. Some proposals that will be considered at the meeting include:

—construction of new sidewalks and bike paths (bi-walks)

—a moratorium on the construction of nuclear power plants in Massachusetts as well as in Amherst

—the creation of UMass as a separate town precinct in voter registration —encouragement of hitchhiking and establishment of a Hitchhiking Safety Committee

—revision of Amherst's policy on marijuana

—streaking be permitted and defined as "public nudity while running at large for the purpose of free expression or recreation."

New plan for foreign student summer jobs

As reported earlier this week in the Collegian, work permission for foreign students on the F-1 "student visa" cannot be authorized this year by the Foreign Student Office in Whitmore.

Since work permission must come to each applicant from the U.S. Immigration Office in Boston instead, the Foreign Student Office is asking that all F-1 visa foreign students who want summer work permission this year stop by the Foreign Student Office, Whitmore 239, within the next 3 work days and complete a Form I-538 ("green form") for that purpose. They should bring with them their I-94 Arrival-Departure Records, which must be attached to the green form before it is sent to Boston.

The work permission requests will then be sent in a batch to Boston on Thursday, May 9 which should speed up the processing. The Foreign Student Office can process work permissions only for foreign students who will be enrolled here full-time in the fall.

A check list is available at the Foreign Student Office covering suggested financial topics which the student must address in filling out the form. Summer work permission will only be granted if the student can show that economic changes since his arrival in the U.S. force him to work this summer out of financial need. This applies whether the proposed summer work is on-campus or off.

F-1 visa foreign students who already have received permission from the U.S. Immigration Service to work Part-time during the year do not need to apply further for summer work permission; they have it automatically, at least for 1974.

Foreign students who work without permission this summer are likelier than ever to be caught because of the new control procedures affecting social security numbers for foreign nationals. J-1 visa students, and legal permanent residents, are not affected by any of the changes in summer work permission just described.

The current "tough" interpretation of immigration law affecting foreign student summer work is reportedly meant to help reduce high summer unemployment among American veteran and ethnic minority groups.

To "facilitate discussion"

Sirica grants delay for Jaworski subpoena

WASHINGTON [UPI] – U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica yesterday postponed a legal clash between the White House and Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski and encouraged discussions that might lead President Nixon to comply with another subpoena for tapes.

Jaworski and White House attorneys had been scheduled to submit arguments yesterday on a White House motion to quash Jaworski's subpoena for 64 recordings of Presidential conversations, but Sirica postponed the submissions until Friday and oral arguments until Monday.

"The continuance was granted for the purpose of facilitating discussion leading to possible compliance with the subpoena," Sirica said.

Jaworski, who assumed the Watergate special prosecutor's post when Nixon fired Archibald Cox over a previous subpoena disagreement, filed the new subpoena April 18. He said the additional tapes were needed for use in the trial of seven former administration and campaign officials charged with conspiracy to cover up the Watergate scandal.

Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, one of the defendants, yesterday filed a supporting brief that said "the subpoenaed materials are necessary and relevant to the preparation of Mr. Mitchell's defense."

Last Wednesday, the day after Nixon defied a House Judiciary Committee subpoena by supplying it with edited transcripts instead of tape recordings, the White House asked Sirica to quash Jaworski's subpoena. It said parts of 20 of the 64 subpoenaed conversations were included in the edited transcripts and submitted a personal statement from Nixon on the rest of the material.

"The other items sought are confidential conversations between a president and his close advisers that it would be inconsistent with the public interest to produce," Nixon's statement said.

Since the submission of the transcripts to the House impeachment inquiry, White House officials have indicated Nixon will release no more material even under subpoena.

Sirica conferred for 25 minutes with Jaworski, presidential attorney Janes D. St. Clair and several attorneys for the Watergate cover-up defendants before issuing the postponement order with its suggested avenue of compromise.

None of the attorneys involved had any comment except Jaworski, who said only, "I am neither pleased nor displeased."

Wallace eyes big vote in Alabama primary

United Press International

With four states holding primary elections today nationwide attention focused on Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace's bid for the big vote that could boost him into another presidential campaign, and former astronaut John Glenn's third try for an Ohio Senate seat.

Indiana and North Carolina also slated primary elections to decide party nominations for the fall elections to various offices, including the U.S. Senate seat of Chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr. of the Watergate committee, who is retiring.

In Washington, D.C., voters today had their first opportunity in 100 years to approve a charter granting the District of Columbia limited home rule, with an elected mayor and a city council. Its adoption appeared certain although opposition focused on Congress retaining final control over the city budget.

Campaigning from his wheelchair, Wallace has criss-crossed the state, spent more than $300,000 and won unprecedented support from black politicians in his bid to win.

Wallace has been telling the crowds that his bids for the presidency have created nationwide prestige for Alabama and political experts rated his campaign as an attempt to prove his vote-getting ability in advance of a possible 1976 presidential candidacy. They predicted an easy Wallace win over four challengers but said the voter turnout may be poor.

In Ohio, Glenn's uphill fight to wrest the Democratic senate nomination away from the incumbent, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, involved the prestige of Gov. John J. Gilligan and the Democratic state committee.

Both backed Metzenbaum for renomination. Glenn has attempted to make an issue of what he calls "bossism," a reference to the fact that Gilligan appointed Metzenbaum to fill the seat vacated when Republican William B. Saxbe became attorney general. Metzenbaum has beaten Glenn for the Democratic nomination before, but experts hesitated to predict the outcome this time.

Pennsylvania dairy coop guilty of campaign gift

WASHINGTON [UPI] – A Pennsylvania dairy cooperative pleaded guilty yesterday to illegally contributing $50,000 to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr. fined the Lehigh Valley Cooperative $5,000, the maximum allowed under federal law.

The guilty plea was entered by James G. Rosenberg, an attorney for the dairy cooperative, based in Allentown. Pa.

Special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski had filed a criminal information before Hart alleging the illegal contribution was made between April 19 and April 27, 1972.

Lehigh Valley was the 11th corporation to plead guilty to charges by Jaworski of making illegal campaign contributions in 1972. Federal law prohibits corporations, labor unions and national banks from contributing to election campaigns.

Unlike the other cases, Jaworski did not charge an official of the dairy co-op with consenting to the contribution. Spokesmen declined to say why no official was charged.

Columnist Jack Anderson wrote two weeks ago that the money was given in two $25,000 bundles and that Jaworski was secretly bargaining for a guilty plea from Lehigh Valley President Richard Allison.

Anderson said that the milk cooperative unwittingly supplied "hush money" for the Watergate conspirators. He said the money wound up in a fund from which cash was drawn to buy the silence of the original seven Watergate defendants.

According to Anderson, wanted Nixon as a speaker for the co-op's 1972 conference. When its Washington lobbyist could not arrange a presidential appearance, the group settled for Agricultural Secretary Earl L. Butz, Anderson said, and contributed $50,000 to Nixon's campaign.

N.J. allows public funds for elections

TRENTON, N.J. [UPI] – New Jersey yesterday became the first state to enact public financing of the election for governor.

Gov. Brendan T. Byrne, who signed the legislation at a special ceremony in his office, said the law, will end the "evil of the large, private contributions" to candidates for the governorship.

The legislation, promised by Byrne before his election last November, provides for partial financing of the next general election for governor in 1977 through money from the state general fund treasury.

The law limits individual contributions to gubernatorial candidates to $600. Each candidate is limited to spending 50 cents per registered voter who voted in the most recent presidential election. In the gubernatorial election last year, each candidate was allowed to spend $1.5 million.

To qualify for treasury money, a candidate must raise $40,000 on his own. After that, a candidate gets $2 in public money for each $1 he raises privately.

Kissinger to meet Gromyko today

JERUSALEM [UPI] – Secretary of State Henry Kissinger will meet Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko on Cyprus today to brief him on the negotiations for a military disengagement between Israel and Syria, it was announced last night.

In addition to the Middle East, Kissinger and Gromyko will discuss the issues which will come up when President Nixon visits Moscow in June. These will include strategic arms limitations-limiting multiple missile warheads-and the European security conference, a U.S. spokesman said.

The Israeli government gave Kissinger last night the "considerations" decided upon by the cabinet Sunday in a crucial meeting to decide how far Israel should withdraw to try to bring about military disengagement in the Golan Heights.

An American spokesman said that two high U.S. officials-undersecretary for Near Eastern Affairs Alfred L. Atherton and legal adviser Carlyle Maw-will remain here while Kissinger goes to Cyprus today, "to work on all aspects of a possible disengagement agreement." That was believed to mean they will try with the Israelis to put a plan on paper.

Kissinger is expected to be back in Israel after his talks with Gromyko tonight and see Prime Minister Golda Meir again before taking the latest Israeli plan to Damascus tomorrow for presentation to Syria President Hafez Assad.

Kissinger is expected to leave at 10 a.m.

To meet Gromyko, Kissinger will have to interrupt his shuttle diplomacy between Israel and Syria for a day. When the visit was announced, U.S. officials denied that there would be any "deal" about the Middle East as result of the meeting.

Socialist Mitterrand sure of victory in French runoff

PARIS [UPI]-Communist backed Socialist Francois Mitterrand, top finisher in first round presidential balloting, said yesterday he is so confident of winning the May 19 runoff he already has started working on the decisions he will make as chief of state.

"I start the second round with the feeling that victory is at hand," the 57-year-old Socialist party leader told a news conference. "I go into the fight with calm resolution. Already today I have begun formulating the responsibilities I will have to assume after May 19.

"We are unleashing a formidable campaign throughout France today so that in every village and every city, people will know that our battle shall be won," he said.

Mitterrand won 43 per cent of the vote Sunday in a first round election which ended 16 years of Gaullist rule.

The runner-up was conservative Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing with 33 per cent of the ballots. The official Gaullist candidate, Jacques Chaban-Delmas, came third with 15.1 per cent.

Chaban-Delmas and the other nine candidates were thereby eliminated and the two top finishers, neither having secured the 50 per cent plus one ballot needed for outright victory, went into the run-off.

Looking health and relaxed despite the month-long campaign that followed President Georges Pompidou's death April 2, Mitterrand told newsmen, "We will win, France will win."

The Steering Committee of the Union for the Defense of the Republic (UDR), the main Gaullist party, announced yesterday as expected that it will back Giscard d'Estaing, 48.

"We must put up a barrier to the Marxists," a party spokesman said.

Mitterrand has presented himself as the only man capable of defending France's independence against the United States and foreign business interests.

Daley hospitalized

CHICAGO [UPI]-Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley, the ruler of Chicago's Democratic organization and one of the most powerful politicians in the nation, entered a hospital suddenly yesterday for treatment of what was called an abnormal blood condition.

The 71-year old mayor canceled all engagements at midmorning and went to the office of his physician, Dr. Thomas J. Coogan Jr. Coogan then drove with Daley to Presbyterian-St. Lukes Hospital.

A hospital spokesman said Daley was examined in the emergency room and then admitted to a private room. The preliminary diagnosis was that the mayor was being examined for hypoglycemia, described as an abnormal decrease in blood sugar.

Calley hearing due

COLUMBAS, Ga. [AP]-A federal judge yesterday took under advisement the question of whether former Army Lt. William L. Calley Jr. can remain free on bond.

U.S. District Judge J. Robert Elliot indicated he would rule soon on the bond issue but did not set a date.

Prosecutors argued Calley should be returned to confinement because there was no legal precedent for granting bond to a military prisoner.

The judge indicated there was ample precedent, saying: "For the Army to say there is no precedent for granting Lt. Calley bail is simply to ignore an action by the U.S. Supreme Court."

Viet funds halted

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Senate rejected yesterday an administration request for $266 million in additional military aid to Saigon that the Pentagon said was vitally needed to supply South Vietnam with ammunition.

The rejection came on a 43-38 vote in favor of an amendment to a 1974 supplemental budget bill by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., that barred the Defense Department from spending any more "unobligated" funds in Southeast Asia this year.

Zebra hearings open

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] – A grand jury met yesterday to hear testimony from a secret informer who led police to three suspects in the random "Zebra" street killings of 12 whites.

Police and attorneys, working under a "gag order" from a municipal court judge, declined to tell who would appear as the grand jury opened its investigation into the series of killings over a five-month period of terror in San Francisco.

House restates stand on gun control bill

BOSTON [.UPI]-The Massachusetts House yesterday reaffirmed initial approval of a measure banning the so called Saturday Night Special enacting legislation for gun control.

However, intiial passage of the bill yesterday on a 128-93 roll call came after three hours of debate and two crucial votes which forced the bill's sponsor, Public Safety Committee Co-chairman Ralph E. Sirianni Jr., D-Winthrop, to compromise and remove some of its strength.

The House first gave initial approval to the bill Thursday on a 121-86 roll call. But Rep. Michael E. McLaughlin, D-Billerica, a candidate for lieutenant governor, asked for reconsideration yesterday. Backed by the House Democratic leadership, minus Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, who was absent from the chamber, McLaughlin succeeded on reconsideration on a 122-98 roll call.

McLaughlin then proposed an amendment to send the bill to the state Supreme Court for a constitutional opinion. That carried on a 117-105 roll call.

The bill outlaws sale, purchase and posession of Saturday Night Specials - guns which must meet three criteria: barrel length three inches or shorter; caliber .32 or smaller, and low grade metal alloy construction.

Reporters win Pulitzers for Nixon investigations

NEW YORK [UPI]-Pulitzer prizes for national reporting were awarded yesterday to James R. Polk of the Washington Star-News and jack White of the Providence R.I. Journal-Bulletin for disclosures of Nixon administration irregularities.

Polk, 36, won the honor for disclosing contributions to the 1972 Nixon re-election campaign by the dairy and trucking industries and trucking industries and the American Shipbuilding Company. He also broke the story of financier Robert L. Vesco's secret contribution to the campaign, a disclosure that led to the conspiracy trial of former U.S. Attorney General John N. Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans.

White, 31, was cited for accurately publishing President Nixon's 1970-1971 income tax payments last October, leading to the President's disclosure of his financial affairs and his decision to pay nearly $500,000 in back taxes and penalties without a fight.

The 1974 awards - the 58th of an annual series - were based on works published in 1973. They were announced by President William J. McGill of Columbia University, whose trustees named the winners on the advice of a professional advisory board.

There are 11 journalism categories and seven catories in letters, drama and music. Most prizes are for $1,000.

Szep of Globe wins Pulitzer

BOSTON [UPI]-Pulitzer Prize winning cartoonist Paul Szep of the Boston Globe said yesterday he wanted to "give thanks to the Nixon Administration" for his award.

"It feels fantastic," he said, "it has been wishful thinking every year.

"I submitted 10 cartoons. I don't know how they break them down." The cartoons are sardonic and depict a caricature of Nixon which is facially unsympathetic.

Szep said his theme has been predominantly based on Watergate.

Presently the University Health Fee here at UMass, Amherst is $38.50. Next semester (Fall 1974) Health Services plan to boost their charge along with their medical care. A prospective dental and eye care plan is now in preparation.

The Question: Do you feel that for what you are charged the University Health Services supply adequate medical coverage?

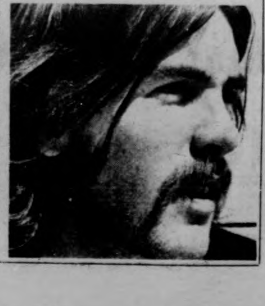
Fred Braley, Accounting major, senior, 21, Southwest, hometown Dartmouth, Mass: I get average use out of the service and I haven't had to come for anything serious so I think that for the use I get out of it the fee is all right. I would say that to get dental care for an additional charge would be good, very good.

Anny Hayes, Animal Sciences major, junior, 21, Orchard Hill, hometown Natick, Mass.: I think it's good for the people that they handle. I've had some experience with them, but not too much. I think it's fair. I think it's fair if they increase it and increase the department too. They should have a card or something that they can punch and tell who's getting the use of the infirmary and all. Then those that don't can get something back.

Elizabeth Brown, Communications major, junior, 20, Central, hometown Brockton, Mass.: Well, since I haven't gone there and used it I really don't have much of an opinion. I think it's all a good idea, but it's a lot of money. I think if students don't use the service they should get a certain percentage back. That's a very good idea, I think.

Sue Perry, Elementary Education major, freshman, 19, Southwest, hometown Northborough, Mass.: I think it's fair. I've been there a lot and I know a few girls who have never been up there. Perhaps people should get a per cent back for not using it provided people who do have a lot of use aren't billed any higher. It's like people who don't have children who pay education taxes compared to someone who has a large family and pays the same tax. I've been there at least four times and I've gotten my money's worth.

Gary Gemme, Wild Life major, senior, 21, Southeast St., Amherst, hometown Chicopee, Mass.: Right now I think that it's fairly decent because, well, I've been in quite a bit this year. I've been sick quite a bit and it would have cost me a small fortune outside of the campus. It's a chance thing; it's kind of like insurance. If you need it it's there, if you don't ... well? It's a gamble that you take and it's a worthwhile gamble.



Joe Kenyon, Political Science major, 21, senior, Knickerbocker Apts., hometown Long Island, New York: I think in my own case that I've had too many times that I've used the infirmary and it's paid off for me. Someone without use for it won't get that advantage. It's like insurance. If it goes up a reasonable amount I'll support more funding. I think it's a sample for outside communities. I support socialized medicine and I think that this proves it can work effectively.

Letters to the editor

Big brother S. G. A. has pursestrings

To The Editor:

There is the problem of organizers and organizations. It is not impossible to maintain an organization of 70-80 members cohesively provided the right leadership is at work. As a warning to all organizations funded by the S.G.A., cohesiveness and the role the organization plays in the university community is paramount when it comes to funding them.

Various groups were denied funding this year because they failed to comply with the expectations of the S.G.A. The advice is that for the purpose of funding, an organization should be structured to conform with the rules that would insure the financial future of it, namely the rules of the S.G.A.. Officers concerned with the future of their respective groups should look at their organizations from the perspective of the senate. Groups that are now being funded and are only in theory representing the community, are guilty of misappropriation of funds and are endangering the future of their organizations. In the case where there is poor leadership so as to endanger the organization, the community should take it upon themselves to see to it that this type of leadership ceases to exist.

The university community should bear in mind that these organizations are funded with S.A.T.F. money. This money comes from the pocket of undergraduate students. These groups funded are required by the S.G.A. to be primarily, if not only, formed by undergraduate membership. The responsibility of leadership is the same as that of a senator to his constituency. I bring this point up because I have noticed that officials have failed to properly represent the undergraduate constituency and instead have represented an elite composed mainly of graduate students.

Issues crucial to the undergraduate students have been discussed by organizations at various meetings. They have submitted decisions to the administration in the name of the organization, when there was never a quorum of its undergraduate members present. Many would say there is always a quorum present at the meetings, that is to say that there is an elite present. Actions as such are not in the best interest of the undergraduates.

These things happen within the organizations because there is the tendency of the older to be paternalistic towards the undergraduates. Undergraduate students are industrious and quite capable of maintaining an organization useful and fruitful to the university community. The older then should play the role of advisers within the organizations, rather than playing the role of dictators, or be the cause of an elite within the organization.

The older should not be a demagogue, or use the organization to further his or her own interst. This is the time to be concerned with the "group" and not with the "individual," for the needs of the group are greater than those of the individual. In regard to this concern for the group, the example set by Union of Third World Women before the Budgets Committee is that this group was undoubtedly well organized as honest representatives of their constituency and providing a vital service to the university community. Credit should also be given to the AHORA organization for the magnificent presentation of the Puerto Rican Week activities, and their ability to motivate its members to perform the tasks needed to bring to the university community this vital act.

However, despite the vital functions performed, organizations should remember that although funded, their accounts may be terminated by R.S.O., should they be guilty of any malfunctioning, or any act contrary to the best interest of the undergraduate students.

As a senator representing the Third World constituency and as a member of the Budgets Committee, I feel that organizations will cease to be in danger, should the leaders bear in mind the S.G.A. suggested guidelines.

It is always more dignifying for a senator to voice his support for honestly organized groups than for those who are organized only in theory. It behooves every organization to see to it that they have enough undergraduate members active, well informed, and motivated. These attitudes will help insure the future of the organizations. Student funds are not fun and games. The more abuse there is of the funds by organization, the higher the students' fee will be in subsequent years.

Senate only realistic in drum budget slash

To The Editor:

Time: 7-9:00, Wednesday night, May 1st.

Place: Campus Centre; Student Senate considering the budget of Drum. The Black literary magazine.

Characters: 1. Black poets, artists, publishers, supporters. 2. Elitist core of "oldie" Senators. 3. Women's Committee advocating affirmative action, preferential treatment, reverse racism. "We lost their statement, but, uh, we remember it, uh...." 4. Some questioning, budget-minded Senators. 5. A lot of white Senators suffering from a disease known as "White Man's Guilt."

Scene:

Questioning the budget of Drum magazine turns out not to be a matter of budget or financial affairs, but a matter of racism. Reverse racism out of fear or uncertainty on the part of the Student Senate.

Yet, we see no reason to laugh at, mock, or ridicule sincere efforts to trim the expenditures of Drum's $36,933.00 budget, just as we see no reason to laugh at, mock, or ridicule sincere efforts to trim anyone's budget, white or black.

—LAUGHTER: We propose a binder clause of using black and white photographs ONLY. This is defeated. Obviously the Senate lacks the imagination to see how aesthetic black and white pictures can be. Obviously they also lack confidence in the Drum's ability to use their imaginations in producing qualitative and effective black and white picture studies. (re: The Family of Man )

—MOCKERY AND AGHAST: We then propose that the Drum only publish twice a year (instead of 3-4 times per year) and have all the color they want. Compromise anyone? Yet, behold, we are not trying to compromise quality or communication!

Our suggestion to cut the 3-4 publications of Drum to only two a year is based on the fact that the Drum did admit to the Senate the pressures of getting four editions out this year. The tremendous expense of these many editions also convinces us of the practicality of having only two editions. There is a precedent. Last year the Spectrum was cut from $28,000 to $14,000 (this year their budget is $15,000). They were forced to use more half-tones, to be a lot more discriminating in choosing students' materials (written, photographic, or artisitc). They publish once a year; they publish one fine, quality magazine. This amendment is defeated.

Limitations do not have to mean less representation or communication. Financial limitations can mean the use of ingenuity and discrimination in choosing only the finest of written and pictoral art. Undergrads would not have to pay so much for superfluity; black students would continue to have a much needed creative outlet, representation in black literary accomplishments, and could still have the resources to show the rest of the UMass community and the Pioneer Valley where they are at.

The Drum magazine is only an example of how the Student Senate cannot rationally and practically deal with racism and sexism or such inflammatory issues. In dealing with the SATF appropriations the Senate must reasonably put aside issues of black and white, or the fear of raising issues of white vs. black, otherwise we'll all be in the red.

No room left for hate

There is a great myth going around these days; people are trying to convince each other that "racism" in America is a "White" problem. You know, when white people say something about Blacks, or a Black person that is derogatory, well that's racism; when a Black person gets down on a White person, well that nationalism.

It just ain't so. People are people. In my days as a student, journalist, construction worker, traveler, and observer of the environment around me, I've seen all types of people, of every race. The point is there are hustlers in every race, "layin' some skin on you for brother Malcolm", or "chuggin" one down for "Uncle George Wallace". The question of racism is too complex to solve by trying to put all the blame on one side; and those who do really work against any productive way of trying to get to the bottom of the problem and deal with each other as people, not colors.

Much of the problem can be traced to the fact that the fight against "racism" has become an ideological one for too many people. Like most ideologies, there comes a party line. It usually goes, "If you're not with us, you're against us". One of the most shameful examples of an idea becoming an ideology, was when Senator Joseph McCarthy started his grand inquisition in the 1950's against "Communists and their fellow travellers".

McCarthy felt that the United States was sold down the River after World War II by Communists in the State Department. Therefore, anyone who didn't oppose any type of communist expansion or progress were communists themselves. In the name of the American way of life, Joe McCarthy ruined more peoples' lives by throwing around accusations, without proof, often without reason.

Today, people are branded "racists" as quickly as they used to be tabbed "communists". If you're for a strict definition of the first Amendment and you believe that even a man as foolish as Dr. Shockley has a right to express his views, of racial inferiority whether or not YOU think he's right, you're branded a racist. If you oppose certain Black movements, not because they are Black but because they are bogus, YOU are a racist.

Enough. Things have to change. Certain Blacks on campus have to stop the massive inuendos and irresponsible jargon that does nothing to solve anything but the need for their egos to assert themselves.

Racism has been going on in this world a lot longer than they or I have been alive. It is not just White vs. Black or vica versa. Go back in time; the plantation owner in Georgia could have learned a great deal from the Pharoah in ancient Egypt about how to get slaves. And while I'm not trying to excuse slavery in America, it should be remembered that often Blacks sold to slave ships were sold to them by other Blacks.

The Jews in Europe faced greater racism at the hands of the Russians (Pogroms made Southern lynchings look like a Jefferson-Jackson day picnic) and later the Germans than anything Blacks ever came up against in America. As 19th Century immigrants, the Irish and Italians were persecuted, spat upon, and murdered outright, before there was any concept of due process of the law in this country.

The basic point is that everyone has a story. Everyone has been persecuted. The time has come to forget the accusations, bury the hatred; stop the movement towards isolation. It is time to stop misquoting Malcolm X; who in the end after visiting Mecca realized that the only real hope for a civilized society was for Blacks and Whites to interact and try and understand and love each other.

People must stop being afraid to express themselves, and let out feelings. If they are scared, they should understand their fears. But the answers won't come by dividing Blacks and Whites into two armed camps. By calling anyone who doesn't agree with you a racist, or a ku klux klan member. This is something that Whites have to learn; but Blacks must learn it too.

Last summer I was doing some traveling through Europe. Before I left I remember being very weary of Germans; because whether I knew them or not, at least sixty members of my family were killed by the Nazis in World War II. Yet in Copenhagen I hung out with a group of Germans. We talked. Yes, their fathers were Nazi's, but the war was over, these young people born in the 1950's could not understand how it had ever begun. These people were warm; they laughed, we drank, the past was forgotten.

The hatred of the past HAD to be forgotten, because there has been so much hate, fear and death in the past that to dwell on it would have been insane. We must start anew. So don't tell me about how "I" persecuted you two hundred years ago. It is time to forget the hate. It is time to stop speaking in the royal "we". It is time to get back down to dealing in terms of individuals; dealing in terms of "you" and "me".

Hey baby, wanna park ?

Wishing to indulge in one of my favorite pastimes, but not being in the proper place in which to do so, I turned to my friend and said,

"Let's do something different. Something we haven't done together."

"Whaddoya have in mind?" he looked at bit, a bit perplexed.

"Let's go parking," I said.

Now that I think of it, I hadn't been parking since, since, well I really can't remember the last time I went parking. Oh-Oh, I think I'm getting old.

Anyway...

So we went parking. And we had a great time despite the fact that my knee is a little sore from hitting the steering wheel and I think I pulled my back out. But it was one helluva time.

So I got to thinking. (another thing I haven't done since, well since I don't know when) With the nostalgic craze of returning to those good old days, I haven't found anything worthwhile in which to partake. Those golden oldies of the 50's are just too noisy and they give me a headache. Streaking, well, streaking gives me a sore throat and a drippy nose because the nights are still a bit cool here. And wearing all white, a la Great Gatsby, especially during the muddy season around here, is a bit impractical. And I can't sing, so that scratches following in the footsteps of the Andrew and Pointer Sisters.

Parking could be bigger than streaking,

more fun

swallowing...

But I think I've found a new (well actually dug up an old) craze that will drive those nostalgic dazed people right down to the back alleys of the Physical Plant. How much more camp can you get than driving down that long lonesome country road in a '62 two toned blue Rambler with push button transmission? Maybe a '64 Cadillac convertible with electric windows.

But parking could solve a lot of problems. Take the all too familiar roomate hassle. Instead of throwing your roomate out, why not go out yourself and go parking? Explore new territories of nature, and the back seat. Want to go somewhere but don't have any money? Go parking, it's as cheap as the amount of gas you're willing to burn up. And if you don't have a car and a friend does, you don't even have to ask for the keys. You're fine as long as it's not parked under a street lamp.

If people got into the parking thing, it could be bigger than streaking, certainly more fun than gold fish swallowing, and more exciting than white pants. We could have park-ins and parking marathons.

If the shortage of gasoline inhibits our driving distances, then our cars will be no good. So let's put them to a better use and let's go parking.

State Senator James Kelly has authored a proposal which would, if it is passed, lower the quality of education at UMass and the other state colleges. The proposal, as amended and attached to the fiscal '75 state budget by voice vote of the Senate yesterday, calls for the UMass faculty to spend a minimum of nine hours in "contact" with their students in either a classroom or laboratory setting per week. Currently, Senator Kelly claims that, according to his survey, instructors only spend an average of 6.5 hours a week on contact with students.

Kelly's idea is a good one for saving money but would certainly be detrimental to both students and faculty for a number of reasons.

First, professors would have to spend more time planning classes and teaching them, thus lessen the opportunity of developing any personal student-teacher relationship. When a teacher is forced to teach twice as many classes, he or she must deal with double the amount of students and would find it next to impossible to answer individual needs and problems. The dilemma of "being just another number" is already too much of an issue on state college campuses.

Secondly, since instructors will have to prepare twice as many class hours, the pressure could easily lessen the quality of their work. Chancellor Bromery estimates that professors on this campus now spend around 56 hours a week doing work related to their teaching. By forcing them to do more, something in their work is bound to suffer. Also, such a measure would prevent professors from devoting time to their own individual research and possibly not allow them to keep pace with advances and changes.

Lastly, such a measure would definitely force good teachers to go elsewhere and discourage new, talented people to come to UMass. Right now the faculty here is generally well respected and has helped immensely in giving UMass Amherst a good name among state and private institutions. Kelly's proposal would in all probability, hurt the good standing that UMass can now claim.

The proposal was passed by the senate. It now goes to a joint committee for final consideration. On the surface Kelly's idea looks quite feasible, but underneath the outcome of such a measure poses more problems than the ones it seeks to solve. The passing of such a measure would inevitably cause a giant step backward for public education.

To NUKE or not to NUKE

By JOAN FASSNACHT
MDC Staff

Montague voters will vote May 20 on Northeast Utilities' proposal (NUKE) to build twin nuclear power plants in their town after months of public discussion and debate.

The referendum, slated in conjunction with the May 20 annual elections, is regarded as an informational referendum only, and as such bears no legal clout. However, selectmen have said that they would feel "duty bound" to oppose the plants if voters reject the NUKE plan.

Three questions pertaining to the nuclear power plant proposal will be included on the referendum. They include:

1. Simple "yes" or "no" questions as to whether the people want the nuclear power plants in town; whether the selectmen should be required to ask for a hearing by the Atomic Energy Commission before issuing a construction permit; and whether the selectmen should request a hearing by the AEC Reactor Safety Review Board prior to issuing a license to operate.

2. Voters will be asked to vote on a request to the State Legislature to create a moratorium on nuclear power plants until all safety and environmental features have been tested and alternate methods of generating power have been completely explored.

3. Voters will be asked to vote on the establishment of a citizen committee to study possible dangers to the land and people from nuclear plants; also whether the town meeting ban transportation of radioactive wastes across town lines until the committee reports that it is safe.

Controversy heightened last December 28 when Northeast Utilities president Lelan F. Sillin Jr. announced plans for the construction of a $1.35 billion, 2300 megawatt double-reactor plant in Montague. The 1500 acre site is located east of the Connecticut River at the Turner's Falls dam, midway between Amherst and Greenfield.

Within a month, at least four more citizen groups were formed and began debate over the issue. The groups included:

—The Hampshire-Franklin Committee to Safeguard Connecticut Valley. Ms. Portia Weiskel, a spokesman for the Committee describes the group as a "watchdog" over safety during construction of the plant. She has said, "If we can't stop it, at least we can come together to make it safer."

—The Hampshire Geological Association, a nonprofit corporation consisting of most of the geology professors at the five Connecticut Valley colleges. While the group has taken no official position, HGA did recommend to Montague selectmen that the best geological information and related engineering be obtained before making any decisions.

—The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), the Ralph Nader-affiliated, student-funded environmental and consumer group, released a report in March raising questions about the safety of nuclear plants in general and the Montague site in particular.

On a four-day speaking tour of western Massachusetts in mid-March, Ralph Nader termed nuclear plants, "the end of the United States of America" because of safety hazards in nuclear operations.

Northeast Utilities representatives attempted to rebut Nader's condemnation on March 22 in an open informational meeting with Connecticut Valley legislators in Greenfield. Robert Evans, Northeast Utilities assistant vice-president in charge of engineering construction at the Montague site emphasized the need of the utilities companies to develop nuclear power plants in the face of huge energy shortages. He said, "Our job is convince you that there are negligible risks in operating nuclear power plants."

—The Nuclear Objectors (N.O. Party), probably the most radical group opposed to construction of the plant. On April 16, the Party announced it was sponsoring candidates running for five Montague town offices on May 20.

Among the candidates is Samuel H. Lovejoy. Lovejoy was charged by Montague police with malicious destruction of personal property last February 22 when he toppled a Northeast Utilities weather observation tower at the proposed plant's site in protest of the impending construction. Lovejoy's case has been continued to the next session of the Hampshire-Franklin County grand jury.

While these established opposition groups continue their long fight against Northeast Utilities, at least one other area town and a local legislator are only now joining the action.

In Amherst in mid-April, selectmen approved the creation of a Nuclear Advisory Committee to study ways in which citizens can become involved in decisions related to nuclear plants. The Committee also plans to prepare and mail to the public an informational paper concerning the licensing of nuclear plants — written in laymen's language.

At the May 6 meeting of Amherst selectmen, Sel. Michael Sullivan plans to sponsor an article asking that the meeting, "request the state legislature to impose a moratorium on the construction of nuclear power plants in the state until their safety has been investigated."

Legislation co-sponsored in early April by Sen. John Olver (Dem.-Amherst), Sen. Chester Atkins (Dem.-Acton), Rep. James Collins (Dem.-Amherst), and Rep. Jonathan Healy (Rep.-Charlemont) to impose state standards and safety measures on nuclear power plants was reported out of the Safety Committee unfavorably. The bill would have formed a state monitoring board that would be independent of the AEC.

Not everyone is skeptical of or opposed to construction of the Montague plant. Dean Letourneau of Montague plans to collect 10,000 signatures on petitions favoring construction of the nuclear power plant. He started the petitions after various groups voiced their opposition so that those in favor of the plant could let it be known.

And an undaunted Northeast Utilities is scheduled to submit its formal application for a construction permit in Montague to the Atomic Energy Commission, this month. Acceptance of an 18-month review period will be followed by construction of the plant, scheduled to begin in early 1976. The first reactor will be completed in early 1981; the second in 1983.

But it all depends on how the residents of Montague vote on May 20.

Parking registration materials ready

Registration materials for next year's parking system are now ready. Persons presently registered in the system will receive a registration packet by campus mail. Those who did not furnish a valid campus address when applying for parking last year will be able to pick up the forms at the Parking Office in Hampshire House. If you have not received a packet by May 1, assume that it was not mailed.

Persons presently in the system have the options of renewing their present assignments (if the assignment was received before March 15), or applying for a change to another lot. The deadline for exercising the renewal option is May 15.

A continuation of the present assignment is guaranteed for all renewals received by that date. Persons presently in the system who apply for a change (in the assignment they held on March 15) will be given priority over new entrants into the system until May 15; after that date, all applicants will be considered as new.

Persons with unpaid parking fees for the current year, and persons who have defaulted on Court Summons' covering parking tickets, will not be issued registration materials until the amount owing has been paid.

Questions should be directed to the Parking Office, 103 Hampshire, Tel. 545-0065.

Nobody goes to France just to ride the railroads.

But when the wise ones get there, and want to get from one place to the next, the way they get around is by train.

The fact is, French trains give you more than comfort and convenience, more than speed and a window on the world. They give you value. For even in a day when almost everything is going up except the dollar, French trains are still one of the greatest transportation buys in the world.

Because distances from Paris are short, French trains go everywhere. To the medieval mysteries of Vezelay (163 miles, $13.50) and Carcassonne (503 miles, $41.00). To the Provence of Gaughin and van Gogh (486 miles, $39.50). To the vineyards of the Cote d'Or (220 miles, $18.50) and the sparkling sun of the Cote d'Azur (660 miles, $53.50). To castles and cathedrals. To Alps and oceans. To monuments of the Romanesque and Renaissance. To all the hidden corners of a country haunted by history and enriched by centuries of civilization.

Paris, of course, is Paris. But France is more. And it's all connected by 25,000 miles of track, more than 4,000 stations, and many hundreds of sleek, swift trains that will pamper you, feed you, even bed you down. While they whisk you from here to anywhere in no more than a few relaxing hours.

So if you really want to see France, see France by train. And see how economical great travel can be. While you're at it, ask about our other travel bargains—a 1st Class Eurailpass, or the 2nd Class Student-Railpass. For tickets and reservations, get in touch with your travel agent, or nearest French National Railroads office, 610 Fifth Avenue, New York 10020; 11 East Adams Street, Chicago 60603; 9465 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills 90212; 323 Geary St., San Francisco 94102; 2121 Ponce de Leon Blvd., Coral Gables 33134. Also in Toronto and Montreal.

Please send me literature describing how to get the most value out of my trip to France.

Quotes and notes

It's lock-up time!

Through the School of Education, an on-going practicum has been set up to enable a limited number of students to get a first-hand look at the process of incarceration and the problems of corrections. It basically consists of a 90 day internship in which participating students are incarcerated within a local county jail.

Applications for the internships are being taken for the upcoming summer and fall semesters. Participants in this program receive full academic credit (15 credits, summer and fall) along with free room and board.

Interested students in either the summer or fall session are requested to attend a general meeting which will be held Wednesday, May 8th, room 808 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m. Those unable to attend or with further questions should contact Andy at 546-5460. Applications can be picked up at the general meeting or at 466 Hills South.

Talk Italian style

Professor Carlo Golino (Professor of Italian) will be delivering a lexture on "Pirandello in Our Time" today at 2:30 in the third floor lounge of Herter Hall. Professor Golino is the Chancellor of UMass, Boston.

Hear Norwood high

The University Department of Music has invited the Norwood High School Band to present a concert in Bowker Auditorium at 11:15 a.m. Wednesday. The concert will be one hour long. The band, under the direction of Paul Alberta, is touring this week in Massachusetts and Connecticut.

Welfare rights on

The Committee on Poverty and the Student Volunteer Services are sponsoring a Welfare Rights Forum which will take place at the Campus Center tomorrow. Various aspects of welfare, the welfare system, and welfare rights will be discussed during the course of the forum.

The forum is scheduled to run from 2 p.m. in the afternoon until 6 p.m. in the evening, with both speeches and workshops planned.

Speeches will take place from approximately 2 p.m. until 4 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center, with workshops led by the various speakers to follow in different conference rooms of the Center. All are invited to attend.

Grads keeping tabs

The Student Development Center is interested in finding out the kinds of positions that this year's graduates are accepting, what are the plans of those not accepting employment, i.e. graduate school, other kinds of training, travel, or other future plans.

Please complete a card which will be available through your department and return the card to your department according to departmental directions by the final date of May 15th. If you have not received a card by May 13th, please stop and complete one which will be available in Berkshire House, Student Development reception area, Room 102. After may 15th, please return to Mrs. Dorothy B. Hardesty in the Student Development Center, Berkshire House.

Women Show: More

The Women's Show, a weekly program heard over WMUA on Tuesdays at 8 p.m., will present Part 2 of Women and Work: Secretaries At the University, tonight. Tune in and listen to this interesting hour program tonight on WMUA, 91.1 F.M.

You're serious about photography. So is the Canon F-1.

To you, photography is more than a hobby. You may never want to become a professional. Yet, your photography is as important a means of self-expression to you as your speech. You demand the same excellence in your photographic equipment as you do of your photographic skills.

The Canon F-1 is the camera that can fulfill any photographic task to which you put it. It can stand up to your ability in any situation.

Naturally, a great camera like the F-1 won't ensure great results. That's up to you. Yet—it's nice to know that your camera can grow with you as a photographer.

Part of the reason for this is the F-1 system. Since it was designed in totality, it offers total performance. There is nothing "added on" in the F-1 system. Everything works as it was designed to, and integrates superbly with everything else. You'll spend less time worrying about operating the camera than in shooting. And that's what creative photography is really all about.

Controls fall into place under each finger. It's no accident. Professionals who depend on a camera for their livelihood have a deep regard for the F-1's handling. It's amazing how much a comfortable camera can improve your work.

Sharing these lenses and many of these accessories are the new Electronic Canon EF, with fully automatic exposure control, the FTb, now improved with all exposure information visible in the finder, and the TLb, great for a second camera body or for getting started in Canon photography. Canon. For serious applications. For serious photographers.

Isn't it time you got serious?

"All of these programs are going to be affected by this legislation," he said, adding "most of these programs involve working hours that are not in a classroom mode."

Under the proposal, teachers at the state and community colleges would be required to spend a minimum of 12 hours with students. UMass, Lowell Tech and SMU profs must teach or be scheduled with students 9 hours a week and graduate school teachers would be required to teach a minimum of six hours a week.

UMass professors now average about 7½ hours a week in scheduled classes, according to the best estimates of a number of faculty questioned by The Collegian. But actual time spent with students in consultative situations is much higher by administration claims.

But a study by staff of Sen. James Kelley (D-Oxford), the original proponent of setting contact hours, showed UMass professors averaging six hours a week with students compared with a national average of comparable Universities of about 12 hours a week.

The preamble, as amended yesterday defines "contact hours" as "clock hours in direct, instructional contact with students in a classroom, laboratory or clinical setting."

Kelley, in proposing the clause, said many teachers are spending too much time on their own personal projects.

Kelley said he proposed the preamble in order to force UMass trustees to make professors accountable to the public for their time, saying "The squeeze is on the taxpayer's dollar in every area."

The preamble, when proposed last week ready for floor action yesterday, drew marked criticism from administration, student and faculty leaders at this campus and at UMass-Boston.

Give till it helps.

Sheean hits Sarg on death penalty

By EDWARD W. BASSETT

MILTON, Mass. (UPI) — Republican gubernatorial hopeful Carroll Sheean sharply criticized Gov. Francis W. Sargent Sunday for his opposition to the death penalty and appointing "Itinerant, trainee administrators" as his top aides..

"Governor Sargent seems to have forgotten that the first function of government is to look after the safety of the people," said Sheehan, and "yet he is opposed to the death penalty."

"He seems to believe the death penalty is a deterrent in cases where a policeman is murdered. "What I want to know" Sheehan asked, "is why wouldn't it be just as strong a deterrent against murdering anyone else."

Sheehan said, "even if the legislature passes the death penalty, you just know the governor and the governor's council is going to short circuit it by handing out commutations."

Conn. redefines obscenity

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Connecticut now has an obscenity law.

Gov. Thomas J. Meskill Monday signed a bill making the state of Connecticut the "community" for purposes of determining what is pornography. Also enacted was a measure re-repealing the corroborative requirement in sex offense crimes.

Under the obscenity measure, any material will be considered obscene if it "does not have serious literary, artistic, political, educational, religious or scientific value."

In judging what is obscene, contemporary community standards will be the guidelines, and in this case Connecticut will be considered the "community".

Dear Aggie:
Never does it on Sunday

Dear Aggie,

I'm a stunning raven-haired sorority girl graduating this semester from the School of Nursing. I consider myself normal in every respect, but recently I've found myself attracted to clergymen of all faiths.

I'm not a devout worshipper, to say the least. In fact, I don't even listen to the sermon. I think I'm attracted to them because of their unattainability and their clergical garb.

I'm frantic because I just can't keep away but I'm getting nowhere. I'm really looking forward to going to the altar, but I don't know which side or which one. Can you help me?

Never on Sunday

Dear (maybe) Never,

Don't fret. It sounds like a psychological phase to me. People are often wanting those things they can't have. It must be an inherent human dilemna. I don't want to tell you not to go to your place of worship anymore, so, while you're there, why not ask The Man Upstairs for some assistance?

If you're "really looking forward to going to the altar" why not concentrate on all those lovely eligible bachelors running around. If you're so "stunning", you shouldn't have that much trouble 'obtaining' one. (Sorry about that, men)

And now for an original poem written just for this column:

It's spring, you know,
Of course you know.
Why else would you feel sick?
Your head is spinning
Your marks are dropping
It's hit you like a brick!
"Oh, woe is me!," is what you cry
As at your F you stare
"Whatever's to become of me?"
As Lonely Hearts' Club blare
A one-sided love is what it is,
The worst that does exist
And even worse, it's continuous
How that pining does persist!
Yes, love is worth all of its weight
In golden misery
But you know what 'Dear Aggie' says
"It'll all end happily."

Talk to your TV!

Does Amherst really need a cable television system with seventy channels, two-way communication, a fully equipped local production studio free for community use and computerized information storage and retrieval access? Who can afford the luxury of shopping by television, getting mail through cable facmile reproduction or having all town and university government meetings cablecast to subscribers? For $5.00 a month isn't the most we can expect to receive channel 38 and the Bruins games?

The Cable Television Advisory Committee is now reviewing Amherst's cable television needs. Meetings of the committee are open to the public. Students, in particular, are invited to the next session on Wednesday, May 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Jones Library of Amherst (across from the Amherst Cinema.)

Students may also call Bonnie Isman, Chairperson, for more information at 253-3101 or write to the Cable Television Advisory Committee, Town Hall, Amherst, Ma. 01002 to become part of the committee's mailing list.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Almost anything can happen where Leo is concerned. The Fire signs are impulsive, have an instinct for gambling and appeal to an audience. The Fire signs are Aries, Leo and Sagittarius. The cards are thrown in the air and it is possible that a "full house" could fall down. Aries can "open" with a jack and draw a flush. Sagittarius can back a 10-to-1 prospect and emerge a winner. The excitement of play is second nature to Leo and, win or lose, the game is played with a flourish.

– – – – –

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on "higher learning," travel, special correspondence, writing and advertising. Spotlight the unique. Find different ways of presenting product--and yourself. Pisces, Virgo persons could be in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money, costs, investments are featured. Partner or mate plays significant role. Inventories, expenditures, tax write-offs are considered. Contract can be revised. Assume additional responsibility. You gain by utilizing knowledge gained from recent experience.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish rather than begin--find where you stand and what current situation means to your future. Aggressive associate does have your best interests at heart. Know it and respond accordingly. Don't fight progress.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Vitality returns. You make impressive new contacts. Bring forth creative resources. Show that you can handle task which co-worker fumbled. Keep resolutions concerning diet, health and work. You have chance to correct past mistakes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with romance, change, variety. Your intuitive intellect is sharply honed. You gain by following hunch. One who aided in past could make reappearance. Sense of security will be enhanced.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Stick to the practical. Build solid structure. Older family member should be given chance to express view. Be flexible enough to revise plan that is filmsy. Gemini, Virgo persons are drawn to you and can aid.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Spotlight is on out-of-way places. Find what you need by making inquiries. Throw aside false pride. By stating your needs, they can be fulfilled. Short trip brings surprise--of pleasant variety. Telephone message leads to exciting project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Ideas concerning income, financial security are highlighted. You can make inquiries and obtain valuable information. Key is to take initial step. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture. Cash flow can be increased.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar cycle is such that you feel more like doing things and going places. You are encouraged by attitude of family member. Your timing improves. What you do has mark of personal style. You get better results than in recent past.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look behind the scenes. Co-operate with special project involving charity which benefits hospital or institution. See situations, individuals in light of reality. Pisces, Virgo persons figure prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money, achievement and emotional satisfaction can be featured. Friendship is transformed into meaningful relationship. Efforts bring solid results. Some of your hopes, wishes are fulfilled.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You receive backing; one who has confidence in you says, in effect, "show your stuff." Key is confidence. Act in authoritative manner. View from the top will be pleasing. Keep climbing. Refuse to be thwarted by jealous associate.

12 class-hour rule seen compromising by faculty

Faculty contacted for comment at UMass saw a class-hour preamble, if strictly implemented, as compromising scholarship for the sake of increased teaching, and putting the emphasis on transmitting knowledge rather than adding to it.

But Stevenson W. Fletcher, a professor and acting head of the department of Hotel Restaurant and Travel Administration, who is secretary and presiding officer of the Faculty Senate, said he "would rather not comment" on the legislative move.

"The senate has not discussed it and I don't think it appropriate for me to make a formal statement," he said.

Fletcher said the executive committee of the senate met Friday afternoon to consider the increased teaching proposal and decided that formal statements should come from campus chancellor Randolph W. Bromery "because this is a very serious issue."

Loren P. Beth, political science professor and president of the UMass chapter of the American Assoc. of University professors, said the increased hours would "make it more difficult to hire and keep good faculty."

"It would make it more difficult for faculty to produce scholars in the sense that they would have to spend a great deal more time on their teaching duties and they wouldn't be able to contribute to research," he said.

He said the function of a University is largely "to advance knowledge, not transmit it."

"Many legislators don't really compare us to themselves correctly," Beth added.

"If you ask legislators how much time they spend on the floor you'd probably find it isn't very much. If you ask him he would say he has a lot of other responsibilities," Beth said.

Beth estimated that the average UMass prof spends 7½ hours a week in the classroom, not the six quoted by Kelley.

Howard O. Brogan, commonwealth professor of English and president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said the proposal would be "ludicrously inadequate for a university with a big graduate program....it's a very narrow way of looking at education...I can't believe it will be approved in its present form...research is going to take a blow to teaching."

Savini sees rule disruptive

Student Government association head Richard C. Savini, 25, a senior released a statement reacting to the proposed 12 contact hour minimum teaching load For state professors here and at other colleges.

Part of his statement follows.

Putting the faculty on a minimum of 12 clock hours, which in our interpretation is approximately 5 three period (1 hr) classes per week (short ½ hour) would cause undue disruption of student oriented programs that truly involves students in their own education. It could even mean the end of student faculty relationships beyond the classroom. As students we have worked to make academic programs at the University responsive to students, as well as workable for faculty and encourage non-traditional forms of education which have proved invaluable to both faculty and students, mostly to students.

Garbers Gorillas find spring successful

By BEN CASWELL

At the start of this season Gorilla coach Dick Garber said, "We will take each game as it comes, one at a time." Well the Gorillas have been doing just that, in fact they have taken their last seven games one at a time. In the process of those wins they have outscored the opposition by a 85-14 margin in the last four contests.

Early on in the season coach Garber also said, "Comparative scores mean very little." If that is so then it is important to look at each game individually in retrospect to gain a real view of the Gorillas season thus far. First of all were those two one-goal losses at the very start of the season. A matter of minutes is what has kept the Gorillas from an undefeated record at this point in the season. Against Hofstra (a 7-6 loss) the team "did not play well", as Garber put it. "If we had played well we would have won," he also stated. That game was played before a lot of hometown fans, friends, and family on Long Island. It also was the first BIG game for all of the freshman players and since that initial shock they have all played quite a bit better. Hofstra would have been a really nice win to have had under their belts related not only to national rankings (in which Hofstra is ahead of UMass now) but even more so related to the confidence-boost factor that it might have given the team.

Next came Cortland State, last year's small college national champions and a team that beat the Gorillas twice last season. What can be said about a 10-9 sudden-death overtime loss? In this game the Gorillas gave a very fine come from behind effort to tie the game but they could just not beat the Cortland goalie in the overtimes. This certainly was a very tough loss to take, but since then the Gorillas have rebounded for seven straight fairly convincing victories.

They beat UConn on a rain soaked field by a score of 16-3 and in line with the sloppy day it was a somewhat sloppily-played game.

Harvard was their next victim and this game had a little more than really meets the eye. On their way to a romp penalties really hurt the Gorillas and they ended up kind of hanging on for the win. This was the first game that the mid-fielders really started to cut well and the Gorillas execution was starting to improve. The 9-4 victory was another step towards the kind of play that coach Garber would like to see as he said, "It wasn't that pretty of a game; we won but we still got things to work on."

Since Harvard the only real game was against Boston College, this game also played under terrible conditions under the lights at B.C. It could have been more likely a water polo match rather than a lacrosse game as it poured for most of the game and that is really what kept the score somewhat close in this 13-8 Gorilla victory. Their fast break was slowed down by the conditions but again in this game they were executing fairly well. Since then in sucession the Gorillas have beaten Fairleigh Dickinson 21-13 (which was before B.C.), Holy Cross 22-5 which was a joke most of the way, Williams 21-1 which was billed as a supposedly somewhat tough game but turned out to be a laughter as the Gorillas palyed their best sixty minutes of lacrosse thus far this season, and most recently Amherst 20-0 which had defensemen playing attack and attackmen playing defense at the end of the game. These last few games have obviously been very little competition for the Gorillas but it has been a good time for experimentation, rest for the regulars and playing time for the subs.

All through this winning streak the Gorillas have remained second in the New England ratings and ninth in the national polls. Their play has been erratic at times and superb at other times, they have been executing their type of fast breaking game fairly consistently most of the time. Their offensive firepower has been seen quite frequently and the defense has stood up very steadily. Depth has been a key factor in that they have three fine midfield lines that all can play the type of game they need to play to win.

What all of the above means related to their 8-2 record and some impressive looking victory margins is that they have a good chance of making the N.C.A.A. playoffs which includes the top eight teams in the country. Next Wednesday at three o'clock behind Boyden they play Brown University and that is it. That contest outcome will really decide their fate although it is likely that they could win that one and still not make the playoffs. It depends on the score and what other teams do in their big games. Regardless of the outcome though it appears that the Gorillas have one of the campus' finest spring teams and it also is fairly evident with the freshman factor and all that they will have a contending team for some time to come. Keep your eye on Garber's Gorillas their effort and style of play when it is on is really "something to behold" and they really are a credit to the "fastest sport on two feet".

SPORTING OPINIONS

Frank McInerney's "catch 22"

To The Editor:

Those responsible for phasing down mens' gymnastics seem to be playing administrative "catch-22." It's a game played by first deciding what sports the Athletic Department should promote, skipping objectives and goals, then manipulating the existing rules and regulations until the Department looks the way you designed it. This type of administrative malpractice caanot pretend to serve the interests of the students because it excludes them from the process.

UMass sports fans must applaud and support the action of the Student Senate to make the Athletic Department more responsive to student needs. It seems unusual that while the controversy over mens' gymnastics has precipitated such heated arguement, Mr. McInerney has not specified his department's objectives for examination by the students. If he could delineate the goals and priorities of the Athletic Department then decisions, like that over gymnastics, could be examined in relation to those goals.

If the Athletic Department cannot specify its objectives then the entire organization is suspect. It is important, not only for gymnastics but for all sports on campus, that a statement of purpose be made before we sling more mud at one another.

Signed,
Jim Bilec

Steve Saraceno's ego-trip

To Mr. Steve "average" Saraceno:

"The door is locked, bolted, and barred. This agent sits hunched over the keyboard, pecking away." Pecking away for sure, pecking like a chicken with its head cut off. "Joe Fan" you have done it again. Actually without realizing it you are some of the best publicity the men's gymnastics team will ever get. I still find it difficult to fathom your line of thinking as far as the gymnastics situation goes. And that is why I did not respond to your early article entitled "Gymnastics--Math".

In taking it in your hands to speak for the average sports fan I think you would have been more appropriate in saying you were speaking for the average sports writer. What I thought the major purpose of a sports column in a responsible newspaper was and what you have exhibited in your last two articles differ greatly. To present the facts that are true to life and are not distorted, such as you say that there is "a lack of funds in the athletic department," is what the paper should be concerned with. There is actually a "lack of a position that is state appointed," to quote Athletic Director Frank McInerney. Your journalism seems to relate to me much more of an ego trip than anything else. It must have been great fun to stir up all that controversy and get your name in a sixty-point headline saying "IRATE LETTERS TO STEVE SARACENO."

Some of the presumptions you made about the "average" sports fan were to me not only ridiculous but also outright degrading. "It is not a sport to get excited over" should have had added "for you" because how else could you be speaking then but only in your own pervertedly personal terms. "Its like chess. Some people are really into it, but many, many more are not. Compared to the meat and potatoe sports; football, basketball, baseball and hockey", what meat and potatoe sport got more international coverage than the Fischer-Spassky match save any Olympic competition (which by the way if you had caught you would have noted that gymnastics was one of the foremost attractions). Olga Korbut dull?

Mr. Saraceno, your misunderstanding of the situation I suppose can be understood considering you are only an "average" sports fan and henceforth I think an "average" sports writer. Since when is a team that fares quite well in N.C.A.A. competition a "semi-big-time" team? What should they do, sign pro-contracts and drop out of school for you to recognize them as one of the finest teams this school has ever put out. Your "meat and potato" sports are ones that I agree are important ones but the way you use them in your article in contrast to gymnastics I kind of liken them to the "meat and potatoes" sometimes served at the dining commons at lunch. You know what I mean; deli ham and potato puffs.

Ruggers annihilate Brown in A game, lose B

By DOUG SURETTE

In two games against Brown Saturday, the UMass rugby "B" team took it on the chin, 20-3, while the "A" team came back with an impressive 22-4 victory over their Brown counterparts.

In the "B" game Brown had too much finesse and speed, never allowing the UMass attack to get untracked. They were behind early in the game on a great individual effort by one Brown player and never really challenged the rest of the way. UMass' only score was on a penalty kick by Bucky Richardson.

The "A" game was just the opposite. Brown's previously undefeated Ivy League Champion team was overwhelmed by a spirited UMass attack led by Chip Connors and Brian Kane. Connors played a courageous game, scoring two tries (8 points), one of them after a long run by O. J. Cipriani, and being seriously injured after the second score. Kane's kicking was exceptional with the wind-factor, booting two points after kicks and two penalty kicks for a total of 10 points. The other try was scored by both Dan Georgiana and George Motta. By the end of the first half the game was well in hand, 18-4, and UMass' streaking forwards and hard-hitting backs controlled everything for the rest of the contest.

Next Saturday they host the New England Championships here across from Boyden Gym. Twenty-five teams are expected to show, and UMass, now 5-2, is considered one of the favorites.

Crew sweeps NE Open prepares for Dad Vail

By BOB ESTELLE

The UMass men's crew swept the New England Open Intercollegiate Championships last Saturday at Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester.

The first race of the day saw the UMass freshman shell run away from the rest of the field to take a four-length victory. The frosh will be traveling to the Dad Vail on Thursday heavily favored to win the freshman event.

The second race of the day saw another UMass victory as the jayvees won by three lengths.

A four-man shell representing UMass won their race by four lengths. Racing in this boat were Robert Cullen, Walter Berger, Jim Tilley and Jim Linnehan. Andy Burton was the coxswain.

The varsity race was the final race of the regatta and also was the most exciting. Harvard pulled ahead by four feet at the start but the Minutemen caught them halfway through the race and won it by half a length. The winning time was 6:02.2 which was excellent since the water was very rough.

Next week will be the last race of the season. The UMass varsity will be looking to defend their Dad Vail championship of a year ago. The main opponents will be the Coast Guard, whom the Minutemen defeated last week, and Trinity.

The varsity looks to have Peter Berg at the bow, Paul Gowen at 2-seat, Jack Watkins at 3-seat, Kevin Conner at 4-seat, Rich Clair at 5-seat, Bill Fitzpatrick at 6-seat, Peter Flood at 7-seat and Steve Loomer at the stroke. Bruce Kline is the coxswain.

More information will be coming on the Dad Vail next week.

Fem-water polers win

By MDC Staff

In recent action the Women's Water Polo team defeated a hard swimming squad from Radcliffe 7-6.

Being a strong swimming team, the Cliffies played a full pool woman-on-woman game. This forced UMass offensive aces Kathy McDonald and Jane Welzel to play defense. Pinpoint passing and fine ball handling enabled the Mermaids to fast break and show a little offense of their own. UMass jumped out to a 2-0 lead by the end of the first quarter.

Tough defensive work by guards Jeannie Abrahamson and Judy Day forced many turnovers at the expense of the Cliffie forwards. Backing up the UMass squad were Jane Kennedy and Janet McGrath who turned in fine performances in the cage.

UMass dominated most of the game and went into the fourth quarter with a 6-2 lead. Radcliffe came alive in the fourth scoring 4 goals. A tough UMass press managed to quell the drive, and allowed them to come out on top by one.

The girls will travel to Radcliffe this weekend to wrap up their season in a tournament with Radcliffe and Northeastern. They hope to add to their 3-0 record, having already defeated Boston College 10-4 and 5-3.

JV's lose two to Springfield

By BILL DOYLE

The lack of previous competition cost the UMass JV baseball team Saturday as they finally met an opponent with a good reputation and came out on the short end of both games of a doubleheader against Springfield 6-1 and 1-0.

In the first game starting pitcher Mark Battista's wildness cost him a run in the first inning as a hit batsmen, a walk and two wild pitches scored the first Springfield run. Battista settled down to shut Springfield out for the next three innings, getting out of a bases loaded no out jam in the fourth.

Meanwhile UMass could manage nothing against Springfield pitcher Gary Donahue. UMass scored their only run of the afternoon in the fifth on Charley Johnson's infield hit, a sacrifice and a two base throwing error. Springfield scored five runs in their own half of the fifth to put the game out of reach. Two walks and a passed ball put Battista in trouble. A fielder's choice and a single scored two runs and sent Battista to the showers. His replacement, Jim Witterell didn't fare any better as he gave up a long three run homer to Springfield's Brian Cox to complete the scoring.

In the second game a classic pitchers' duel occurred with Steve Paylor edging UMass' Gus Bedard 1-0. Bedard gave up only three hits and walked only one, but true to form, the base on balls hurt him badly. In the fourth inning, Bedard walked the first batter on a 3-2 pitch. An opposite field, soft line drive down the right field line went for a single and put runners at first and third. A grounder to short scored the only run of the second game when the throw to the plate was late.

By MIKE BROPHY

The Fairfield and UMass baseball teams both enter today's contest in Conn. out of their respective conference races and with seasonal records well below the .500 mark. May the best team win, or perhaps one should say the better of two evils.

"We could be out on that field for an awful long time if both teams commit the errors they have been making all season long," said Fairfield Coach Don Cook.

Cook, also A.D. at Fairfield, is presently suffering through a dismal 6-19 season in which he is feeling the same sad effects that plague Coach Dick Bergquist. He has two former great pitchers limping their way through poor seasons with arm problems.

The ace of the Fairfield staff, Bob Trojanowski, will throw for the opponents and will take a 1-6 record into the contest with him. He is a big strong righty who, two years ago, was among the top ten college pitchers as a strikeout artist and last season developed problems similar to those of UMass captain John Olson.

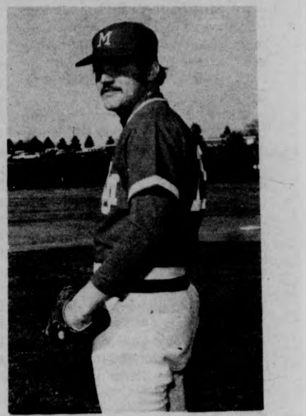
UMass, on the other hand, is 4-11 going into today's game, averaging nearly five errors per outing. The hitting has not been there to bail out the fielding miscues and the poor pitching.

Suffice it to say that if a book were written on one of the two teams playing today, it would in all probability, apply to the other squad word for word.

Fairfield has committed 92 errors in 25 games and presently is suffering through an eight game losing streak and will be looking to continue the Minutemen's current seven game winless streak.

Jeff Reardon is slated to start for UMass and will probably pitch for only half the game as Bergquist says he now has to go to a split pitching scheme with the great number of games coming up in the immediate future. Reardon is 0-2 on the year but has shown good control lately in short stints of game work.

UMass will return home on Wednesday with a twinbill against Dartmouth.



JEFF REARDON — Scheduled to start.

By DAVE VARG

UMass had a field day yesterday against hapless Smith College. The women's softball team looked like they were practicing Chinese Fire Drills on offense as the players constantly circled the bases. Everybody hit, everybody stole bases, and everybody scored runs. And when the dust finally lifted, UMass had trounced their Northampton neighbors by a score of 16-0.

While the offense was rolling up the score, pitcher Vic Lentine was smothering the Smith hitters. Vic allowed only three baserunners in the entire game, only one of these ever reaching third. She gave up just one hit, struck out seven and walked but two.

UMass simply strangled Smith's offense and mangled Smith's pitching. The game reached the point where various players could harmlessly trade positions. Micki Locke played first base, Chris Molonea played right field, Barb Doucet took shortstop, and JV Barb Foss came in at third. Even the coaches took it easy after the score had built up. Terry Pudlo flashed the signals from the third base coaching box for the latter portion of the game.

The hitting has never been so pronounced as it was yesterday. UMass collected 12 hits and drew seven walks. Three UMass hitters had four baggers. Chris Molonea, Jenny Edminster and Karen Fruzzetti all poked home runs, the latter a grand slam. And even when UMass hitters made outs, they still game the sphere a ride. Pat Bradley sent a creaming line drive down the third base line only to be denied by an astonished third base person. Vic Lentine cracked three long drives to the outfield but each was corraled on good catches.

Needless to say, the game was all UMass from the start. The home team tallied five runs in the first inning, one in the second, eight in the third, and two in the fourth. After that they called it a day and enjoyed themselves.

UMass' record is now 5-1. But two of the toughest teams around are still to be played. UMass will strive to rebound against their old foes from Springfield (the only club to defeat them up to now). And next Tuesday they'll wrap up the regular season against Bridgewater. Then it's off to Nebraska.

Bruins battle Broad St. Bullies

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Bruins have lost only one home game and tied two against the Philadelphia Flyers since 1967, and Boston Coach Bep Guidolin hopes the domination continues when the teams meet Tuesday night in the opening game of the National Hockey League playoff final.

The Flyers are the most penalized team in NHL history, but that doesn't seem to bother Guidolin, who said Monday, "We have some pretty big men who know how to handle themselves."

Guidolin said the Flyers, "could be a little tired from the extra work they had to do" in beating the New York Rangers, four games to three, in a grueling semifinal series for the right to meet the Bruins.

Guidolin said he is not worried about the Flyers' star centers, Bobby Clarke and Rick MacLeish. MacLeish might play against the Bruins' great Phil Esposito, but Guidolin said, "Espie's going to get his goals.

"Oh, he may be shut out for a game or so," Guidolin said, "but he'll get his share. And if he doesn't, his wingers Ken Hodge and Wayne Cashman, should."

The Bruins have not played since April 30, when they beat the Chicago Black Hawks, four games to two, in the other semifinal. But if past history is an example, the Bruins won't have to fear losing strength.

In 1970, the Bruins were idle for a week after beating Chicago — then overwhelmed the St. Louis Blues in four straight to win their first Stanley Cup in 29 years.

But West Division champion Philadelphia might not be easy to beat. Even though the Flyers have beaten Boston only once in the past 28 meetings, they were just edged out by the East champion Bruins for the home ice advantage for the series.

Baseball's future looks "WoBbLey"

By STEVE DeCOSTA

Baseball was, in the early '60's, the start of the great sports expansion. In that decade, the major leagues grew from eight teams apiece to ten and finally to their present level of twelve.

But, despite it all, baseball is the sport that has been least affected by the broadening of its horizons. Football, basketball, and hockey have all been riddled by recruiting and raiding wars due to the formation of new leagues. To this point, only baseball has been exempt.

But now the grand old game is threatened. The World Baseball League, affectionately known as the WoBbLe, is attempting to undermine the foundations of the game.

The WoBbLe is following in the great tradition of the American Football League, the American Basketball Association, the World Hockey Association, the World Football League, and the newest addition, the International Basketball Association. All were attempts by greedy businessmen to grab a chunk of the American sports fans' dollar. Some have been successful, while the jury is still out on others.

The WoBbLe is, excuse the pun, on shaky ground. Many of its franchises are to located in cities that cannot even boast of facilities worthy of a major league operation.

Still, the Columbus franchise has already seen fit to offer Pete Rose a long-term contract said to be worth $4 million. If this is true, the new league could become an economic force to be reckoned with.

Football, basketball, and hockey have all survived and in some cases, thrived under expansion wars. The situation is baseball is different.

Football and basketball use universities and colleges for their major, if not only source of new talent. Hockey uses the junior leagues of Canada and, to a lesser but growing extent, American colleges, for the same purposes. The advanced state of such competition on the lower level facilitates the rather easy switch to the professional ranks.

Baseball is in a different boat. It has its own stocking system, the minor leagues.

True, the other three sports have minor leagues franchises but the situation is different. They use this method of advancement only irregularly; baseball depends on it. How many top-flight baseball players have made the jump directly from college to the pros? (Please don't count Pete Broberg.)

If the WoBbLe is to make a respectable start they will need only a few established stars. To fill out their rosters, the WoBbLers will almost inevitably took to the minor leaguers, players with a lot of baseball experience who will find it difficult to turn down the big money sure to be offered.

How this will affect the baseball establishment almost goes without saying. For several years, the status quo should remain unaffected. But new blood will be needed. Graduating collegians, who, until now, have not had the sophistication of skills, will be forced to make the jump to the big time. The quality of the game can only suffer immeasurably.

Baseball is still the grand old game. It has survived World Wars, scandals in its own ranks, and even a previous effort at expansion (the old Continental League). But that was before the era of the big buck.

Strangely enough, if the WoBbLe succeeds, it will be sounding its own death knell, as well as that of one of the few remaining great American traditions.

Por David Labiosa

El aprendizaje de una nueva lengua crea problemas para aquellos hispanos que se encuentran en un ambiente donde todo es en ingles. Muchos de estos problemas son los mismos problemas que cualquier persona que no maneja "el dificil," confronaria. Otros no son mas universales.

Unos de los porblemas mas grandes de los porgramas de la ensenaza de inges como segunda idioma es la falta de directores y maestros preparados especificamente para la ensanaza y organizacion de estos programas. El maestro de ingles como segundo idioma tiene que conocer los porblemas en el aprender una segunda lengua. La persona que hace su especilidad en ingles, y en literature digamos, no sta especificamente preparada para ensanar ingles como segunda idioma.

Frecuentemente el maestro que se encuentra en programas de ingles para hispano-parlantes no conoce la tecnica o metodologia de la ensenanza de ingles como segunda (o tercero o cuarto) idioma. Muy pocas son las veces que estos programas tienen personas que conozcan los aspectos linguisticos fundamentales para la ensenanza de cualquier lengua. Mas comun es encontrar maestros que insultan la inteligencia de sus estudiantes con materiales que no solamente son inapropriados, pero perjudiciales al aprendizaje del ingles. Esto nos trae al proximo problema — el de materiales.

La falta de materiales disenados expresamente con el estudiante universitario es otro problema que no insulten la inteligencia de estos adultos, que tengan en mente que el no entender una lengua no es equivalente a ser estupido o retardado.

A veces los materiales tendran que servir varias funciones. Es posibleque a la vez que ensenen el ingles al estudiante tambien puedan auydar al estudiante a adquirir aquellas habilidades, tecnicas, que les podran auydar en sus estudios universitarios.

La universidad es un producto de la sociedad, asi que es natural que las actitudes que existen en la sociedad se encontraran en los maestros en la universidad. En Norte American, especificamente los Estados Unidos de American, existe cierta intolerancia increible hacia otras lenguas aparte del ingles. Aunque este pais esta compuesto de multiples razas de personas con corespondientes numeros de lenguas, la actitud y tendencia ha sido al monolinguismo y no al multilinguismo.

Tomando esto en cuenta, no es sorprendente encontrar maestros que demuestran cierta actitud de condecendencia hacia estudiantes que no manejan "el dificil." Pero a veces encontramos perosnas que sencillamente no estan preocupados pos estos estudiantes — no estan comprometidos a mejorar la educacion de personas que la necesitan tan profundamente para mejorarse. Eso

Pildoras Para Ella Y Para El

Por Irma Rivera

Los avances obtenidos por un equipo de cientificos brasilenos, dirigidos por el doctor Elsimar Coutinho, permiten afirmar que dentro de poco tiempo el hombre y la mujer deberan alternarse en la obligacion de tomar anticonceptivos a fin de controlar la natalidad.

El jefe del equipo cientifico es una distinguida personalidad internacional en el campo de los anticonceptivos. El resultado de sus investigaciones lo dio a conocer en una conferencia de prensa ofrecida en Rio de Janeiro. Conto que en la etapa experimental se ha trabajado con 30 parajas y que no se lanzara al mercado hasta que exista total seguiridad sobre sus efectors secondarios. Hay un riesgo: el consumo de la pildora "Unisex" puede provocar ligeros cambios en los organos reproductores del hombre y la mujer, despues de un uso prolongado. Pero todo volvera a la normalidad una vez termine el consumo de la pildora.

El doctor Coutinho y sus colaboradores han desarrollado otras formas de control e la natalidad, como la pildora masculina, que tiene la ventaja de aumentar la potencia sexual del hombre, porque incrementa la libido.

El especialista brasileno estima que hay un obstaculo sicologico muy importante entre los varones para el consumo de la "pildora": "Muchos la ven como algo que conduce a la perdida de la masculinidad. Esto es especialmente cierto en American Latina. Pienso que los norteamericanos seran los primeros en tomarla sin problemas." Mientras tanto se sigue experimentando en los paises Latinoamericanos.

Environmental Colonialism In Puerto Rico

By Rafael Otero

The purpose of this article is to see in what manner the industrialization, sewers, motor vehicles and other contributions have affected the environment (animal reign and plant reign) and the public well-being due to the extreme conditions of the air pollution in Puerto Rico.

At the end of the forties decade started in Puerto Rico the industrial revolution. The government of P.R. in association with industrialists from the United States established the bases to industrialize the island. A program called "Operation Bootstrap" was put under way in 1942. Their primary purpose was to improve the island's economy. This program offered to manufacturers incentives such as, exemption from cooperate income tax and tax exemption on dividends on profit distribution to residents of Puerto Rico. Many economic aspects were considered within the program but the measures about the effects which ere going to be and the consequence of the industry to the environment were not thought over. In the late sixties the environmental problem particularly the atmospheric condition became more important and ultimately the government started to estimate it.

The problem of contamination once created is very difficult to solve. A collective effort of different disciplines of scientific techniques are required to evaluate the magnitude of the problem to determine the ecological impact. The settlement of instrumental and educational programs are necessary to control the contamination applying accurate measures.

The condition in Puerto Rico in an investigation carried out in 1968 by the State Environmental Protection Agency made evident that more than two million tons of pollution substances were affecting the Island's atmosphere. The Island with 3,500 square miles and a population of 2.5 million (according to the 1960's Census) of inhabitants with an average of around 784 persons per each square mile is another victim of the many countries in the world suffering air pollution.

At present operating in the Island are 2,800 industry foundations. It is hoped that by 1975 the number will be surpassed giving a total of 3,400 industries. The contribution of the superiority of these industries to the atmosphere contamination, due to the burn of combustibles and the process of manufacturing operation, given an estimated total of 325 tons of polluters per day. There are 71 sewers where 1,850 tons of sweepings are burned daily. Based on this number it is calculated that 2,184 tons of polluters are

Integracion O Resistencia

Jaime Santiago y su grupo hicieron los deleites de la concurrencia reunida en el Campus Center para celebrar con nosotros la SEMANA PUERTORRIQUENA.

By Miguel A. Rivera

En los circulos estudiantiles de esta universidad se ha vendido la idea de que los puertorriquenos hemos comenzado como lo hicieron los otros grupos de migrantes que vinieron a Estados Unidos; se quedaron; sufrieron al principio; pero, ya sen han "superado" y estan completamente integrados a la vida consumerista norteamericana. La intencion clara de tales argumentaciones es siempre la de primero: brindarle un sosiego al oprimido para que sufra con paciencia los vejamenes porque mas tarde la sociedad sera su casa y el dolor de la explotacion pasara a ser su deporte favorito, con la unica diferencia entroncada en el hecho de que vendran otros grupos a sufrir sobre cuyas espaldas podra desquitarse las que le hicieron a el.

Segundo: legalizar las tesis de que Estados Unidos es la tierra de promision y, peor aun, hacer creer que se puede sustentar la teoria del "melting pot". Logrando inculcar ambas metralladas ideas en la cabeza del puertorriqueno exiliado se pretende dilatar y ahogar con el tiempo las quejas productos del sufrimiento.

Realidad existencial del hombre

En el mundo urbano-industrial moderno el hombre ha sido negado integralmente. El hombre experimenta la horrible crisis de su relacion con la sociedad "civilizada" moderna. Tal vez, como diria un existencialista, el problema se resuma a como y que status autentico concederle a la persona en un mundo impersonal. Por eso, el hombre no se encuentra en lo que hace. Se ha enajenado y vive una vida de un sonambulismo organizado. Depende de la maquina y de la organizacion burocratica. Realmente, lo que ha sucedido es que ha sido succionado por ambas cosas; se ha convertido en un tornillo mas de la misma maquina, en esclavo de lo que una vez pretendio fuera su esclavo mismo. Por esas razones podemos asegurar que los mejor adaptados a esas condiciones son los que menos desean salir de ellas. Es que en esta sociedad el exito se alcanza en la medida en que nos apartemos de la personaliad consciente para entregarnos, como amantes enloquecidos, a la mecanica burocratica del sistema.

Somera realidad del puertorriqueno exiliado en E.U.

La condicion econimica y social a la que van a parar los puertorriquenos migrantes no es realmente mas importante que las actitudes con que son recibidos por los estadounidenses. Considero que esa aseveracion es correcta y para probarlo con mas claridad solo faltaria mencionar el caso de los invasores cubanos en el exilio en Puerto Rico. Los puertorriquenos resentimos la corriente migratoria de cubanos bajo las actuales condiciones. Sinembargo, se grupo migratorio no ocupa, come lo ocupa Puerto Rico con relacion a los Estados Unidos, un lugar inferior en la escala economica del lugar donde emigran. Ni tampoco son discriminados por su color de piel o porque no hablen el idioma. Tal vez, la unica razon para sufrir discrimen de parte del pueblo de Puerto Rico sea su condicion ideologica. Por sus voraces actitudes capitalistas, se presentan como una amenaza a la estabiliad economica del puertorriqueno comun y corriente, sin que puertorriqueno alguno tenga el mas minimo poder para detenerlos.

Lo que estoy tratando de probar es que el problema de la opresion del puertorriqueno explotado aqui en los Estados Unidos tiene una causal primaria en las actitudes del "ugly american" mas que en la realidad socioeconomica a la que ha sido sometido. Que una complemente la otra creo que nadie lo puede negar; pero, el ejemplo de los afluentes cubanos en Puerto Rico es suficiente evidencia para demostrar que son las actitudes los factores basicos. Que se entienda tambien que no estoy parangonando el dolor del exiliado puertorriqueno en Estados Unidos con el dolor del cubano exiliado en Puerto Rico. Ademas, debe quedar claro que esas actitudes que denuncio son hijas del capitalismo.

Contra el bilinguismo; pero, hacia el poliglotismo

El puertorriqueno exiliado en Estados Unidos presenta sin duda caracteristicas diferentes a las demostradas por anteriores corrientes migratorias de otros pueblos. Nosotros no queremos quedarnos aqui. Inclusive dentro de esa elite puertorriquena, que lo es no como consecuencia del sistema, sino a pesar del mismo, hemos experimentado el grito diario estudiantil que explaya en la cafeteria el deseo de volver. Hemos hecho resistencia a ser succionados. No queremos dejar de ser puertorriquenos. Por eso ni queremos ni debemos aculturarnos.

Por otro lado, es logico que si vivimos aqui en Estados Unidos, entonces debemos hablar ingles. Pero, una cosa es poder hablar mas de un idioma y otra, ser bilingues, si es que se puede dar esa aberracion. No tenemos la menor duda de que, en la medida en que mas lenguajes sucede con la comunidad hispana.

En efecto lo que el estudiante encuentra en muchas universidades y colegios (y en todo nivel educativo tambien) son programas que no son bilingues, o trilingues o lo que sea, pero programas en el cual la lengua es el ingles y su lengua, el espanol, brilla por su ausencia. Otras lenguas de poco o ningun prestigio llenan su puesto.

Otro problema es la identificacion o asociacion de la lengua inglesa con la perdida de identidad, la aniquilacion del ser, con el racismo, con la opresion. la actitud que hay de resitir la asimilacion, que representa la perdida del ser hispano, afecta mas sutil y psiocolocamente cuando el estudiante se encuentra en un ambiente en el cual todos los aspectos de su cultura estan signifitivamente ausentes or peor cuando existe una actitud no salamente de indiferencia, pero activamente negative u hostil a cualquier esfuerzo hecho por mantener su identidad, su cultura.

Revolucion

Por Hector L. Bonilla

Tenga cuidado politico, mida bien su hipocresia.
No se piense que hoy se trata de ignorantes
Compueblanos que no saben lo que buscan.

No crea que no hay quien sepa lo que usted
Se esta tramando. Enganando y falsetiando,
Con su enrredado discurso. Prometiendo mejorias
Que nunca dan a la luz. Y ya yo me estoy
Cansando de su hipocrita actitud.

Y tu, politico terco, que vendes tu propia gente,
Que postulas tus ideas, que dan asco y sentimiento;
Conmigo tienes y deudas, que las tendras que pagar.
Y te las voy a cobrar cuando venga la batalla.

Me da rabia que sucedan las cosas inconcebibles
Que mi patria esta sufriendo. Y por eso es que te Ataco con fervor y con malicia. Y si adapto la pericia,
Sin duda tendras que tener cuidado.

Porque armado hasta los dientes, sin penas y sin temores,
Reunite mis seguidores y dare pena a tu caso;
Politico descarado!

Y es tiempo de que se acabe tu falsa presentacion;
Tu sonrisa endemoniada pintada de regocijo.
Y es tiempo de que termine tu generacion de pillos!

Pero sigue recostado, mientras tanto, de tu inutil alabanza;
Y sigue ciego ignorando la injusticia que produces.
Porque mientras mas abuses, mas fuertes seran las ganas,
De acabar con tus raices.

Porque no habra libertad si no existe tirania.
Y eres tu la tirania, y soy yo la libertad!
Y es hoy mismo tu existencia, como plaga que devora
Los derechos de mi tierra, y es por eso que vendre
Y entonces dare candela

Y tu, politico a medias, que concientes asustado
Que venga el capitalista y se aduene de tus manos.
Y te convierta en juguete, y te use y manipule;
A su antojo descarado. Cuando mi juicio venga,
Tu tambien, tu tambien seras juzgado.

Ten duidado politico. Espero que en estos versos,
Encuentres cierta advertencia. Porque te juro concreto,
Que mi paciencia se agota; Y tu sangre gota a gota,
Pintara los pavimentos.

Pollution in Puerto Rico

dropped into the air. At present there has been a considerable increase in motor vehicles operating on the Island. There were 57,021 vehicles in 1950; compared to 172,077 in 1960. According to the study the number will surpass half a million by 1975. 1,480 tons of polluters are caused by motor vehicles including boats, cars, airplanes, trucks and others. In relation to the process of electricity and the sugar cane industry, 6,000 tons of polluters are also dropped into the air. Adding all the numbers from different contributing levels, there is an estimated total of 7,864 which represent about 1,918,816 yearly. In population proportion it compares to more than 150 million (United States) of polluters yearly.

The presence of chemical substances are already affecting unfavorably the health of residents in various determined urban areas. The natural resources, the enjoyment of possession, the beauty and the living environment are also being hurt by this phenomenon.

In Puerto Rico there are spots where the air pollution have reached an extreme limit. Some of this area (to mention a few) are Catano, Guaynabo, and Guayanilla. Petrochemicals complex are already established in these areas. In the town of Cantano you can find polluter industries such as:

1. La Planta Termoelectrica de San Juan
2. Caribbean Gulf Refining Co.
3. P.R. Glass Corp.
4. Molinos de Puerto Rico
5. Puerto Rican Cement
6. La Placco
7. Trigo Master Mex
8. Caribbean Container

The life of the people of Catano is obstructed first, because of the deteriorated effect in the production of fishing and second, because of the problem of dwelling-houses. According to an investigation performed by Dr. Tomas Morales in the city of Cantano, there are places wherein 75 per cent of the residents suffered of respiratory diseases. In other investigations performed by some school teachers, also make evident that the children of Catano are the most affected for respiratory diseases and allergies.

In recent years, the Government signed a law to prevent the existing contamination to become worse. This law is specific and give adequate ways for the regulation of this type of contamination. The law is utilized as a base in the institute control program to serve as a guide for the prevention, orientation and control of the atmospheric contamination. The weakness you find here is that the contents of the law has not been applied and the Government has done little to enforce it.

It has been recently condemned in Puerto Rico, the environmental colonialism, which is a phenomenon consisting of the use of land, air, and water for industrial poisons and other polluters wates; that phenomenon has been developing during the last 20 or 15 years affecting the living environment and the public health of the Island's population.

Nevertheless, more pressure is being put to the Island. The Government together with some American industrialists are trying to establish a Super-Port. This phenomenon has placed Puerto Rico in a more difficult position. It is not merely because of the Super Port but also because of the Creation of high pollution and destructive heavy industry which accompany the Super-Port and the Copper Mines. If this becomes a reality, the potential for public health and the living environment in future generations will be a "catastrophe".

'Ahora' en Guardia

Tal parece que, para el ano que viene, habra cerca de 150 latinos en la Universidad de Massachusetts. Es para estar cotentos; pero, eso no es todo.

AHORA considera que habra que ampliar los cursos ofrecidos en espanol y duplicar los esfuerzos realizados hasta ahora en el componente hispanico de CCEBS para sastifacer las necesidades de esos 150 companeros.

Hay un detalle que preocupa a la organizacion: se estara sacrificando calidad por cantidad? En no pocas mentes aparece la idea de que lo de calidad no importa ahora porque la prioridad es tener graduados latinos.

Sin embargo esa idea es una navaja de doble filo. Si nosotros traemos a la universidad a cualquier latino que encontramos con deseos de entrar, podemos caer en una trampa. Nos estan dando suficiente soga para que nos ahorquemos nosotros mismos.

La verdad es que la universidad no se hizo para todo el mundo; pero, tampoco se debe mirar como una torre de marfil donde se van a enclaustrar las elitistas, un grupo de previlegiados, que luego perpetuaran sus previlegios explotando a sus mismos hermanos latinos.

Ademas, el estudiante, que viene a UMass. se convierte en un respresentante del Latinismo; por lo que es importante que se seleccionen las personas correctas. Companeros que si vienen a estudiar, sepan que esto no es una Cruz Roja y que no se puede depender todo el tiempo de cursos remediales o tutoria.

Hay que asegurarse que habra auyda economica para estos estudiantes. Ademas que funcionara un comite de reclutamiento Y por ultimo, que nuestros companeros esten consientes que se les necesita en la comunidad para auydar a educar a los ninos de escuela primaria y a los companeros de escuela superior; que son el futuro de AHORA y el futuro de la comunidad latina.

Los Hermanos Santiago abrieron la SEMANA PEURTORRIQUENA con musica de todo tipo.

Shape up, companeros

There is the problem of organizers and organizations. It is not impossible to maintain an organization of 70-80 members cohesively provided the right leadership is at work. As a warning to all organizations funded by the S.G.A., cohesiveness and the role the organization plays in the university community is paramount when it comes to funding them.

Various groups were denied funding this year because they failed to comply with the expectations of the S.G.A. The advice is that for the purpose of funding, an organization should be structured to conform with the rules that would insure the financial future of it, namely the rules of the S.G.A. Officers concerned with the future of their respective groups should look at their organizations from the perspective of the senate. Groups that are now being funded and are only in theory representing the community, are guilty of misappropriation of funds and are endangering the future of their organizations. In the case where there is poor leadership so as to endanger the organization, the community should take it upon themselves to see to it that this type of leadership ceases to exist.

The university community should bear in mind that these organizations are funded with S.A.T.F. money. This money comes from the pocket of undergraduate students. These groups funded are required by the S.G.A. to be primarily, if not only, formed by undergraduate students. Leadership must come from the undergraduate membership. The responsibility of leadership is the same as that of a senator to his constituency. I bring this point up because I have noticed that officials have failed to properly represent the undergraduate constituency and instead have represented an elite composed mainly of graduate students.

Issues crucial to the undergraduate students have been discussed by organizations at various meetings. They have submitted decisions to the administration in the name of the organization, when there was never a quorum of its undergraduate members present. Many would say there is always a quorum present at the meetings, that is to say that there is an elite present. Actions as such are not in the best interest of the undergraduates.

These things happen within the organizations because there is the tendency of the older to be paternalistic towards the undergraduates. Undergraduate students are industrious and quite capable of maintaining an organization useful and fruitful to the university community. The older then should play the role of advisers within the organizations, rather than playing the role of dictators, or be the cause of an elite within the organization.

The older should not be a demagogue, or use the organization to further his or her own interest. This is the time to be concerned with the "group" and not with the "individual", for the needs of the group are greater than those of the individual. In regard to this concern for the group, the example set by Union of Third World Women before the Budgets Committee, is one that is commendable and worthy of attention in this article. It was the feeling of the Budgets Committee that this group was undoubtedly well organized as honest representatives of their constituency and providing a vital service to the university community. Credit should also be given to the AHORA organization for the magnificent presentation of the Puerto Rican Week activities, and their ability to motivate its members to perform the tasks needed to ring to the university community this vital act.

However, despite the vital functions performed, organizations should remember that although funded, their accounts may be terminated by R.S.O., should they be guilty of an malfunctioning, or any act contrary to the best interest of the undergraduate students.

As a senator representing the Third World constituency and as a member of the Budgets Committee, I feel that organizations will cease to be in danger, should the leaders bear in mind the S.G.A. suggested guidelines.

It is always more dignifying for a senator to voice his support for honestly organized groups than for those who are organized only in theory. It behooves every organization to see to it that they have enough undergraduate members active, well informed, and motivated. These attitudes will help insure the future of the organizations. Student funds are not fun and games. The more abuse there is of the funds by organizations, the higher the students' fee will be in subsequent years.

Movimiento Chicano

[Por. Mariano Trujillo Villanueva]

El Movimiento Chicano es a la vez una respuesta de resistencia y un esfuerzo para el pogreso humano de liberacion. La resistencia se lleva a cabo contra la opresion brutal por este sistema capitalista norteamericano que requiere trabajo barato, las masas del pueblo sin trabajo, viviendas en terribles condiciones y por lo general la calidad de vida espantosa. Este sistema necesita una base de personas dispuesta a aceptar los peores trabajos con los peores salarios, quien pueden ser descargados por un antojo y personas subyugadas por descriminacion en una manera racista.

El movimiento Chicano en sus apector dualisticos es tambien un movimiento internacional en que abraza todos los esfuerzos de liberacion del tercer mundo, com parte del mismo esfuerzo por el desarrollo y progreso humano. El movimiento Chicano esta reflejando, en muchas diferentes y distintas maneras de identificacion con mexico y sus tradiciones revolucionarias. Pero ademas de los heroes modelos mexicanos como del Benimerito Lic. Benito Juarez, Emiliano zapata, Cardenas y Villa, existe un profundo sentido de solaridad con todos los pueblos orimidos y subugados de toda la familia de paises latin-americanos, inculso con los de Chile, los de Brazil, y mas cerca a nuestros corazones, el pueblo Puerto Riqueno, y con los pueblos Asiaticos del sudeste, y nuestros hermanos en el continente Africano. Otros modelos para el puueblo Chicano son Che Guevara, Fidel Castro, Dr. P. Albizu Campos, etc.

Los incidentes o manifestaciones de la base de movimientos estudiantiles y especialmente el esfuerzo de liberacion Afro-Americana durante los 1960, y, la Revolucion Cubana, tavieron un impacto visible para los Mexico-Americanos. El esfuerzo internacional en contra el colonialismo y el imperialismo contribuyo muchisimo la "concientizacion" entre la juventud Chicana. Los movimientos insurgentes de la juventud internacional ensenaron subsiquientemente muchas lecciones al pueblo Chicano. Enseno estrategias de buen y de mal exito, diferentes tacticas, practicas, y experiencias de su liderato.

El movimiento Chicano ha beneficiado de las experiencias de estos movimientos, y igualmente tiene lecciones en si mismo para otros grupos, se a adelantato en diferentes aspectos y ahora proporciona ejemplos para nuestros companeros de habla hispana igualmente para otros grupos "en la lucha".

El movimiento Chicano esta compuesto por diferentes y dinamicos raigos necesarios para combatir diferentes aspectos y niveles de opresion. Existen muchos "submovimientos" pero los siguientes quizas son los predominantes: el movimiento para mejorar la vida y condiciones de trabajadores agricolas; Cesar Chavez; el movimiento para reclamar nuestras tierras que el Anglo se robo; Reyes Lopez Tijerina, el movimiento cultural y de derechos urbanos y civiles; Rudolfo "Corky" Gonzalez, y comprensivamente el movimiento Chicano estudiantil.

Cesar Chavez, un ex-migrante, ha podido organizar y unionar los trabajadores agricolas del suroeste. Los esfuerzos de "La Causa" y de la "Huelga" han producido beneficios pequenos para los migrantes. Chavez aliado con la Federacion Americana del Trabajoy el Congreso de Organizaciones Industriales (AFL-CIO) la union de los Trabajadores Unidos (UFW) continua la huelga contra los ricos Anglos explotadores, especialmente colocados en el valle fertil del estado de California. La helga puede salir vicotoiosa solo con la ayuda de todos companeros contribuyendo a no comprar productos como la lechuga y vinos que no tienen el aguila negra, simbolo de la union de trabajadores agricolos.

En plena violacion de los tratamientos del Tratado Gudalupe Hidalgo que termino la guerra expansionista e imperialista con Mexico en 1848, la propiedad, individual y colectiva, de los habitantes Mexicanos en lo que ahora se llama elsuroeste no fue respetada. Reyes Lopez Tijeriana investigo los titulos originales de transferimientos de tierra y expuso las maneras y procesos utilizadas por el Sajon para robarnos nuestras tierras. La Alianza Federal de Mercedes fue formada en 1962 en Nuevo Mexico para publicar los derechos del pueblo "indo-hispano" y sus tierras presentemente ocupadas por los Gabachos y el servicio nacional de parques. La Alianza ha tratado todos los pasos legales para presentar su caso con el gobernador del estado, y el gobierno federal. Incluido en el programa de la Alianza era llevar sus quejas a Las Naciones Unidas y a Cuba para reconocer los derechos de tierra del pueblo Chicano. En 1966 hasta 1967 los Alianzistas intentaron apoderarse de unas tierras del Nuevo Mexico y formalizar una republica autonoma e independiente basada en los ilegales transferimintos de tierrra. Estos intentos fueron respondidos con una fuerza miliar (incluyendo "tanques", tropas, etc.) y acusaciones fabricadas en contra el lider Reyes Lopez Tijerina, resultando en el encarcelamiento por dos anos a Tijerina. La Alianza continua sus esfuerzos de tratar de ser escuchados legalmente para recojer nuestras tierras robadas.

El movimiento cultural y urbano de derechos civiles llamando la cruzada para la justicia Cruzade for Justice), fue establecido en la mitad de los anos de 1960, por un ex-official de partido democratico, Rudolfo "Corky" Gonzalez. La Cruzada para la Justicia organizo y respaldo huelgas de estudiantes de escuela secundaria, demonstraciones en contra la brutalidad policiaca y casos legales a favor de Chicanos con acusaciones prefabricadas por la policia.

Uno de los mas importantes papales que la Cruzada ha sido de organizar las conferencias para la liberacion de la Juventud Chicano (Chicano Youth Liberation Conferences). Las conferencias del '69 y '70 produjo participacion de Chicanos no solo del suroeste, sino de diferentes partes del toda la nacion. De la primer conferencia vino EL PLAM espritual de aztlan, un programa de mobilizacion de Chicanos para control de su comunidad. El Plan de Aztlan hizo la propuesta del concepto de que la liberacion de un pueblo meztizo ultimamente requereria una autonoma y libre nacion, culturalmente, politicamente, y socilamente. La segunda conferencia represento un paso mas adelantado para solidificar regionalismos a una frente unida perpectiva y la formulacion de el partido de la Raza Unida de Colorado (CRUP). Que presentamente es el unico partido representante del Chicano, en todos los estados del suroeste con autentica integridad para el Chicano.

una persona pueda entender y hablar, mas se ensanchan sus posibilidades de convivencia. El caso es otro.

Es realmente imposible encajar dos idiomas diferentes en el maridaje del bilinguismo sin los dos salgan por la puesta angosta. Los puertorriquenos, que hemos sido forzados a entrar a la voragine del bilinguismo, somos vivos ejemplos de la imposibilidad de que se habla. Inclusive cuando hablamos con aquellas personas con un gran caudal de preparacion academica y experiencia profesional, encontramos en ellas, en ambos idiomas en el caso nuestro, escasez de vocabulariom parquedad en los matices, repeticion de estructuras gramaticales, lentitud en la construccion fraseologica.

El puertorriqueno se asombra de la habilidad con que se expresan otros latinoamericanos y de los espanoles, ni se diga. Mas importante aun, debemos entender que: "Mas alla de los aspectos logicos, instrumentales, la lengua tiene otras funciones psicologicas, emotivas, coloreadas por lo mas intimo de nosotros mismos." Tal vez, ahi se anide la razon de nuestras dudas, de la crisis de identidad por la que atravesamos. No es cuestion, ya lo hemos dicho, de aprender dos idiomas; es que vivir en dos lenguas es el desgarre.

Si el idioma no es solo un medio de comunicacion, sino que tambien tiene estrecha relacion con nuestra salud mental, si ese idioma se empobrece, entonces necesariamente nuestra condicion mental tiene que sufrir. Hay grandes posibilidades de que nuestra inferioridad provenga en gran medida de nuestra tartamudez expresiva, asi como de las otras condicionantes normalmente aceptadas. La lucha contra el bilinguismo no es otra que la lucha contra uno de los factores de la psicosis colectiva. Esto nos dice el Dr. Carlos Varo:

"La mas grave muestra de la inseguiridad personal y colectiva del puertorriqueno de hoy se manifiesta en su tragica incapacidad de expresion, en el tartamudeo mental y en la pobreza de su comunicacion oral. Este punto me parece de importancia vital, y sin embargo no se advierten senales en los altos niveles de la administracion ni en los niveles escalonados de la educacion insular de enfrentarse a esta realidad y a encararla frontalmente. En que consiste eso que yo he llamado "tartamudeo"? Es la expresion de una especie de neblina mental, o sea la falta de claridad, de meridianidad en el acto de formular un juicio logico y concatenarlo con el siguiente, es decir, en el proceso de pensar y, a continuacion, en el momento de expresar por el lenguaje ese juicio. Como es sabido, ambas cosas se idantifican: el hombre piensa con palabras, no lo hace en abstracto: en la medida en que no habla bien es que tampoco piensa bien."

Podemos concluir que aprender mas de un idioma no solo es conveniente, sino que, necesario; pero. que vivir en dos lenguas, ser bilingue no solo es disparatado, sino, peligroso. Debemos evitar el miedo a no aprender la lengua del invasor. Hay que destruir, en general, al dios del miedo para poder ser libres. Mas importante es aun cuando bregamos con nuestra lengua, que es la manera de nosotros insertarnos en el mundo, y que un dislocamiemto de ella nos trae necesariamente un acrecentamiento del vacio existencial que sufrimos como condicion de residir en un mundo impersonal, opuesto y hostil al desarrollo de la autentica personalidad.

La Semana Puertorriquena

Por Edmundo Velazquez

En semanas pasadad tuvimos la celebracion del festival puertorriqueno o la Semana Puertorriquena. La actividad estuvo basicamente organizada por AHORA. Colaboro estrechamente el Programa Bilingue-bicultural de la Facultad de Educacion, DVP y el Departamento de Espanol.

Si fueramos a lanzar un juicio valorativo sobre dicha actividad, no caeriamos en un error al declarar de fue exitosa. Tal vez, no fue todo lo exitosa que pudo haber sido; pero, encerro fuertes elementos de exito. Fallo un poco la organizacion. Eso se comprede: es una epoca del ano en que el trabajo escolar comienza a aglueinarse.

Hay detalles muy importante que deben analizarse para desarrollar una vision mas amplia de la comunidad latina en U-Mass. El domingo, 21 de abril, a las dos y media de la tarde se celebro una lectura de poemas originales de los estudiantes de la universidad y de miembros de la comunidad latina en general.

Tal vez, era esa la actividad mas importante de toda la Semana Puertorriquena porque signicaba el aporte creativo de los latinos trabanjando a todo vapor. Era la actividad estar presente porque no contenia nada que no fuera latino (Y permitaseme el doble negativo.). Mas aun, todo tenia un fuerte sabor e latino el el exilio.

Cerca de 50 estudiantes se congregaron en el Ballroom. (Hasta las 2:45 P.M., ningun profesor estaba presente; pero, esperabamos que llegara alguno.) Los tambores repicaron por largo tiempo. (Pero, los profesores no aparecian.) Se recitaron mas de 15 poemas. (Y los profesores no hacian acto de presencia.) Se leyo un Manifiesto a la Comunidad de U-Mass. (Mas, el profesorado continuaba haciendo mutis en profunda ausencia.) Se leyeron cuentos. (Ni con los guardias venian los maestros.) Termino el acto sencillo y grandioso a la vez. (Los bienaventurados del titulo y la toga no mostraron ni sus malditas narices.)

Algunos companeros se preguntan como puede un profesor pretender que se le crea cuando diga que esta interesado en la creatividad de sus estudiantes, si no puede hacer el sacrificio de estar presente en las actividades donde esa creatividad va a ser demostrada. Acaso los profesores gocen de algun tipo de telepatia artistica.

Pero, estimados companeros, los profesores no son tan malos. Despues de todo, tuvieron la "cortesia" de ir a escuchar a unos colegas "intelectuales" que vinieron de Puerto Rico. (Perdonen, Jacobo, Marcelino y Manuel; la cosa no es con ustedes.)

Como les iba diciendo, mis colegas estudiantes de U-Mass. rama latina y demas hermanos que hubieron de acompanarnos en la hora del dolor de parto, hemos podido observar lo que, correcta o equivocadamente, pudieramos catalogar como un desprecio. Ciertos companeros aseguran que ese desprecio tiene su nido grande en el Departamento de Espanol; Que tiene fuertes seguidores entre ciertos profesores de Politica e Historia de America Latina, o algo asi.

Los Pates Conscripti de la catedra llevan ya bastante tiempo en esa actitud con los companeros de AHORA segun acaba de informarnos una companera estudiante graduada que se las sabe todas en el campus de esta Catedral del siglo XXI.

Un companero norteamericano nos pregunto si esa actitud es sintomatica de cuanto estan dispuestos a darnos de su propio tiempo cuando ello no signifique ingreso economico para los bolsillos de sus carcomidas togas. (Dicho sea de paso, este estudiante se esta especializabdo en Comercio.)

Una vez, alguien dijo en un libro bien famoso que cuando el era un nino, caminaba y hablaba como nino, hasta pensaba como nino; pero, que, una vez crecido, habia dejado atras las cosas de nino. Me imagino que queria decir que ahora actuaba como nombre respondiendo a su nuevo status. Sin embargo, llegan inclusive a graduarse del doctoral... pero, ni para el demonia dejan a un lado la ignorancia.

Yo no soy profeta. Pero, no se requiere serlo si se medita con profunda seriedad. A mi me parece (Esto es aca entre nosotros.) que los estudiantes latinoamericanos, especialmente los puertorriquenos, vamos a tener que exigirles respe to unas cuantas personas en U-Mass. Estamos de acuerdo, comenzaremos respetandonos a nosotros mismos; y, luego, a ellos.

Algunos senores que se desayunan con cultura hispanica ni tan siquiera fueron a una sola de las actividades. Hay un estudiante de Ciencias Alimenticias (Food Science) que nos asegura que la obesidad impide a muchos el libre movimiento de un lugar a otro.

Me han pedido que felicite a los integrantes de AHORA por la tremenda demostracion de trabajo. Yo asi lo hago y me solidarizo. Los que no hicieron la tarea asignada y esperada de ellos sienten en estos momentos como un rollo de alambre de puas que les sube por la traquea hasta las fosas nasales. Ay bendito. Amen.

¡Atencion!

El Lunes 13 de Mayo, a las 4:00 p.m. en los salones de Conferencia del Campus Center se llevara a cabo la ultima Reunion de "AHORA".

La SEMANA PUERTORRIQUENA estuvo concurridisima; y, los resultados se veran al correr de los prosimos meses.

El movimiento estudiantil y educacional ha podido combatir condiciones opresivas en las escuelas secundarias y elementarias. Estudiantes Chicanos estaban prohibidos a hablar el espanol en las tierras de la escuela, la verdadera historia del Pueblo Chicano fue omitida, y ensenada chuecamante. Principales y maestros Sajones directamente e indirectamente expresaban sus conceptos y atitudes racistas; Estudiantes Chicanos fueron empujados fuera de la escuela (Manteniendo esa base de labor barato o mandado a clases vocacionales. Estudiantes no tenian permiso de organizar ni grupos culturales ni grupos politicos en la escuela. No infrequentemente, castigo fisico fue dirigido a esos quien protestaban estas condiciones opresivas.

Para cambiar estas condiciones, una onda de huelgas Chicanas ("blow-outs") occurio por todo el suroeste y por otras partes, como Chicago, con la mas grande y efectiva tomando lugar cuando en Los Angeles con mas de 15,000 Chicanos salieron de las escuelas de Los Angeles en un dia.

Los pocos estudiantes universitarios tambien empesaron a organizar en los campuses, estudios Chicanos, y programas admisiones abiertas, control de la educacion por la comunidad. Algunos grupos y organizaciones estudianteiles incluyen UMAS (ironicamente); Estudiantes Unidos Mexico-Americanos o United Mexican-American Students; MECHA, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, (y ahora se encuentran en varias universidades del noreste como Yale, y Cambridge); MAYO, Organizacion Juvenil de Mexico-Americanos o Mexican-American Youth Organization.

Otros aspectos del movimiento abrazan un campo ancho como de los catolicos de la Raza hasta los muy militantes Brown Berets.

La oprecion de los Chicanos y del Tercer mundo tiene profundas raices en el sistema capitalista en los EEUU., que nunca se podra terminar sin acabar tambien con el capitalismo. Asi, vemos que el intento para determinacion de nuestro propio destino esta directamente invitando a un combate con el regimen capitalista norteamericano. Y considerando qye la composicion social del Chicano es casi toda compuesta por trabajadores, explotados y descriminados por su nacionalidad y pro La Revolucion Cubana y el gobierno de Allende en Chile, nos ha demonstrado, que solo con el trastorno y derrotamiento de este pais podremos lograr un verdadero sentido de liberacion para los trabajadores. Esta leccion aprenderan los Chicanos y otros grupos queien se mobilizan y se envuelven en las demandas directamente relacionadas a sus porpias necesidades. Por la razon de esta opresion dual de trabajadores y nacionalidad, el Esfuerzo Chicano tendra una posicion de vanguardia en la revolucion socialista y en desarroyar humanismos para, como dice Fidel, "la creacion del nuevo hombre."

Latinos En Deporte

Por Jose E. Miranda

Distinguidas personalidades de Springfield, Holyoke, Westfield y Chicopee tuvieron una reunion el domingo 21 de de abril. La actividad tuvo como proposito elegir la directiva que se encargara de organizar una liga de softball. Dicha liga estara integrada por equipos de los pueblos ya mencionados.

La concurrencia fue muy buena; y cada pueblo tuvo una justa representacion. La actividad tuvo lugar en el Salon de Conferencias del Saint Joseph Cafe, localizado en Chicopee.

El resultado de la eleccion fue el siguiente:

Presidente: Edgar Rodriguez
Vice-presidente: Jose Luis Torres
Secretario: Jose E. Miranda
Tesorero: Ramon Gonzalez
Vocales: Julio Resto, Orlanda Morales, Luis A. Camacho, German Garcia.

LA CHINA EN LA O.N.U.

Por 20 anos los Estados Unidos tuvieron buen exito en sus esfuerzos por mantener a la Republica Popular de China fuera de las naciones. Sin embargo, el 25 de Octubre de 1971 esos esfuerzos fracasaron.

Las Naciones unidas votaron a favor del ingreso de la Republica Popular de la China y la expulsion del gobierno localizado en Taiwan.

La votacion fue de 76 a favor, 35 en contra, y 17 abstenciones. Poco antes de eso, la asamblea habia rechazado una propuesta de los Estados Unidos que hubiera hecho necesario que dos terceras partes de los miembros votaran en cuanto a la question.

La votacion final a favor de la China fue mucho mas arrolladora de lo que la delegacion estadounidense habia creido posible. La victoria de la Republica Socialista de China probablemente dara impulso a una serie de cambios substanciales en las agrupaciones politicas internacionales.

Howland quits as student lawyer

By BOB SCHEIER
MDC Staff

Attorney for Students Richard M. Howland, who has held that post since it was created four years ago, asked yesterday that his contract not be renewed when it expires next month.

Howland, whose contract expires June 30, said he made the decision because of the time demands of the job and because he didn't want to get involved in a dispute within the Student Government Association (SGA) over whether he should be rehired.

"The whole thing's been very good, "Howland said of the job, which included providing legal advice for the student government association and individual students. "I wish everyone well."

Howland, 34, who said he had not had a vacation since he took over the job, indicated he might take some time off, after which he hoped to continue teaching a course on Journalism and the Law, as well as continue his private practice.

In the SGA dispute Howland referred to, the Legal Services Committee of the Student Senate had recommended his contract be renewed, while the Senate Executive Committee had recommended it not be. The senate, which hired Howland, had been scheduled to vote on renewing his contract tonight. The Legal Services Committee had made a "subjective" decision that Howland should be rehired, according to David E. Booker, former speaker of the senate and a member of the committee when it made its recommendation.

"The decision was based on the personal contacts he has built up, the time it would take to acclimate a new person to the office, that sort of thing," Booker said. "We had considered a change in the scope of the office, perhaps having the lawyer go into litigation, perhaps having several lawyers, and are reserving the right to expand the office.

Senate speaker Cindy McGrath said the executive committee had voted to recommend not rehiring Howland because they felt persons were becoming "overly dependent" on Howland, that he had "outlived all the students he came in with," and that he had an in-town office that had the "potential and appearance" of becoming a separate practice.

She also said the graduate senate had become dissatisfied with legal services, had withdrawn its support from Howland, and is presently in the process of hiring a new attorney of its own.

Howland said he had opened the office in Amherst because the Student Union, where he also has an office, had been closed over intersession because of the energy crisis. He said he was maintaining a private practice, but that it was "not substantial", and consisted mostly of work for friends.

Howland said that even if the senate had offered to renew his contract, next year would have been his last in the job.

"I'm unwilling to hassle any longer," he said. "It's time for someone else... the students are too involved in politics."

His current salary is $21,000 a year, he said, out of which comes all his expenses except those for his office in the Student Union. He said his take home salary after taxes was between $8-10,000 per year this year.

One of the most satisfying parts of his job, Howland said, was his work with the National Students Association working to establish similar posts in other schools across the country.

Howland is a graduate of the Deerfield Academy, Amherst College, and the Columbia Law School.

'No more tapes' says President

In announcing the presidential decision, White House lawyer James D. St. Clair said, "I do not believe it will be an impeachable offense."

Neither committee chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., nor Rep. Edward Hutchinson, of Michigan, the ranking Republican, had any immediate comment on the announcement.

Meanwhile, the three television networks and the Public Broad-

League admits men

Compiled From Wire Services

SAN FRANCISCO — The 54-year-old League of Women Voters voted Tuesday to give full membership and equal rights to men.

The 935-433 vote was more than the two-thirds required to amend the bylaws of the national convention of the league, which was formed at the time of the woman's suffrage movement.

President Lucy Wilson Benson announced she had a membership check from the first man to become a voting member-her husband. Men have been admitted only as non voting members.

Mrs. Benson, the Amherst resident, who is regarded as a potential political candidate in Massachusetts, is closing out her third and final term as League president.

Goldmark: bypass Quinn

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark said Tuesday the Attorney General's office should be excluded from the administration's review of the Russell Daniels case.

However, Gov. Francis W. Sargent recently sent a letter to Atty. Gen Robert H. Quinn, referring requests from citizens that the Springfield police department be investigated for the arrest of the former Belchertown State School resident now serving a life sentence in Norfolk Prison on a murder conviction.

Goldmark, in a meeting with a group of UMass students supporting the appeal of Daniels, said it would not be feasible to consult Quinn because "it's not a good idea to contact his office on these types of matters."

Pressed for further explanation Goldmark responded "It is not my job to determine whether his civil rights have been denied."

Goldmark argued that the attorney general would act as a defender of the state. And since Daniels had been convicted of murdering a Springfield woman, Quinn was not obligated to review the matter, he said.

Ralph Lopez, a UMass student, claimed that since Daniels is a ward of the state "It seems his rights should have been protected by the Attorney General--especially in his capacity as chief law enforcement officer."

The Secretary and students argued for nearly two hours over the Daniels case and other Belchertown related issues without formulating recommendations.

Student organizer Lynn Nichols told Goldmark he was incompetent and added "The whole thing stinks."

Goldmark replied: "You got a lot of company on that, believe me."

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, President of the Belchertown State School Friends Association, said Goldmark had legal counsel in his office who did not do anything to help Daniels.

"Since they did not do anything, you are part of it," Ricci said.

"I find it rather unfortunate that state government officials should come in here and insult these students who have documented their information.

"It only reflects on the Human Services Secretary. The administration did it in the Governor's office and did it again today."

Ricci pointed out that the Governor refused to meet with members of the group who traveled to the State House last month. Sargent remained in his office for nearly three hours with Daniels supporters outside.

During the meeting Goldmark admitted friction existed between Quinn and himself.

Asked whether "a lack of communications" might have figured in Goldmark's decision to exclude the Attorney General, he disagreed.

He added he never considered consultation with Quinn on the matter--even after having received a letter from the Governor a year ago which pointed out requests for a citizen's commission to review Springfield Police practices.

The sole basis of Daniels' conviction was a confession which Gov. Sargent now concedes may have been illegally attained.

In an April 29 memorandum to Quinn, Sargent urged the Attorney General to take "whatever action you deem appropriate."

"Numerous and serious allegations of police misconduct impel me to report the case of Mr. Russell Daniels, a mentally retarded resident of Norfolk Prison," Sargent said.

"It appears that certain deprivations may have been caused by the Springfield police with respect to the civil and constitutional rights of Mr. Daniels."

Goldmark said the Daniels case could be handled "best by none lawyers in an advocacy program delivering individual services."

"If the state had such a program he would have had an advocate appointed by the state right after his arrest. The horrible irony is that maybe he shouldn't have been in Belchertown for 13 years."

Concert features three bands

On Sunday the Concert Committee and the Campus Center Program Council will be presenting a free spring concert to be held in the Alumni Stadium from 1:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. The bands scheduled to appear are Aerosmith, Elliott Murphy and the Chris Rhodes Band. Only students of the University and their guests will be allowed to attend.

Students are encouraged to walk to the Stadium, but for those who must drive, the following lots will be available; 1, 5, 7, 12, 13, 14, and Haigis Mall. Positively NO PARKING will be allowed on Rocky Hill Road, University Drive, all stadium access roads and in Lot 11. All cars parked in these areas will be towed.

The committee has made the following requests: "No glass containers should be brought to the stadium for the environmental safety of all concert goers. Trash barrels will be placed throughout the stadium and should be used. The committee has enough cleaning up to do. Remember the peace and safety of everyone depends on individual responsibility and maturity. It should be a beautiful day."

Graduate programs face intensive fall review

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
MDC Staff

Outside evaluators will begin to review graduate programs at UMass-Amherst in the fall, according to Richard Woodbury, dean of the Graduate School.

Dean Woodbury said that the reviewers will examine "every aspect" of the 45 doctoral programs and 70 masters degree programs in the school's 50 departments.

According to Provost Robert L. Gluckstern, the proposed reviews will be "useful in guiding individual programs and in overall planning."

The graduate dean, provost and academic dean for each department will select the committee which will review their respective departments, as the objectives differ from department to department. The committees, consisting of 3 or 4 people from academic and non-academic fields, will visit the campus for three or four days to collect descriptive information necessary to evaluate a department. The committee will present their results along with a list of recommendations concerning improvements.

Each department review will cost approximately $1000—$2000. Woodbury said that money has already been allocated in the administrative budget for fiscal '75. A couple of departments will be reviewed each semester.

"It's too expensive to have a lot of evaluations each semester," said Woodbury.

There will be a continuous cycle of reviewing. Woodbury estimates that all of the departments will have been reviewed within 5 years, when the entire cycle would begin again.

Woodbury expects most of the departments to cooperate with the reviews and to consider the recommendations. The Graduate Council is still in the process of deciding which departments will be evaluated first.

"Some departments prefer to wait a year or two before they are reviewed," said Woodbury. "This happens when a new chairman has been appointed and changes are being made in the program."

Utilizing opinion from outside evaluation committees is a "fairly common" practice at other universities, according to Woodbury, who described these reviews as "extremely successful."

Woodbury said that UMass' graduate school, which is ranked among the nation's finest, will expand its programs, due to the University's no-growth budget.

Non-tokers: new campus minority emerges

By STEPHEN SECHE
MDC Staff

A new minority is emerging at UMass — students who do not smoke marijuana.

According to estimates by counsellors at Room to Move, 85 per cent of the students here use the drug "at least on weekends".

Not surprisingly, then, UMass Director of Security David Johnston said recently that "realistically, we can't expect to stop the use of marijuana". And indeed, neither Johnston nor other local officials contacted appear convinced that prosecuting those who insist on smoking marijuana is even the proper approach to the situation.

What Johnston and others attempt to do is apprehend those who are known to be dealing in quantities of marijuana, and more particularly, "hard", addictive drugs such as heroin.

Assistant district attorney for Hampshire County Stephen Kaplan said that neither his office, not the police, "are interested in arresting people for smoking marijuana." What the district attorney's office is interested in, Kaplan said, is arresting those "trafficking in drugs, those who are profiting from their sale."

Back at UMass, Johnston said that campus police officers "are aware of the variety of life-styles among students", and that marijuana is a basic ingredient in many of those life-styles.

"There is also the question of a student's right to privacy," Johnston said. "We don't want to thrust ourselves into these (living) situations unless we have to". And unless the UMass police have reason to believe that a student is dealing large amounts of the drug, they generally don't feel the need for their presence.

In fact, Johnston said, the majority of arrests for marijuana usually occur "during the course of another arrest", and even then, he said, it is left up to the discretion of the arresting officer whether to add charges for possession, if the amount of the drug seized is less than one ounce.

Town of Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia agreed with Johnston and Kaplan that police "are not out on the streets looking to make arrests for marijuana". He also reported, as did Johnston, that most of the thirty-four arrests made by his department last year occured during the course of another investigation.

"I suspect that more than one of my officers has seen someone smoking marijuana on the street," Maia said, but added that if the person was not being obvious or "making a nuisance of themselves", it is unlikely that any attempt was made to arrest them.

Both Maia and Johnston agreed, however, that it would be a mistake for someone to make possession of the drug too obvious. "If a person is flagrant with the drug," Maia said, "the officer has to make an arrest."

Still, with a small department and no officers "working specifically on drugs," Maia said that the Amherst police usually go to work on a marijuana-related case only when informed of a situation where the drug is present.

Such was the case of five UMass students arrested in February for possession of a quantity of marijuana, including a number of plants. That action, according to reports at the time, was initiated in response to a complaint by a citizen. And Maia said that "when the department becomes aware of a situation," they have no choice but to act on it.

According to Stephen Monsein, a local attorney who defended the five students, each has received a continuance without a finding and one year's probation as a result of the arrest.

Since July 1972, when the Massachusetts criminal code was revised, possession of marijuana for personal use has generally resulted in similar findings: a continuance followed by a probationary period of from six months to one year, after the completion of which any permanent record of the arrest is expunged from the defendant's record.

Even a first arrest for possession with intent to sell might result in a continuance and no conviction, Kaplan said, depending on the judge, the arresting officer's view of the case, and "the circumstances surrounding the arrest."

Monsein said, however, that he is not certain that the courts "are sophisticated enough" to really make a distinction between possession for personal use, and possession with intent to sell.

Kaplan agreed that the present statutes make no determination as to what amount constitutes possession with intent to sell. Arbitrarily, police and the courts often treat amounts greater than one ounce as more than is warranted for personal use.

Even being caught making a sale, Kaplan said, if it was a "casual sale", for example, a sale to a friend that didn't involve a large quantity of either money or the drug, there is a chance that the case would result in a continuance, and no permanent record.

A second dealing charge would most likely be dealt with more harshly, with a stronger possibility of a jail sentence.

Kaplan said that both the courts and the district attorney's office make every effort to prevent a young person from acquiring a permanent police record, because of the great damage such a record may have on the future of someone whose involvement with drugs may be only marginal.

The kind of "casual" sale mentioned by Kaplan is the kind that earmarks most dealings here at UMass, according to Room to Move counsellors E.T. Mellor and Larry Ruhf. As a result, they said, even though dealing is "big business" on campus, few students make a great deal of money, content to sell small quantities to friends for the "status", or as a favor.

Both Mellor an Ruhf agreed that there are former students and "others" making money selling marijuana on campus. These dealings usually involve pounds and kilos (2.2 pounds) of the drug, often brought into the area from the south and southwest.

Johnston, too, is aware of the interest non-students have in the campus drug scene, and said that outsiders poking around is one of the "unfortunate side-effects" of what Kaplan referred to as "de facto decriminalization" of the drug at UMass.

In the past year, Johnston said, there has been an increase in the number of robberies taking place on campus, frequently where the victim is a student known to be dealing marijuana.

Johnston ties the increase to the "very marketable" nature of the drug on campus. He said it is "fairly common knowledge" that a student who is dealing marijuana is apt to have a quantity of both money and the drug in his-her

Sylvan sponsors weekend Spring Arts Festival

By SAMUEL HASSAN
MDC Staff

This is the third in a four part series about the Sylvan Residential Area.

The Sylvan Area Government in conjunction with the three house governments, (Brown, McNamara, Cashin), and the Academic Affairs Office are sponsoring a Spring Arts Festival to be held in Sylvan this coming weekend, May 10th, 11th and 12th.

The festival will begin at 8:00 p.m. Friday night with an outdoor coffeehouse in the courtyard.

Performances will be given by nineteen students who've participated in Ron McGuire's Contempory Music Performance colloquim, and will run until 1:00 a.m.

Saturday afternoon in the courtyard there will be a variety of arts and crafts workshops, ceramics, photography, and silkscreening. This will be followed by a barbecue and live music.

Big Screamin McGrew is slated to play from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. and will be followed by an outdoor screening of a film yet to be announced.

Then on Sunday, same place, there will be a noon-time concert of Renaissance and Baroque music with recorders, guitars, and singing.

The arts and crafts exhibits will be on display all afternoon and the festival will be concluded Sunday night when each dorm will serve a different ethnic dinner.

The upcoming results of dedicated efforts by such notables as R. Marc Fournier and Joyce E. Curtis should make for an enjoyable Spring weekend in Sylvan.

Much of the talent to be offered over the weekend was attained or developed through many of the academic offerings in Sylvan.

One thing Sylvan offers its residents that most other areas can't is a radio station.

Jed Watson, Assistant to the Area Director for the purpose of academic affairs, coordinates twenty-four colloquia offered in Sylvan.

Jed, a classical music freak who plays recorder and sings tenor, is teaching a three credit course in "Renaissance, Recorder and Education" to nine students. He said that many of the colloq's are art related to help subsidize problems for art majors at the University. Five students with faculty advisors are teaching colloquia in the area and are receiving credit for it. (special problems).

Jed pointed out that colloq's are a relatively new thing, and they don't receive much money, $1300, for twenty-four in Sylvan.

Mickey Harris, an undergrad in the School of Education, facilitates a three credit course in "University Administration", and is being sponsored by Floyd Martin, Assistant Area Director in Southwest. There are thirty-three students in the course who have listened and talked to guest speakers from different areas at the University.

Other courses offered in Sylvan are either one credit or unaccredited. There are courses in such diciplines as chess, typing, sign language, drawing, and many more.

One thing Sylvan offers its residents that most other areas can't is a radio station.

WSYL is a non-commercial FM radio broadcasting station operating on an assigned frequency of 97.7 with a total radiated output of one hundred mili-watts. (I do a show, and get calls from Pufton)

There are sixty-three disc jockeys doing two hour shows from 10 a.m. and 2 a.m. daily. The station is solely intended for educational purposes, and while learning to be a DJ, students have been able to turn their friends on to whatever their album collections offer.

WSYL Music Director Jim Brown has an FCC class 3 license, and was chosen from eight applicants by a WSYL committee. While coordinating operations, Jim has mailed letters to over fifteen record companies, Atlantic has sent some, but there really isn't much of a record library. It's essentially a "bring your own" set-up.

Hopefully SYL will be a stero broadcast next fall. It's been hoped for before, but until a stereo multiplexer for the transmitter is acquired, it won't happen.

Like all areas at the University Sylvan has intramurals.

For other athletic activities, there are basketball courts, newly rolled tennis courts awaiting lines, archery targets, and just down the hill is WOPE.

For indoor recreational activities there is a ceramics room on the ground floor of Brown. To find out more about it, come up and see the exhibits this weekend.

Tomorrow, a final look at Sylvan and how it operates.

Retarded defended

By ED GORMAN
MDC Staff

Beryl Cohen, legal counsel for the Belchertown State School Friends Assn., told a group of 15 people in Field House Lounge last night that "criminal courts are not responsive to the particulars of mental retardation" and labeled it a "somber and unfortunate situation in the Commonwealth.".

He said, "The law is not responsive to retarded citizens not only criminal side, but on the civil side also. There have been massive losses of rights of thousands of residents of institutions. We don't have time tonight to show them all."

However, Cohen, whose office is on Beacon St. in Boston, cited five examples from his own experience in which there was "legal playing around in the courtroom which was used to the disadvantage of the defendants."

Cohen, who has worked on the Russel Daniels case, said, "We have no adequate way to judge retarded persons under the law as witnessed in the Russel Daniels Case. "He said that there are no statutes protecting the rights of retarded persons to sue, vote or drive an automobile which "by any means are not beyond the right of retarded persons."

Moreover, Cohen pointed out that the major problem that lawyers face in defending retarded persons is the question of "competency as a witness."

An example of this is in the case of a resident of Fernald School in Waltham who, along with a dozen other residents, complained of being sexually abused by employees of the institution. In order to test the competency of the retarded defendant the judge in the case asked him "Who won the World Series last year?" The employee of the school was given a small fine and, according to Cohen, is still working at the institution.

Cohen said he took the advantage to speak in Field House because he believes that student support is needed to unveil these "examples of abusing the judicial process." He said that student advocates are valuable because they are "more likely to advocate" as witnessed by the Daniels controversy.

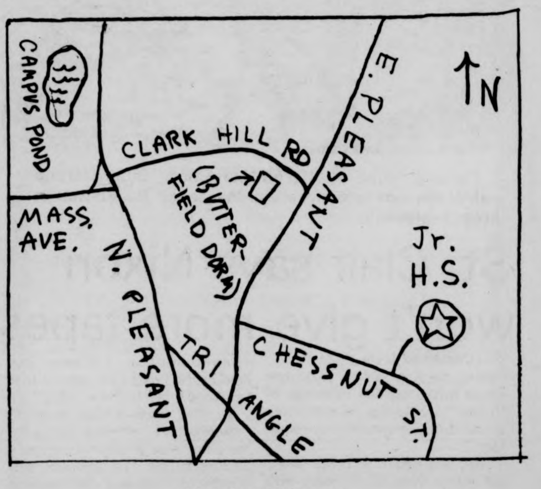
'Rights' articles up Town meeting

By PAUL BESNIA
MDC Special

Tonight at 7:30 p.m., Amherst will hold its Town Meeting at the Regional Jr. High, a continuation of Monday night's meeting. It will be at this meeting that the articles submitted by the Human Rights Party will be considered. Among others, they include: town law guaranteeing town elections during the school year, townwide construction of bikepaths, formation by the town of an anti-nuclear power plant policy, establishing a Hitchhiking Safety Committee, and the decriminalization of marijuana. There will be a gallery for the public.

All help will be needed!!! Signs should be made to support particular interests. For the bicycle proposal, the Human Rights Party calls for a bike-in. A turn out of at least one hundred bikes would be a great showing. By just being there, it shows the Town Meeting Members that students do care and that students are a political force.

All should try and be there at 7:00 p.m. so the lobby can continue until 7:30. Signs will then be brought inside to lend support. To get there, go south on N. Pleasant, take left on Triangle St., next left on E. Pleasant, take a right on Chestnut St. and about ½ mile down on the left side is the Jr. High. See map below.



How to get there.

Impeachment hearings to begin tomorrow

From The Wire Services

WASHINGTON-The House Judiciary Committee will open its historic hearings of impeachment charges against President Nixon in a closed hearing tomorrow afternoon, Chairman Peter W. Rodino announced yesterday.

Originally, the staff headed by counsel John Doar and minority counsel Albert Jenner had planned to give the committee an overview of the entire case involving more than 50 allegations against the President.

But a committee source said yesterday that the initial presentation probably will only cover events leading up to the June 17, 1972, Watergate break-in as well as the cover-up through March 21, 1973, the day President Nixon says he first learned of the involvement of members of the White House and campaign staffs.

The first committee session will start at 1 p.m. tomorrow with three more to be held Tuesday through Thursday of the following week. The hearings will be opened to the public and television coverage after that, and continue through the end of June.

Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich. told a news conference yesterday he wants another committee vote on a recommendation that the House cite Nixon for contempt of Congress for failure to comply with the subpoena for Watergate tapes.

Conyers believes that refusal, if backed by a contempt citation, could form the basis for one of six articles of impeachment he considers likely to be voted by the committee, based on the evidence it already has.

If Rodino supported a contempt move, Conyers said, it would carry the committee. The chairman opposed Conyers' recommendation for a contempt citation last week, and it lost 32 to 5 with one abstention.

"One clear, indisputable article of impeachment," Conyers said, was contained in the transcript of Nixon's conversation with John Dean on March 21, 1973, the date Nixon says he first learned of White House involvement in the coverup.

Conyers said the transcript showed Nixon ordered hush money paid to E. Howard Hunt, one of the seven convicted Watergate burglars. He called that a clear case of obstructing justice.

House GOP Leader John J. Rhodes, however, said he had found nothing in the transcripts that would be "definitely impeachable," although he believed the conversations reflected "something less than a moral indignation with the situation."

St. Clair says Nixon won't give more tapes casting Service (PBS) said they would broadcast live coverage of House Judiciary Committee proceedings, expected to begin May 21.

ABC will begin coverage which will rotate from day to day. PBS said it would broadcast gavel to gavel coverage.

Asked what the President would do if the Judiciary Committee issues another subpoena demanding tapes, St. Clair said he would "respectfully decline to comply."

If the committee persisted, he added, "Then, we're going to have a confrontation because the President is firm in his resolve that he already has told the facts."

St. Clair made it clear that the President had not ruled out given the committee additional evidence relating to the ITT antitrust settlement or campaign contributions from the dairy industry. But any evidence in those areas given to the committee apparently would not include tapes of presidential conversations.

In the same announcement, St. Clair said the President also had decided not to give special prosecutor Leon Jaworski additional tapes.

Wallace wins; Glenn leads

By STEVE GERSTEL
United Press International

John Glenn Jr. clung to a narrow lead in his third try to win a U. S. Senate seat from Ohio Tuesday night while in Alabama, and Gov. George C. Wallace sealed his base for a fourth run for the presidency with a landslide renomination victory.

Glenn, the 52-year-old former astronaut and the first American to orbit the earth, led millionaire businessman and incumbent Sen. Howard Metzenbaum in the early returns of Ohio's Democratic primary.

With 15 per cent of the votes counted, Glenn was running ahead with 74, 868 votes to Metzenbaum's 54,846, but most of the returns were from outlying areas and the Metzenbaum stronghold of Cuyahoga County was yet to be heard from.

In the state capital of Montgomery, Wallace would not commit himself to trying for the presidency in 1976 but noted that "if you are going to be involved nationally, it doesn't hurt to be elected governor."

The winner of the Glenn-Metzenbaum race will face Cleveland Mayor Ralph J. Perk in the November elections. Perk won the Republican nomination, beating Peter H. Voss, a businessman by a 2-1 margin.

Schmidt, Brant's successor, win's party's nomination

From The Wire Services

BONN, Germany – Helmut Schmidt, a tough finance minister rated as a firm friend of the United States, won his party's nomination yesterday to succeed West German Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Brandt, who won a Nobel Peace Prize for improving relations between West Germany and Communist Eastern Europe, resigned early yesterday over an espionage scandal.

While Bonn buzzed with rumor over possible underlying causes for Brandt's decision to accept personal responsibility for a close aide's role as a Communist East German spy, the 55-year-old Schmidt's nomination was approved in an emotional session of the Social Democratic party's parliamentary caucus.

Brandt's resignation touched off a political crisis in West Germany and Western Europe, where he worked for four years with his allies to promote a "Ostpolitik" policy of peaceful coexistence with Communist East Europe.

Brandt, in announcing his resignation, assumed "full political responsibility" for the spy scandal that reached into the inner circle of his government.

Brandt turned in his resignation to President Gustav Heinemann and then made a personal appeal to the Social Democrats to nominate Schmidt, his acid tongued political heir, as his succesor.

Social Democratic deputies in the West German parliament swiftly backed Schmidt's nomination.

Gromyko says Soviets won't obstruct talks

JERUSALEM [AP] – Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger resumed crucial truce talks in Israel yesterday after a three-hour meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko. A senior U.S. official said Russia would not obstruct a disengagement pact between Israel and Syria.

U.S. officials said the next 48 hours would be "critical" for an agreement to end the fighting on the Golan Heights, now in its 57th straight day.

Kissinger met with Gromyko on the neutral Mediterranean island of Cyprus to discuss the Middle East crisis. Aides in the secretary's party said Kissinger might still encounter serious difficulties when he bargains with Syria today, but Gromyko gave the impression that the Soviets would not hamper the negotiations.

"I think we made yardage," said one senior American source. The Cyprus meeting was arranged to give the Soviets the visible presence they have been demanding in Mideast diplomatic efforts, and for Kissinger to get an insight into Moscow's attitude.

Kissinger was seeking assurances of more or less constructive intentions from the Soviet Union, which as Syria's chief arms supplier and supporter could easily interfere with negotiations to stop the shooting.

Closely informed Israeli sources said Kissinger's efforts to separate Israeli and Syrian forces were virtually deadlocked. Kissinger was flying to Damascus today to deliver Israel's latest proposals to President Hafez Assad.

Trudeau endangered

OTTAWA [UPI] – Opposition leaders moved yesterday to drive Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's government out of office over its new budget policies.

Charging Trudeau's liberal government was failing to cope with rising inflation, the two chief opposition parties said they will introduce sub-amendments that could topple Trudeau from power as early as this evening, forcing an early summer election.

Robert Stanfield, head of the Progressive Conservatives, rejected the new budget immediately after Finance Minister John Turner presented it Monday night.

And David Lewis, leader of the New Democratic Party holding the balance of power between the two major parties, said after a caucus yesterday morning that his party would not support it either.

SLA making bombs

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] – Investigators have found evidence that Symbionese Liberation Army members may have manufactured a bomb in the hideout they abandoned last month, it was reported yesterday.

Hundreds of shotgun shells and rifle and carbine cartridges — with lead pellets and powder removed — were left in the San Francisco apartment used for several weeks by SLA members and kidnap victim Patricia Hearst, the San Francisco Examiner reported.

Sub bomb explodes

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Navy announced yesterday that a Trident missle blew up Sunday during a test in Bacchus, Utah, extensively damaging the test area.

The Trident I missile is to be installed in 1978 on the existing Poseidon nuclear missile submarines and the planned Trident missile subs.

It was not known if the explosion would set back the schedule. The Navy said only that the impact of the incident "is being investigated."

There were no injuries when the missile blew up at the test facility which is owned by Hercules Inc., one of the contractors working on the missile developments.

The Trident submarine program has come under frequent attack from senators who feel the new subs, costing $1 billion, are not needed.

Ulster violence up

BELFAST [UPI] – Gunmen spraying bullets from machine guns killed four persons in Northern Ireland yesterday in a sharp escalation of the province's chronic violence. Six others were wounded, five of them seriously.

In Belfast, two masked gunmen leaped from a car at a construction site and opened fire with an automatic weapon and a handgun at a group of Catholic workers eating lunch.

They killed two and seriously wounded five before fleeing in their car, police said.

Seeks energy independence

Nixon signs bill creating new energy agency

WASHINGTON [UPI] – Calling it an important step toward national independence in energy, President Nixon yesterday signed legislation creating a Federal Energy Office that Nixon created by executive order last year to deal with the energy crisis. FEO Administrator John C. Sawhill will remain as director of the new agency.

At a ceremony in his Oval Office, Nixon called the law "another important step in our journey toward independence in energy."

He said he had told the FEA its first priority would be to work with other government agencies to prepare a comprehensive plan for the United States to become self-sufficient in energy by 1980.

"The nation is in your debt for bringing forth a very responsible piece of legislation," Nixon told a group of lawmakers present at the signing ceremony.

He also urged them to continue to act in a bipartisan atmosphere to enact 16 additional energy proposals he has sent to Congress.

The new agency, known as FEA, is empowered to carry out any energy rationing that might be necessary and is responsible for allocating gasoline to states. The law creating the FEA also transfers to it energy decisions formerly made by the Cost of Living Council and requires energy producing firms to furnish information on their supplies and the methods they use to arrive at pricing formulas.

In his formal statement, Nixon said "there are disturbing indications that with the passing of the immediate crisis – a crisis that we weathered much better than the critics ever predicted – many Americans believe that good conservation habits can be forgotten.

"We need continued conservation and major initiatives to expand our energy supplies in the future. We must get on with the actions that are needed to meet the goals of Project Independence – to reduce the vulnerability of the United States to threats from other nations arising from our growing dependence upon foreign sources of energy."

Nixon urged speedy action on his other energy bills, including the Natural Gas Supply Act; the Mined Area Protection Act, and the Deep Water Port Facilities Act.

"This nation is fortunate in having abundant energy resources," Nixon said. "Now with the help of Congress, we must act to accelerate the development of those resources. Private industry is already moving ahead with investments to increase the production of coal, oil and natural gas. The government can assist by removing obstacles to efficient energy production."

Environmental unit opposes breeder reactor guidelines

WASHINGTON [UPI] – An environmental group charged Monday that risks are unacceptable for the new breedertype nuclear power plant under development and accused the Atomic Energy Commission of trying to mislead the public.

The National Resources Defense Council asked the AEC to withdraw the five-volume draft environmental impact statement it released March 14 in support of the effort to put the new type reactors into commercial operation by 1987.

The main conclusion of the draft statement was that a fully developed electric generating network based on the breeder reactor would not significantly affect the environment and would meet safety standards.

In a letter to the AEC, council attorney J. G. Speth said the environmental statement "appears to have been written to mislead rather than inform the public."

"The analyses that are included use self-serving and unsupportable assumptions which pre-determine the conclusions," Speth said. "The result is an assessment totally lacking in integrity and objectivity. The draft statement can only have the effect of misleading those who take the time to read it."

The National Resources Defense Council was a party to the suit that resulted in a federal court order last June requesting the AEC to prepare the environmental impact statement. The final version of the statement is due June 14.

The AEC said the purpose of the draft was to draw comments before a final statement is prepared. It said 50 organizations and government agencies have responded to the draft.

In a 350-page critique, the National Resources Defense Council said it considers the breeder reactor unsafe for commercial use primarily because of the cancer-causing properties of plutonium used by the breeder, and because of the "unresolved safety questions relevant to determining the explosive potential" of the breeder itself.

The council also said the breeder type reactor should not be needed to meet future energy needs because of the projected availability of solar, geothermal, fossil and possibly fusion energy technologies.

"And third, even if we adopt the AEC's extreme assumptions that energy growth will continue at present rates through the year 2020, that domestic uranium is in short supply and cannot be imported, and that neither solar nor geothermal nor fusion systems can make a significant contribution before 2020.

State stops funding for police computers

BOSTON [AP] – Computerized police information systems, once thought to be the tools of the future in large communities, have cost too much, yeilded too little and will no longer be funded by the Massachusetts Committee on Criminal Justice.

The police computers may also threaten the privacy of citizens, according to officials of the committee which is funded by the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

The computer systems, which use all sorts of police records, are in operation in Newton, Brookline and Quincy. The Quincy operation, known as SPAIS (Suburban Police Automated Information System), also serves Milton, Braintree and Weymouth.

These experimental systems, however, are still not fully operational despite the fact that they have already cost several hundred thousand dollars and will cost thousands of dollars more annually just to maintain.

Meanwhile, plans are underway to work out the alleged "bugs" in the Quincy computer. One major problem, inherent with many police computers according to committee officials, is that the system may not be programmed properly to purge arrest records of individuals who are charged but never convicted of a crime.

Another problem is that the computers, programmed improperly, can "spew out information to God knows where," according to Steve Long, the Criminal Justice Committee's manager of engineering.

Have a safe spring, mate

By MARK BOURBEAU
Coast Guard Journalist

IN SPRING A YOUNG MAN'S (AND WOMAN'S!) FANCY TURNS TO THOUGHTS OF...BOATING! Which is great. For those caught up in the magic of the sea, each afternoon afloat becomes a special, deeply personal adventure, each voyage a universe unto itself, a universe of timelessness and all enduring beauty.

But sadly, all too many boaters have the wonderment of their experience shattered by tragedy. Over 1400 people die each year in boating mishaps, most of them through ignorance or carelessness.

By taking the time to make a few important considerations, you can insure that this won't happen to you.

First, know your boat. All boats handle differently. Many accidents happen to experienced boaters who were using boats with which they were unfamiliar.

Once you are sure you know about your boat, you can make plans to use it. Do exactly that. Plan. Check the weather. A peace-instilling cruise can turn miserable if you're lost in the fog, or if a gale blows up.

Then, after you've heard from the Weather Service that it's great sailing, prepare your boat. Make sure you have enough fuel for your intended trip, plus a safety margin. When fueling, be extremely careful. Fill portable fuel tanks on the dock. Close all ports and hatches when fueling onboard tanks, and then open them when fueling is completed. Keep the nozzle of the hose in contact with the fuel fill. Wipe up all spills immediately.

Next, check all your equipment. Be sure everything is in good working order. For boats under 16 feet in length, and all canoes and kayaks, you must have either a Type I, II, III, or IV PFD (Personal Flotation Device) on board for each person. For all boats over 16 feet, you must have a Type I, II, or III PFD for each person, and in addition must have one Type IV PFD on board. Types I, II, and III are wearable devices. Type IV is a throwable device, such as a bouyant cushion or life ring. All PFDs must be readily accessible, of a size to fit the person for which they are intended, and must be marked Coast Guard Approved.

Fire extinguishers are also required on all motorboats that have permanently installed fuel tanks, or closed compartments under thwarts or seats wherein portable fuel tanks may be stored, or double bottoms not sealed to the hull, or closed living spaces or compartments that might hold or trap flammable gasses or liquids. All fire extinguishers must be Coast Guard Approved, fully charged, in good working order, and readily accessible. Make sure you have the right type for your boat. Outboard boats under 26 feet must have one Class B-1 extinguisher. All motorboats 26 to 0 feet must two class B-1 extinguishers, or one Class B-II extinguisher. Motorboats 40 to 65 feet must have three Class B-1s, or one Class B-II and one B-I extinguisher. The presence of a fixed fire extinguishing system counts for one B-I type extinguisher.

Make sure also that you have proper ventilation, and an adequate flame arrestor attached to your carburetor. Complete regulations for these devices are available free from the Boating Safety Division, First Coast Guard District, 150 Causeway Street, Boston, Mass. 02114.

Now, you've checked all your equipment, and meet all the federal regulations, you can load your boat. Most important, DO NOT OVERLOAD. Know the capacity of your boat and don't exceed it, no matter if they are all your friends. Overloading is a prime cause of capsizing and fatality. What you do load (including people), do so to keep the weight distributed evenly, low and in the center of the boat. Do not stand in a small boat more than necessary, and then only with extreme care.

Summer in Argentina offered

First week in May and still no summer plans? You've worked all year to save money for a trip and now you don't know where to go? Speak a little Spanish? Here's an idea that is reasonable, educational and exciting - go to Argentina on the Consejo Argentina de Intercambio Estudiantil (C.A.D.I.E.) program in Buenos Aires. Students accepted into the program will be guests in Argentine homes while visiting universities, museums, and theaters and attending tours and parties. C.A.D.I.E. has also designed a trip to Bariloche as part of the six week itinerary.

The entire fee, including room, board, international air fare and the trip to Bariloche is only $705 (and a $10 processing fee) for six weeks. (The trip to Bariloche is optional. Without the Bariloche excursion, the total cost is only $525.) The host families and C.A.D.I.E. provide the funds for such expenses as museum entrance fees, tours and theater tickets. The departure date is June 27 out of New York returning August 10. Interested students should contact Judy ⅓pstein at the International Programs Office in 239 Whitmore, as soon as possible.

Boston libraries open to grad students

UMass faculty and graduate students may now borrow books directly from the following libraries which are members of the Boston Consortium Libraries: Boston Public Library, and the libraries of Boston College, Boston University, Brandeis University, and Tufts Univeesity.

Faculty and graduate students from UMass who have consortium borrowers' cards are entitled to the same borrowing privileges as the lending institution generally grants to their own graduate students.

In order to qualify for direct borrowing, any graduate student or member of the faculty nned only submit an application to the Office of the Associate Director for Public Services in Room 02 of the University Library. Graduate students working on a thesis or dissertation need not be in residence to qualify, if they have paid their program fee for the current semester.

Letters to the editor

"Barpersons," please!

To The Editor:

In your article on the new image for the Blue Wall, the writer mentioned that the bouncers and the barmen are required to wear uniform T-shirts. We thought you might be interested to know that the barwomen are also required to wear these shirts. It would be more appropriate to refer to bartenders, or, if you must, barpersons [barpeople?], but please, not barmen.

Pub needs at least 250

To The Editor:

The magic number outside the inside door reads 201. The atmosphere inside calls for at least 250 people, rowdy and otherwise. For this is the Pub that we all have come to know while at UMass.

Upon looking into a certain complaint, news editor Mike Kneeland and Amherst Building inspector William Penza have clamped down on the Pub's operating procedures.

They claim that, in case of fire, many students and other patrons would perish. Little do they realize that the building is about 90 per cent concrete and all the wood is extremely hard oak. For those who were never boy scouts...it takes an extremely HOT fire to set oak into flames. Such a fire could not possibly start in a place such as the Pub as the kitchen is at the rear of the building and there are usually several cooks, waitresses, and bartenders in the immediate area should anything start.

In addition, the staff at the Pub is well rehearsed in what to do in case of an emergency, such as a fire. There are three clearly marked exits as well as plenty of windows that could serve as such after having a chair thrown through them.

Jerry Jolly, the manager, and Peter Lovely, the assistant manager are constantly wandering throughout the establishment keeping an eye on the situation with regard for the customers welfare.

How many other bars have you been in where the management, instead of throwing out a drunkard and leaving him to his own, will take such a person to the rear of the Pub and offer him coffee and actually take time out from their duties to walk him around outside in an effort to make him feel better? The Pub is the ONLY place where I have seen such measures taken to insure that their customers don't have lamp poles jumping out into the road in front of their cars.

Mr. Jolly is running this place so that all can have a good time. And he is not attempting to rip you off at a buck a beer like some other places in the area.

This, then, is a call to Mr. Penza to re-evaluate the 201 occupancy rule and take into consideration that the people thrive on the crowds and subsequent atmosphere at the Pub and that the crowds remain, for the most part, extremely orderly.

There is NO need to have lines coming out of the Pub and headed out toward East Pleasant Street when the Pub is prepared for such crowds on the inside where the entertainment is. The staff is there, concerned, and knowledgeable of what to do in an emergency situation.

Again, let me stress that there is NO way on God's green earth that the Pub is about to go up in smoke. Cement does not burn. Let the people in.

Schneer right; "benign neglect" used

To The Editor:

I read the article of 5-1 by Debby Schneer, and feel compelled to respond to a theme which, though recurrent, has only recently become vocalized on this campus — U.S. imperialist stance toward the Third World — more specifically Latin America.

Once the Bay of Pigs invasion had ended in failure, the Alliance for Progress was hatched. It too expired, though not as quickly as the Bay incident: Project Camelot died shortly after birth from "complications" in Chile. It seemed as if the U.S. had relaxes its unabashed manipulation of the socio-political-economic affairs of its southern neighbors. Indeed, many of our "expert" Latin American observers declared [with a liberal sign of relief?] that the seventies would be a period of "Benign Neglect" in our Western Hemispheric policies.

Unfortunately, although predictably, the only part of the manipulation which was "relaxed" was the unabashed part. The increased sophistication of Social Engineering experts and administrators has made possible a far more subtle form of manipulation — education. It is dangerous to see this as non-interference; it is only a different form of the same old story — U.S. control over the lives of people far away. A short example will suffice:

In The Rockefeller Report on the Americas, a presidential commission formed by Nixon in 1968, recommendations were proposed for a tightly controlled Western Hemisphere organization under the direction of the U.S. president, which would extend into all areas of Latin America foreign affairs. An interesting subdivision entitled ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY was proposed "in the Executive Office of the President to supersede the present AID administration in the State Department." Under the control of this Agency would be a Western Hemisphere Institute for Education, Science, and Culture. The policy statement of this Institute, as it appeared in the Report would be: "A good educational system is absolutely essential to produce the trained leadership required for public affairs, management, modern production, and creative arts." The objectives of the Institute would be: To "Foster effective systems of elementary education by encouraging the creation of demonstration schools that encompass the elements of modern science and the structure of modern society, including the principles of social science and the nature of human aspiration." There is much more, but the Commissions essential foisting of U.S. centered values is obvious from the above. What was intended was U.S. education by U.S. cultural standards.

Some people will argue that the Report was only a recommendation, that it has not been implemented by the present administration. I will not argue the narrowness of that point, however. It should be painfully clear to those who have followed the recent developments in the School of Ed, that the spirit of those Rockefeller recommendations [if not the letter] are being actively pursued at this school I urge all of you who are interested to find out for yourselves whether "benign neglect" exists. The observation ground is right here on this campus — let your feelings be known to the administration!

Wider: not serious, ambiguous, ridiculous

To The Editor:

I am writing in reference to James Widner's letter concerning the proposed budget cuts at UMass. I hope that he wasn't serious in his remarks, and I also hope that none in the community will take his statements seriously. However, I am afraid that such is not the case, therefore I feel compelled to refute his arguments.

Apparently Mr. Widner would have us all fit into the "little boxes made of ticky-tacky" which the "traditional" curricula offer to some of us. I say this, because if we do not have alternatives such as BDIC, which he terms "ridiculous", those students who do not feel as they are accomplishing what they want when faced with a "traditional" major, would be stifled by studying what they want. We all do much better work when the work is something we enjoy, whether it be Chemistry, Business, Dancing, or Folklore. Without BDIC, there is no alternative.

Concerning Afro-American Culture Studies, and Everywoman's Center, there is a great need for this type of department on campus. How much evidence does Mr. Widmer need to show him how serious the problems of racism and sexism are on this campus, let alone the rest of the country? These areas offer opportunities for us to fight these problems where they start, and to create viable alternatives for Black and Female students. To rob them of these alternatives is robbing them of the opportunity to understand themselves, and other's reactions to themselves.

Concerning the books for the library, I feel that there will never be a time when any library has enough books. If one student uses a particular book in the library, either for research, or for enjoyment, the purchase has been justified.

While I agree that students from lower incomes should be able to attend some of the more expensive schools in the state, there are those who couldn't get the courses that they can get here but nowhere else in the state? Where would you send them?

Regarding the teaching assistantships, I feel that in every case, the smaller the class the better. Every effort should be made to reduce the size of classes whenever, and whereever poosible.

I conclude by saying that, if you were not serious in your letter, you should take steps to reduce the ambiguity in your writing, so that people will not take you seriously when you intend to be satirical. If, however, you are serious [and I fear that this indeed is the case] I urge you to take a look at the programs you term "ridiculous", the half-empty library, and the TA's who are helping you get an education. Look, and see what these are doing, if not for you, then for many other students here at UMass and across the country.

Bartending diploma not worth a drink

To The Editor:

This week, and for the second time this semester, there is going to be a "quickie" bartending course being given at the Campus Center. For twelve dollars and four or five hours of your time on two consecutive nights, you get a minimal survey of bartending and a diploma! It should be noted that this course is neither recognized nor recommended by the management of any of the bar services at the Campus Center [Blue Wall, Hatch, and T.O.C.]. You could check at other drinking establishments in the area or someplace like the Cape and you would also find, in my opinion, that this will make no difference in your landing a bartending or cocktail waitressing-waitering job.

I feel that this so-called bartending course is a rip-off! It is way over priced for the amount of "bar education" it gives and it gives a false impression, through the issuance of a diploma, that it will help you to possibly land a part-time or summer job. I would like to see the interest fostered on this campus for bartending be satisfied by a course taught by the School of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration, rather than a private company interested in making a killing and then moving on.

"Umies deleted"

The other day, while I was sleeping pleasantly after a long arduous day of frisbees and frolic, not to mention school (which I won't), my slumber was terminated abruptly by a phone call..........

BBBRRRIIINNNGGG... BBRRIINNGGGG!!!!'

"Wha d'ya want.." I muttered half asleep and half disgruntled.

"This is Nick Danger, Third Eye. Thats DANGER. I spell it with a "D".

"Look wise guy, you got a nerve callin at this hour and impersonating "Firesign Theatre". Look whats the story before I can this conversation." I said in my most Dick Tracy type voice.

"It's cool Zamir. Its me, Charles Camelopard, the Collegian's Washington D.C. Correspondent and secret entrepeneur. I've got a Hot Tip, and every time I try to sit down it hurts."

"Where are you now?"

"You won't believe it, but I'm standing naked in a phone booth in some Burger King in Georgetown. Not only that buy my relish and onion sandwich is getting cold and there's an old lady waiting to use the phone. She thinks I'm changing into my Superman's outfit."

O.K. Charles hold on. Now slowly and in English that even a retarded Yak could understand, what gives?"

"What gives is that yesterday while I was paddling my kayak up the Potomac, just as I got by this bridge, a brown paper bag attached to a large stone flew down from the bridge and hit me on the head."

"Is that all? For this you wake me up in the middle of the night. Look, go to the Infirmary, and they'll fix you up!" I said knowing that they would fix him up but good.

"You don't understand. That's not all. What was inside that bag was a whole bunch of tapes which were tagged "Untouched By Human Hands" and a little note calling John Dean a whole bunch of bad names and expletive deleteds."

"Whoahh!!! Were they....."

"You bet your sweet Whitmore they were. The entire unedited set of secret executive type presidential and even White House tapes. They sound like a bad David Frye album."

What did they say?"

"The usual garbage that comes out of that place. What's really interesting is what was said in that eighteen minute gap in the tape. It was the Dick talking to John Erlichman about a National Security project of the highest priority."

"And what was that, executive infiltration of the Howdy Doody Fan Club?" I smugly asserted.

No! but close! You wouldn't believe it but they were discussing selling everybody at UMass to a Tibetan Monk named Wang Lo to be sold as rickshaw drivers, and turning the University into an F.B.I. Summer Camp for Strung Out Politicians. Can you imagine Frankie Rizzo, Joey Aliotto, Hubie Humphrey and little Johnny Mitchell all in the same bunk? They could all live in Pierpont!"

"Do you mean to tell me that the President of the United States and the Chief of the National Security Council have nothing better to do in their spare and idle moments, than to sit back and plot insane schemes of turning the largest University into a Home for Retarded Persons, just because we don't care for them? Do you mean to say that our President would stoop so low as to wish a certain segment of his constituency were deported to another continent? I'm shocked and it turns my good liberal stomach. Anyways why did they go to so much trouble to have it earsed?"

"You wouldn't believe it, but then they decided that UMass would be the perfect place to put all those leaking nerve gas cannisters, if you catch the drift. They figure that it wouldn't affect the behavior of the people there too much. They also said something about the Bluewall."

Well they're probably right on that score, which explains the erasures. Tell me, were there any other items on the tapes of interest?"

"Yes, you know the "expletives deleted" and the "characterization omitted" on the edited transcripts, where everybody thinks Nixon is swearing like a pig? Well you wouldn't believe it, but the word that he uses is none other than "UMIE"!!"

"I don't believe it!"

With apologies to Dean Tucker... The Pain is too Great This Week!!

Democrats for A.G.

The race for the Democratic nomination for Attorney General has reached the point where it seems that it can be understood. The number of candidates has leveled out at five: Edward Harrington, Francis Bellotti, S. Lester Ralph, Edward O'Brien and George Sacco et al. The race has, however, narrowed down to Harrington, Sacco and Bellotti.

Edward Harrington is perhaps the representative of the progressive wing of the party, he has received the endorsement of the Democratic caucus. The caucus is supposed to represent the liberals of the party. Harrington is new to politics but has worked with federal law enforcement agencies. Under Robert Kennedy and Ramsey Clark he investigated the murder of three civil rights workers in 1964. He has also dealt with organized crime and aided in the prosecution of Raymond Patriaca, leader of the New England mob. Some of his stands may not prove too popular; his honest and frank discussion of the bussing issue will not win him votes in the suburbs. He feels that bussing was designed by the richer residents of the state to aid the lower income members of the inner city. It makes no sense in his mind however to bus children from one inferior school to another; he believes that many of the inner city schools do not meet suburban standards. In fact it seems that the greatest byproduct of bussing has been increased antagonism between lower class blacks and whites. Harrington feels that the best way to intergrate schools and provide a quality education is to make the suburbs more accesible to the poor. To this end he has supported anti-snob zoning laws which will not endear him to the hearts of suburbanites. But Harrington's biggest drawbacks are that he is not well known and doesn't have very much money.

Former Lieutenant Governor Francis Bellotti is probably the best known candidate and has the best campaign organization. He has run for statewide office four times since 1962 but has been elected only once, Lt. Governor in 1962. This must be discouraging to his organization but even more discouraging is the decline in the number of votes he has received. In 1962 he was elected, in '64 he was defeated by John Volpe by one of the smallest margins in the state's history and in '66 Elliot Richardson overcame him less than ten-thousand votes. But in 1970 when he sought the nomination for Governor he only managed twenty-three percent of the vote. Further in 1964 he challenged and beat incumbent Democratic Governor Peabody in the primary. While it may seem that this ten year old fact of history would have no bearing on present politics it should be noted that political memories die hard and many people still feel that Bellotti stabbed Peabody in the back. Yet despite these disadvantages Bellotti is the front runner today and probably has the best chance to beat a GOP opponent.

George Sacco is the former chairperson of the House ways and Means Committee, he suffers from some of the same problems that plague Harrington and Bellotti. First, like Bellotti he is an Italian which would not mean much in most states but in Massachusetts some people still vote along ethnic lines. So, Bellotti and Sacco will split the "Italian" vote. Second, Sacco like Harrington is not well known in the state but he has it appears been able to raise substantial campaign funds. Sacco is perhaps the most conservative of the three candidates, he favors capital punishment and opposes abortion on demand. He has worked with the Massachusetts Council of Sportsmen's Clubs on gun control but this has fallen through since the Council opposes any meaningful gun control. As chairperson of the House Ways and Means Committee Sacco was able to influence many pieces of legislation and develop many friends in the House. If his former collegues help him on election day it could change the outcome of the race. Sacco was probably hurt the most by the ending of the convention; it usually dominated by the State Legislature and Sacco's strength is there.

Edward O'Brien, a Governor's Councilor from Easthampton, and S. Lester Ralph, Mayor of Sommerville, are also running but do not offer viable candidacies. Whoever wins the primary will have to face a serious Republican challenge for the first time in eight years.

Abstention
No excuse for action

By BRENT WILKES

The Student Senate has a procedural device called the abstention, which is used to avoid making decisions which are difficult or which require some knowledge of the subject. The widespread use of abstention indicates that the senate is wishy-washy on important matters and-or they are ignorant about matters on which they must decide.

Formally defined, to abstain means to refrain from voting either for or against a motion. Informally, it means to vote or not to vote, to cop out, or to stand firmly on the fence.

The senate relies on this device of inaction as they employ it constantly on matters which require some thoughtful consideration. For example, in four meetings of the Budgets Committee this semester, the committee took 78 votes on various budgetary matters. Of the 78 votes, 62 of them had abstentions or about 80 per cent. This means that in four out of every five votes taken, at least one member of the committee decides not to decide. Many times it is more than one person. A motion to strike category 515 (Plays) from the Belchertown Volunteers was passed with three votes in favor of the motion, none against and four abstaining!!!

The option of abstention is one which student government can do without. If a committee member does not have enough information on a motion, he-she should obtain the necessary information through research, inquisitiveness, or whatever. If the committee or the senate cannot obtain information on the fundamentals of a motion, then the decision should not be under the jurisdiction of the senate, for no group should make decisions on that which they know nothing about. If people do have enough information but cannot decide, then these people should not be involved in decision making groups. Progress and action result from making decisions and not pondering them forever.

Some people say the abstention is a polite subtle way of saying no to a motion. This is also wrong. When a person makes a conviction, that person should stand by the conviction and not mask it in innuendo.

In general, the preponderance of abstentions indicate that the student senate lacks its most important ingredient: Leadership. Leadership involves knowing and understanding the activities of the constituents. Leadership involves taking stands and making decisions for the betterment of the student body. Leadership involves action, not inaction. Most importantly, leadership involves confidence in oneself and in what one is doing. Abstention has no place here. It is, by its very equivocal nature, contrary to the ideals of leadership. It is a defeating device and one which serves no purpose.

Yet the senate and its committees will continue to abstain until it is destroyed by its own inaction. Presently, the senate is under fire for doing nothing. And what is the senate doing about it? They're not supporting it or denying it, they're abstaining.

Lucretia Borgia's Kitchen

Liberate your taste buds. Say to hell with Col. Sanders and Ronald MacDonald. Home cooking can be easy and fun. You don't have to be the Galloping Gourmet to prepare tasty, nutritious meals for yourself and your friends. (An informal meal with a friend is a friendly as you can get with your clothes on.)

So home cooking is what this column is all about and friends cam make it work. Send me your favorite recipes. I'll try them and print them. You try mine and tell me if you liked them or can improve on them. I'm especially anxious to hear from ethnic food freaks and imaginative vetetarians.

This week's recipe is for a cheap and delicious main dish.

LUCRETIA'S CASSEROLE

1 lb. hamburg
1 sm. onion [chopped]
1 can tomato sauce [8 oz.]
5 slices cheese [American, Swiss, etc.]
1 can refrigerated biscuits [8 oz.]
one-quarter cup catsup
tsp. pepper

Break up the beef and brown it in a large frying pan with the onion. Drain off the excess fat. Add tomato sauce, catsup, and pepper. Heat until bubbly stirring occasionally. Lightly grease an 8 inch baking pan. Spread ½ the mixture and top with 4 slices of cheese. Cover the cheese with the rest of the mix. Arrange the biscuits around the edge and put the last slice of cheese in the middle. Bake at 400 degrees F for 15-20 minutes or until the biscuits are golden brown.

ENJOY!

Nothing to sneeze at

By RON CHAIT

"Ker-choo!"

"A-a-a-h-h-h-shit!"

You wriggle your nose, you hold your breath, you struggle with all your might, but it's to no avail. The sneeze, that nasal nemesis, has been with us for a long time. And it's here to stay.

The causes are numerous and varied. Dust. Microbes. Pollen. "Sunshine on my eyeballs makes me sneeze," relates Cyndy Botsch, an inhabitant of George Washington dorm. "It's true! Whenever I feel like I'm going to sneeze, I look up into the sun, and it helps me sneeze. I don't know why, but it works."

At one time, people believed that sneezes were a curse from the devil, an opportunity for Satan to take over the body. This is why even today the phrase "God bless you" is directed towards anyone who's just spread his germs all over the room.

Everyone has his own style. According to Sandy Shapiro of Cance, "you can tell a person's character by the way he or she sneezes." The quiet sneezer is likely to be dainty and feminine, while the loud "honker" is probably trying to act masculine. Sneezes short and quick indicate impatience. Of course, these generalizations are not binding.

Dave Newman, who does most of his sneezing at WMUA, thinks "a good sneeze has the potential of a good orgasm." Ms. Shapiro agrees. "It makes you feel really good mentally and physically. You're relieved."

Yet not everyone enjoys sneezing.

"It's messy."

"It's uncouth."

"It's against my religion."

"It hurts my ears."

"After you sneeze, what do you do with your hand?"

In the words of Bill McDonald, "Nose-blowing is an annoyance." The self-proclaimed Joe College of Greenough House is quite vehement in his views. "It's a general disgrace! I just hope a nose-blowing tax is never levied."

Never were more Kleenexes used than in 1966, when June Clark set the record for nasal explosions. She suffered from chronic sneezing for 155 days.

Most people sneeze for shorter durations of time. Greg Ellis, a sophomore planning on becoming a junior, says with pride, "I generally sneeze in threes. Rasputin did the same thing you know. I guess it's a sign of oddity." If so, the university is crawling with oddballs.

"I always sneeze in twos," ventures an anonymous student of female stature. "Especially on the steps to Orchard Hill, near the rhododendron gardens. I guess I'm allergic."

Most people don't pay much attention to the sniffle syndrome. They take it for granted, and this could be dangerous. Did you know that you're not supposed to block your nose when you sneeze, because you're liable to blow your ears out?

That's nothing to sneeze at.

My earth, my mother

By E. PATRICK MCQUAID

THE SUN ROSE. A dismal, leaden cloud of gray mist hoovers over the bleak, glacial terrain that in contemporary space is called Earth. A faint glimmer of light breaks across the horizon; weaving its way through the vaporous shroud it strikes upon the dew laden ground. A grange of faded green becomes a field of blazing gold.

The darkness scatters and rays beam upon the land. The beasts are content in their pasture; the trees and herbs are verdant. Birds fly from their nests and their wings praise the dawn.

A crimson wheel barrow gleaming with rain water; a rusted pitchfork half buried under a scattering of hay; and small white hens cackle as they scurry across the farmyard.

Still scented with the fragrance of earth, a swan dips its snake-like neck beneath the still waters. The sensation of the water rises up through a dense, cold paste and sight and sound become a ringing blurr as the horizon disappears under the pond.

Wondrous Earth, Mother of all; forever virgin, forever tilled. New and young with the birth of each day. Earth and sun, lips upon lips, embrace each other clinging and absorbing all they can from the day's brevity.

By noon the fields are engaged in their calling. Baaing, mooing, quacking, shouting; hoofs, feet, claws, and boots; all are busy about their work; their life. A tractor grinds through an open meadow and the soil turns its face to the sun.

Small sprouts of green appear atop the ground. Breaking through the earth, laboriously raising their limbs to the sky, they grasp for sunlight.

All through the afternoon and into the early evening the sounds of machines purring, hammers striking metal, animals moving about, and men shouting their orders envelopes the countryside.

A slight taste of rain is in the air as twilight begins to set in. Cricketts are heard from near and far. The tools are rattling as they are placed in the barn where they came from.

The heavy barn door shuts. The animals are silent. The farmer walks to his home. The screen door creaks slowly as it is opened and the smell of hot food fills the porch.

The breeze is a little stronger now and a drop or two of rain has fallen. A slight untterance comes from the barn as the beasts stir in their stalls. Vivid, burning swirls are forming a starry night.

The world now laughs silently; torn are the drapes of mystery and fear. The wedding is at hand of dark and light. The day is ended. The work is done. THE SUN SET.

HOOSIERS BOOZERS? Alcohol imbibers constitute a greater percentage of the campus population at Indiana University than the national average, according to a report in the indiana daily student.

The IU Drug Commission reports that alcohol ranks ahead of all drugs consumed, including asperin and coffee. While the freshman class makes up the largest number of daily alcohol consumers, the senior class has the largest percentage of alcohol users.

One revelation of the Commission survey is the IU student alcohol use is about seven per cent above the national consumption level.

Eighty-seven per cent of students responding said they drink at least occasionally. The national average is 80 per cent, according to a 1970 U.S. Government report.

COMMIE CAUSE? Indiana's state attorney general has been asked by a State Senator to seek FBI investigation of the company and the artist who produced a controversial cover on the Purdue University yearbook.

"The Debris" shows a hammer and sickle emblem on yellow and white cloth. The Legislator also says he has found "subtle allusions to the communist cause" in the pages of the book.

Yearbook Editor Bob Dittus said the symbol has historical meaning, representing the mechanical arts and agriculture of the 100-year-old college.

Purdue Prexy Arthur Hanssen is defending the editor of "one of the best put-together yearbooks I have seen."

Critic brings Hollywood here

By KATHI COLEMAN
MDC Special

"Who Listens to Movie Critics?" was the question posed by professor, writer and critic Arthur Knight. Apparently not many was the answer suggested by the sparse crowd of less than one hundred that huddled together in the SUB Monday night.

"They are writing for each other," was the sun-tanned, blue-suited Knight's immediate response to the self-posed question. He then retracted the statement with, "this is not entirely the case."

He cited many studios that claim no one listens to the critics. If this is the truth, he wonders why so many advertisements for films include excerpts from critical reviews.

Knight combined two topics for his lecture. Along with the question about the film critic's audience he considered "New Repressiveness in Film" It was his contention that if The Lovers, a French film of 1959, had been banned the course of film history would have been changed. The public would have been denied its "Carnal Knowledges and Last Tangos."

Also the future of the film will be determined by current issues in the courts. This aspect of the media is of particular interest to him as he has been present at several trials concerning film suits. Recently at a trial in Danville, Illinois, he found it particularly accurate to sum up the situation in the words of a theatre owner who was being sued, "If I give the people what they say they want, I go broke. If I give them what I know they want, I go to jail."

In his easy flowing manner, he explained the role of the film critic as being to help those who see a film "to see it better." He specifically sees himself as a "bridge between filmmaker and the audience." He cited the importance and the difficulty of synchronizing a critic's taste and style to the publication he represents. He said that the viewer should not expect critics to share their own points of view.

After less than an hour, the floor was opened to questions. He was asked about the chances of breaking into the studios after completing college. He favors the college graduate over the outdate "all in the family" method of selection for filmmaking. He believes that studios are looking to the colleges for "young blood." Although he did admit there were many insurrmountable obstacles in the way of breaking into the big studio circut.

When a number of questions had been answered with equal concern, the lecture was dismissed to the art gallery of the SUB for coffee. Knight willingly talked to a small circle of students until almost 10:30.

A little bit of Hollywood was here Monday night in the form of a film critic. 17,741 unnergraduates missed him.

MDC party

Thursday night (tomorrow), all good Collegian staffers have a chance to be bad at the annual Collegian printers' party.

This gala night of wine, malt beverage, chicken salad sandwiches, whipped cream and other delights will start at 6:30 p.m. when a bus leaves the bus circle, and end somewhere around midnight.

Ware River News, the delightful company that prints the Collegian, supplies all the goodies and will conduct various educational tours around the printing plant.

The Collegian will provide the transportation, and all of this comes to you absolutely free of charge.

If you plan to attend, sign up with Bill Ballou in the office, or sign up in the appropriate space on the blackboard in the office.

VA checks

This year veterans pre-enrolling for Summer Session will automatically receive Advance Payment from the VA. This means they will pick up their checks at the University on Registration Day. Also, if they feel they have enough months of entitlement left to complete their program, they are now able to collect their GI Bill benefits from May 30th through August 16th rather than June 24th through August 16th. This will mean a 2½ month reduction in their entitlement rather than 1= months. Any veterans who have the eligibility time remaining and want to be paid for the May-August benefits, please state this when filling out the application. Again, summer session will be paid by Advance Payment so no checks will be received until the day of Registration, June 24th. Pre-enroll with the Veterans Affairs Office for Summer Session.

NOTE: Applications for Advance Payment only for the Fall Semester are being held up, temporarily. This is due to the reorganization of the VA's payment system. If interested in applying for Advance Payment for the Fall Semester, keep in contact with the Office of Veterans Affairs throughout the summer.

Turn in any Certificate of Attendance cards to the VA immediately. Remember, no one will be paid for May until the card is processed and it takes the VA at least 30 days to process that card.

Learn and earn

Paid internships are few at the Outreach office in Goodell but program director Bill Burke has announced a new U.S. Department of the Interior Park Service internship at the GS-4 level for next semester.

Burke said the new program in conjunction with the Denver Service Center will enable UMass students to gain a full semester of academic credit while employed by the National Park Service. Known as the Cooperative Education Agreement, the Park Service pays students at the annual rate of $7,198 while they are Outreach interns.

Robert Walton, the Department's Management specialist reports that students who have worked for the National Park Service under the program often have an advantage in being considered for professional employment with them after graduation.

This new Outreach internship will allow students to apply the theory learned on campus with actual participation in Department of the Interior activities in Denver, Colorado.

Students interested in planning and design work for maintenance and construction projects in Park Service areas are urged to contact Bill Burke at the Outreach Center in Goodell Building.

UMass symphony

UMass Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Fussell, will feature works by 20th century composers in its concert tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The program will be Elliot Carter's "Canon in Memoriam", Feruccio Busoni's "Rondo Arlecchinesco", and three short works by Igor Stravinsky, "Fanfare", "Circus Polka", and "Birthday Greetings".

The Orchestra will also perform two scenes from Stravinsky's "Rake's Progress" which will feature faculty singers Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and Rodney Gisick, bass; and visiting contralto Calliope Shenas.

A pre-20th century work to be presented, Haydn's "Sinfonie Concertante" will feature an instrumental quartet of students Marian Pinheirs, viola; and Frederick Hood, cello; and faculty members Charles Lehrer, oboe; and Linda Smith, bassoon.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Smith pre-med

The Smith College Pre-med Committee will sponsor a panel discussion tomorrow at the Alumni House at Smith. Five panelists will present their diverse perspectives on the shortcomings, and recent innovations in, the American system of health care delivery.

The panel discussion will be followed by a question and answer period and coffee.

First Spring Fest features bands, horses

The first annual spring fest will be held tomorrow and Friday as a culmination to this year's Campus Center activities. The fest will feature music by the Outer Space Band, the University Concert Band, a German Band, and a Scott Joplin Ragtime Band. The Budweiser Clydesdales will also make a special appearance on the UMass campus and will parade around campus accompanied by a UMass mounted police ascort. Food and drink will be on hand through the courtesy of the Campus Center Food Services and a coffee shop will be set up by the Italian Club. In addition there will be a number of art happenings produced by UMass students, contests, and giveaways. The giveaways will include free dinners at the T.O.C. and Spring Fest t-shirts. All activities will take place on the Campus Center terrace and in the area behind the Student Union.

The Spring Fest is being sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council in conjunction with the Campus Center Food Service Department, with the assistance of RSO-student activities staff. As an added attraction to these festivities, the Campus Center has now, on display, in the University Store, the real life models for their Spring Fest posters.

Center surveys Class of 1974

The Student Development Center is conducting a survey of the Class of 1974 to find out their post-graduate plans... job, grad school, other training program, travel, year off... whatever they will be doing. This survey will be conducted in conjunction with the various departments. Each department will have survey cards to distribute to the seniors in that particular department.

The Development Center feels that the survey will serve many useful purposes, such as aids in counseling for student plans after graduation, and in curriculum planning. The departments as well as the Student Development Center are very concerned as to what the students will be doing after leaving the University. Each senior is urged to complete the survey card and return it to his or her department.

Seniors in the School of Ed. can pick up their cards in the undergraduate advising office the School of Ed. in 158 Hills South. Seniors in the History department should go to 613 Herter for their cards. For any senior, cards may be obtained at the assistance desk outside the Bluewall.

The deadline for all cards is May 15. Cards may also be picked up in the Student Development Center office in Berkshire House.

Marijuana minority

possession--for some, a tempting combination.

The UMass police work hard to catch those--students as well as outsiders--who are responsible for the commission of these felonies, but it is sometimes difficult, Johnston contends, since many students never report such thefts, fearing prosecution on drug charges.

"We have never pressed charges against a student who was the victim of such a drug-related theft," he said. "We are much more concerned with catching those responsible for the thefts. They pose a much more serious threat to the community."

Another problem Johnston is increasingly concerned with is alcohol abuse, which he described as "the biggest drug proglem on campus, because of its anti-social effects."

This is a message that Room to Move has been trying to get across to students for some time now, if any drug has won wider acceptance on campus than marijuana, it is alcohol.

"There are a lot of students who spend the mornings in bars in town waiting for the Blue Wall to open," Mellor said. He added that alcohol abuse among UMass students is a "serious health problem".

The Room to Move counsellors see a large gap between campus use of alcohol and marijuana and other available drugs. Mellor estimated that about 25 percent of the students at UMass continue to use hallucinegins (lsd, mescaline, psycilocibn), although he said that "there is usually an upswing in their use around this time of the year."

He said that "only a very minute percentage" of the students here use heroin, and only a few more indulge in cocaine use. The latter is seen so infrequently, he said, because "it is very expensive for students and often a rip-off".

Quaalude, the campus rage just a year ago is much less accessible now, Mellor said.

It is marijuana, though, which is emerging as the staple drug among UMass students, and given the continuing rise in its popularity and the hesitancy of law enforcement officials to arrest those who choose to smoke it, it seems safe to assume that the next couple of years will see its position among students even more firmly entrenched.

As one official pointed out, "Even police are susceptible to public opinion. Just because a law is on the books doesn't mean that they are going to enforce it."

And in the case of marijuana, it is becoming increasingly evident to many that just because a law is on the books doesn't mean that people are going to obey it.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Dig deep for information. Nothing now is handed to you. Instead, extra effort is necessary. Older individual, in position of authority, plays key role. Strive for greater communication. Express views in honest, conservative manner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are able to get hand on pulse of public. You know what is needed and what to do about it. Knowledge is not action but you are on right track. Aries, Libra persons play significant roles. Friend with money questions seeks your counsel. Don't become inextricably involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Measure actions, moves. Include mate, partner. Avoid jumping to conclusions. See persons the way they are--not merely as you wish they might be. New contact now can develop into meaningful relationship.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are called upon to relate experiences, to teach. Key is to co-operate--within limits. Means share but be sure you get something in return. Aquarius, Leo persons figure prominently. Surprise dinner invitation may be on agenda.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Highlight flexibility. Outlet for creative talents is available. It is necessary to shake up routine. Refuse to be painted into proverbial corner. Sagittarian, although blunt, is trying to aid. Know it and understand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Double check. Take conservative course. Be careful about details. Read between the lines--be aware of fine print. Scorpio can help you find hidden clause. Additional information enables you to deal from position of greater strength.

LIBRA (Sept. 23- Oct. 22): Nothing is definite, set or settled. The only factor you can rely on is change. Know it and act like you are aware. One in authority could request report--in writing. Organize thoughts. Gemini, Virgo persons are in picture.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Domestic adjustment occurs. Be diplomatic. Gain co-operation of family member. Purchase gift for special occasion. Remember diet resolutions. Be aware of nutritional requirements. Outlay of cash is necessary for quality--and it will be worth it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can improve property. You can enhance surroundings. Cycle is such that you succeed by being a self-starter. Means take initiative. Perfect techniques. Refuse secondhand products. You have right to ask for and receive top grade.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One who has been reluctant to express appreciation will now do so. Be gracious. Accept responsibility. Overtime work results in gain and leads to elevation of standing. Another Capricorn could figure prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend who has been absent mak3s exciting return. Romantic interests are highlighted. Relationship is tested. You discover what--and who--you desire. Finish project which has been left hanging. Aries, Libra persons may be in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Element of luck is on your side. Added recognition is due. Creative efforts pay dividends. Your style, indipendence and sensitivity become more desirable to more persons. Professional associate, superior applaud.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an organizer, a natural executive, capable of earning money and attracting opposite sex. Emotional bruise will heal. October will be one of your most important months of 1974. Capricorn, Cancer persons play significant roles in your life. You are stubborn and passionate.

This year the average student paid more than $1900 in tuition, room, board, and assorted fees to attend UMASS. Next year he will spend approximately $75 more. The costs that should increase are:

Tuition $300-year to ? (there are bills in the legislature)
Board $643.50-year to $690-year (15 meals)
$569.50-year to $616-year (10 meals)
Health Fee $77-year to $92-year
Campus Center Fee $52-year to $64-year

What ever happened to a cheap inexpensive education? Doesn't this make you mad?

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Campus Center Bond Issue is trying to save YOU some money, and you can help us help you by signing and sending the attached letter to your State Senator and Representative care of the State Legislature in Boston.

First of a two-part interview

Quarry waits for bout with contender

SPORTING FEATURES

By TIM O'CONNELL

The scene was a large circus-like tent. Outside the rain poured down on the motel's billboard which read: "Jerry Quarry training here — come on in." Quarry, one of the top contenders for the World's Heavyweight Championship, was using the facilities supllied him by a large Westbury, Long Island motel to train for his May 8 bout with Joe Alexander. The fight, which will initiate boxing at the Nassau Colliseum in Uniondale, L.I., is nothing more than an excuse for Quarry to keep active while waiting for a bout with a legitimate contender.

After sparring a few rounds, Quarry wrapped up his workout by thanking the aplauding crowd of about 100 people for coming down, and signing autographs for the group that surrounded him as he descended from the ring. Upon informing him that I was interested in doing an article on him for a college newspaper, Jerry invited my friends and myself to join him, his sparmates, and trainer in his room for an interview.

Jerry Quarry takes a breather.

The first area we discussed concerned George Foreman. Jerry's prediction on the Foreman-Ali fight: "Foreman will walk right through him." He elaborated, explaining that Ali's punching power has deteriorated from it's less-than-powerful peak, and that Ali will not be able to hurt Foreman or even hold him off. Quarry believes Ali will be kayoed.

As far as his own chances of beating Foreman, Quarry stated "If anyone can beat Foreman, it's me." I suggested that there are two important criteria for achieving this: the ability to take Foreman's blows and to be able to hurt Foreman.

He repled that "I've proven I can take a punch" and "Ali won't be able to hurt Foreman. I will" I asked him whether or not it is true that Quarry sparred with Foreman once.

"Yeah, in 1969, a few months after the Frazier fight," he said. (Foreman turned pro on the day Quarry lost to Joe Frazier on a cut eye, June 23, 1969) "He gave me a good workout." But the session was cut short by one of Quarry's punches. "I hit him a pretty good shot and tore the ligaments in his jaw." Jerry Quarry is confident that he can beat George Foreman.

The discussion turned to another inevitable subject, Muhammed Ali. It began with Ali's recent backing out of a bout with Jerry scheduled for May at Madison square Garden, which prompted accusations of a Black conspiracy by Quarry. Jerry pointed out to us that the only bouts he's been getting are the ones which the "top" 4 heavyweights are ducking, such as Ron Lyle and Earnie Shavers. It is a fact that in the last two years, Ali, Frazier, Foreman, and Norton have busied themselves fighting one another. The major fights concerning these four black fighters during the past two years have been: Ali-Norton, Frazier-Foreman, Ali-Norton rematch, Frazier-Ali rematch, Foreman-Norton, and in September we'll have Foreman-Ali. Both Foreman and Ali have backed out on announced fights with Quarry while Norton and Frazier keep rejecting MSG offers for a Quarry fight. Jerry emphasized that "I've never ducked anyone in this business and I'm sick and tired of them ducking me."

The cancellation of the Ali fight particularly bothered Jerry. When I asked him what his biggest disappointment has been, he replied, "The second Clay fight. I'll never fight on the same card with Mike again." Jerry's little brother, Mike had fought Bob Foster for the Lightheavy-weight title in the semi-final to the Ali-Quarry bout. Quarry had watched the fight from his dressing room and had felt Foster's punches right with Mike. When the bubble of tension burst with Foster's kayo of Mike, Jerry felt drained and disappointed, and he was fighting Muhammed Ali in five minutes. He had other troubles too. "I got divorced four days after the fight." Intense pressure from his well-meaning family which has plagued him throughout his career was at a peak. All these factors contributed to his zombie-like performance in the fight, and his resulting retirement from the ring.

Part two tomorrow.

Another gymn alumnus responds

To The Editor:

I am writing as an alumnus and a member of the first gymnastics team at UMass. Some of my most cherished memories are of my connection with the UMass gymnastics team, and that experience has been a part of my life ever since then.

Although I am not in the field of physical education [I teach German and am a counselor], I founded and still coach a gymnastics team. This is one of the things I am most proud of in my career, and it is a very fulfilling experience.

I do want to add my voice to the many protests that have been expressed concerning the proposed dropping of gymnastics at UMass. The team is one that the University should be very proud of. It has for years been a very positive representative of the University and everything should be done to insure its future in UMass athletics.

The University has no trouble fielding teams in sports that can be training grounds for professional athletes, and I cannot believe that it cannot afford the costs of the gymnastics team, but iis very much in the spirit of the ideals of the student-athletes.

It seems to me that the University's priorities and sense of values are badly distorted, if it can allow a team that was started by the efforts of Jim Bosco who spent his own time to develop a team with little support from the athletic department, and which has continued in this tradition for many years now and has had such success.

Orr flips B's over Flyers, 3-2

BOSTON [UPI] — Bobby Orr scored from 40 feet out with only 22 seconds left to play to give the hard-pressed Boston Bruins a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers Tuesday night in the opening game of the National Hockey League Stanley Cup finals.

Just when it seemed that the game was going into overtime after Philadelphia had overcome a 2-0 deficit, Ken Hodge took the puck off the right boards deep in Flyer ice and laid a perfect pass onto the stick of Orr, who was stationed directly in front of goalie Bernie Parent but 40 feet out. Orr let fly and the puck just whizzed past the bewildered Parent for only his second goal in 11 playoff games.

The Flyers, playing with only one day's rest after a hard semi-final series against New York, missed a superb opportunity to break the tie with just 55 seconds left in the game as Captain Bobby Clarke threaded his way through the Boston defense and gave the puck to Bill Flett. But Flett, after drawing Gilles Gilbert out of the net, had the puck roll off his stick and it missed the net.

Clarke had given Philadelphia a 2-2 tie at 5:32 of the Third Period as he took his own rebound and lifted it over the fallen Gilbert. The Flyers had much the better scoring opportunities the rest of the session before Orr's slapshot ended their hopes for an upset.

A power play goal by Wayne Cashman at 12:08 of the opening period and Gregg Sheppard's 10th goal in 11 Playoff games just 53 seconds later lifted the Bruins into a 2-0 lead and the way they were attacking it looked like it would be an easy win for them.

But Orest Kindrachuk finally put Philadelphia on the scoreboard at 7:47 of the second period when he poked in a rebound of a Joe Watson shot and Clarke then stunned a sellout crowd of 15,003 with his equalizer.

The Bruins thus maintained their hex that has lasted over Philadelphia for seven years. Boston has beaten the Flyers 31 times against only four losses and four ties. Philadelphia's only win on Boston ice came in its very first appearance here November 12, 1967.

The Bruins, who won the Stanley Cup in 1970 and 1972, will have the home ice advantage once again Thursday night for game two.

Defense, hot Havlicek bag Bucks, 96-87

By DAVE BEGEL

MILWAUKEE, Wis. [UPI] — Boston's pressure defense and the hot shooting of John Havlicek, Jo Jo White and Dave Cowens, gave the Celtics a 96-87 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks last night and a 3-2 lead in the National Basketball Association Playoff finals.

The series now switches to Boston, where the Celtics will be trying to wrap up their 12th NBA title Friday night.

The game was close through most of the first half, but Havlicek and White and the Boston defense took charge in the opening minutes of the third quarter as the Celtics built an 18-point lead.

The Celtics led by only 45-44 at halftime, and with 3:29 left in the third quarter the score had gone to 69-51 on two free throws by Havlicek.

Milwaukee came back, scoring the final 10 points of the quarter, but they could pull no closer than seven points the rest of the way.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar continuted his torrid playoff scoring pace with 37 points for the Bucks and guard Oscar Robertson added 23, his highest total in the final playoff series.

But that wasn't enough, Havlicek, playing possibly the finest basketball of his 11-year career, scored 23 for the Celtics, including eight points in Boston's third period surge. Cowens also scored 23 and White, coming through just when things appeared to be getting tight, had 16.

The Boston defense, which has hounded the Bucks through the entire series, forced the Milwaukee team into numerous errors and only a 53 per cent shooting pace in the second quarter kept Milwaukee in the game.

The Bucks had five turnovers and hit only 25 per cent in the first period. In the third quarter, seven more turnovers were costly as Boston built its lead.

Boston, with a win Friday, will end the series in six games and take a $100,000 playoff pot.

Baby Gorillas nipped, 6-5 by Lord Jeff Stickers

Despite a three goal performance by Glenn Hickerson, the JV Lacrosse team lost to Amherst JV, 6-5 on Saturday. The game was close all the way through as shown in the score by periods: 1-1, 3-2, 5-4, and the final, 6-5.

UMass almost tied the game with 1:30 to go on a beautiful fast break as Hickerson hit the post and almost dribbled in.

Larry Heton played an excellent game as he had two goals and an assist. Tim Harney also had a good day in goal for the baby gorillas.

The first Midfield of Heton, Bob Gramham, and Mick Walsh worked well together. Pat Grant of the second Midfield played tough and won a lot of face-offs. Dave Boudreau and Bob Morse played tough games on defense. Morse saved a goal by falling in the crease on an open net shot. Dave Lewis had an assist and hustled all game.

The game was marked by few penalties, showing a tough, clean conflict. UMass did have trouble with ground balls and lack of fire power.

The next game for the JV Lacrosse team, now 0-5, is Thursday at Westfield State at three o'clock.

Gorillas lead Brown in National poll

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. [UPI] — Maryland continued to receive all the first place votes in the U. S. Intercollege Lacrosse Association major college coach's poll released Monday.

The Terrapins, 6-0 on the season and No. 1 in the ratings all year, received the 10 first place votes for a perfect total of 200 points, while Washington & Lee moved into second place ahead of Johns Hopkins, beaten 13-12 by Navy last week.

Virginia slipped from fourth to fifth place after an 18-14 upset loss to the No. 1 ranked small college team, Towson State. Cornell moved into the fourth spot ahead of the Cavaliers with its 9-1 record.

The top 20 with first place votes in parentheses, followed by record and total points:

1. Maryland (10) 6-0, 22; 2. Washington & Lee 12-0, 186; 3. Johns Hopkins 7-2, 175; 4. Cornell 9-1, 170; 5. Virginia 5-3, 163; 6. Virginia 5-3, 163; 7. Hofstra 8-2, 140; 8. Rutgers 7-4, 128; 9. Massachusetts 8-2, 122; 10. Pennsylvania 7-3, 111; 11. Brown 5-3, 97; 12. Princeton 5-6, 90; 13. Army 2-4, 76; 14. Bowling Green 6-0, 71; 15. North Carolina 6-5, 64; 16. Air Force 2-1, 50; 17. Penn State 4-3, 32; 18. Duke 6-6, 31; 19. Yale 4-6, 15; 20. Bucknell 5-4, 10.

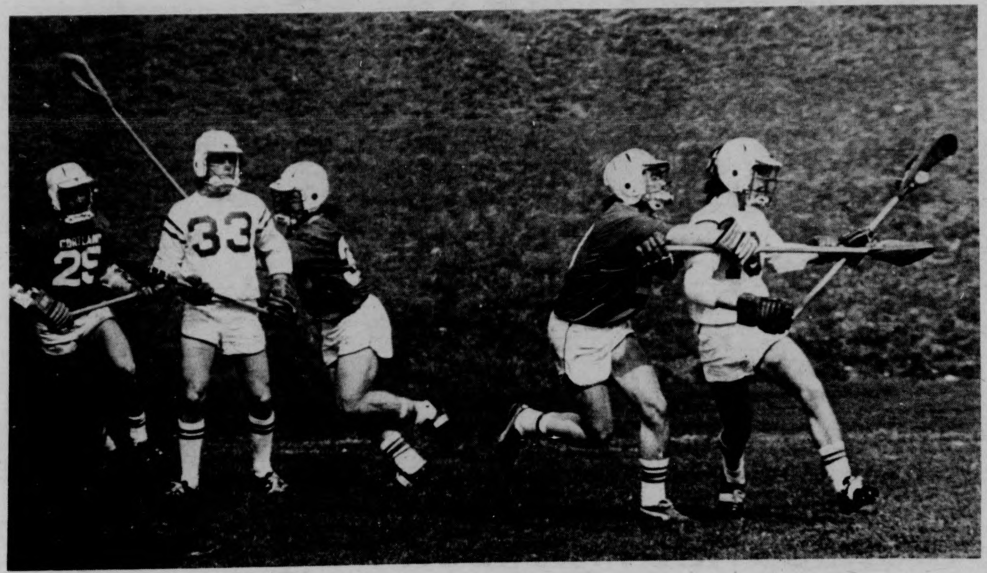
'Crossers bang into Brown



Staff Photo-Dan Smith

"WATCH THAT SLASHING" — says UMass attackman Jeff Spooner as he and teammate, Harry McVey (33) set up for a goal in an earlier game against Cortland State.

The Gorillas challenge Brown University in an important game today at 3 p.m. at Boyden Field.

By MIKE ELLIOTT

This is it - THE GAME. The UMass lacrosse team will take on Brown University, today, in what will be the most important game of the season. The game will be played at Boyden Field at 3 p.m.

The battle with Brown is the peak, the climax, the focal point of the whole season. So much rests on the outcome of this contest. This is a game many people are watching. Garber's Gorillas are ranked second in New England while Brown remains on top. The winner of this game will undoubtedly be the New England Champions.

More importantly, however, UMass is ranked ninth in the nation and trail eighth-ranked Rutgers by only six points in the polls. A win against Brown today could conceivably vault the Gorillas into the number eight spot, which would automatically qualify them for the prestigious NCAA post-season lacrosse tournament. If UMass were to go to this tournament, they would play such lacrosse powerhouses as Maryland, Johns Hopkins, Virginia, Cornell, and Navy.

The two losses against seventh-ranked Hofstra University and Cortland State College were important but the Gorillas have a chance to redeem themselves against Brown today.

Garber's Gorillas are now 8-2 on the season. After the two losses, they went on a scoring spree, winning eight games in a row. In the ten games thus far, they have outscored their opponents by an average 16-6 margin. They have poured in an amazing 159 goals while just giving up 59.

UMass players have assaulted the scoring books during this winning streak. Attackman Harry McVey is the team's leading scorer with 29 goals and 40 assists for a total of 69 points. Meanwhile, Attackman Jeff Spooner and midfielder and tri-captain, Hirsch Seidman hold down the second and third spots, respectively. Spooner has 37 goals and 20 assists while Seidman has scored 19 goals and 4 assists.

Past statistics however, mean nothing now as the Gorillas will have to put out their best performance of the year in order to beat Brown. Brown should prove to be the toughest opponent UMass will face this year. They play some top-flight competition, both in and out of the Ivy League. UMass head coach, Dick Garber, said, "The Ivy League is very strong. It is probably the second best lacrosse league in the country." Game results prove this to be true. Cornell, ranked 4th in the nation and first in the Ivies, blasted 11th-ranked Brown, 13-8. In other Ivy League action, Brown bombed Princeton, 13-7, and Harvard, 21-5, but just barely snuck by Yale by a 8-6 score. In other games Brown smashed Springfield College, 14-3 and the Tobay Lacrosse Club, 14-4, but was bombarded by third-ranked Johns Hopkins, 21-7.

UMass coach Dick Garber scouted Brown when they beat Harvard. He was impressed. Said Coach Garber, "Brown has good speed and stickhandling. They run three midfields, much the same as we do, but they also rotate some of their players at both midfleld and attack. This makes it tough because we have to keep track of whether a man is playing attack or midfield. Brown's goalie is good but not great. He wasn't really tested against Harvard because his team controlled the ball most of the time."

Brown beat UMass, 15-4, last year and also holds a 9-3-1 lead in games against UMass over the years. However, things may be different this year.

Players to watch for Brown are: Bob McCloud, who will be wearing no. 10, and Bob Mueller, wearing no. 12. Both of these players rotate between the attack and midfield positions. "Mueller is an outstanding midfielder," Garber said. "He is fast and has a good hard shot." Other players to watch are: midfielder Dave Wasserman (no. 26), defenseman Dominic Starsia (no. 24), and goalie Dan Campbell (no. 4).

Joyce slam paces sluggers past Fairfield

By MIKE BROPHY

FAIRFIELD, Conn. — Mike Joyce paced the Minutemen to their second victory on the New England circuit as he belted a grand slam home run in the fifth inning and notched another run-producing single in the sixth to propel the Minutemen to a 14-8 victory over Fairfield.

In addition to the rebirth of UMass' hitting attack, they uncorked a 17-hit attack on three Fairfield pitchers, Steve "Doc" Merrill earned himself a win with a clutch six and two-thirds inning relief performance.

"It was a good game for us all around," said Coach Dick Bergquist. "We came back from behind 7-1 and took command of the show and Doc deserves a lot of credit," he continued.

UMass jumped out to an early 1-0 lead in the top of the first as John Seed singled in lead-off batter Pete Backstrom who had walked on five pitches. But then it was Fairfield who seemed to be coming on strong.

They tagged starter Jerry Erb, 0-1 on the year, for seven runs in a nightmarish two and one-third innings that saw Dave Della Volpe send a grand slam homer well over the 375 mark in left center.

Enter the "Doc". One more run would cross the plate and that in the fifth inning. From there on out he was untouchable as he surrendered just three more hits through five innings.

Mike Koperniak came to life after a long slump and stroked a pair of doubles and a single to aid the UMass cause.

But the honors do not belong to any individual. They belong to a team that has been struggling and appears now to be ready to break out of its cocoon.

UMass mounted a four run comeback rally in the fourth when they collected five hits and then ran up four more runs in each of the two frames that followed, building a 13-7 lead that they never relinquished.

So, for a club that has not seen much hitting or pitching, yesterday proved to be a breather in a seemingly long season. Today they will get the chance to tackle one of the Ivy League powerhouses in Dartmouth. The Big Green will be in town for a twinbill that will start at 1 p.m. today.

Trudeau's liberal gov't toppled

OTTAWA [UPI] — Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's 18 months of minority government rule ended last night when his Liberals were defeated on a nonconfidence motion based on the federal budget. A call was issued yesterday for a general election in early July.

It was the first time in Canada's 107-year history a government was toppled by a House of Commons vote rejecting its budget and only the third time a government was ousted on a nonconfidence vote.

Trudeau announced within an hour of his defeat that he would "reluctantly" ask Governor-General Jules Leger yesterday to dissolve Parliament and issue writs for an early July election.

"I am sorry that an election has been forced on us," Trudeau said in a brief television broadcase.

The vote to end the 29th Parliament came as no surprise since both Conservative leader Robert Stanfield and New Democratic Party leader David Lewis had said earlier they would unite in the vote to defeat the budget and topple the minority government.

All 31 New Democrats combined with the 106 Conservatives in the House of Commons voted to defeat the government 137-123. The 15 Social Credit members voted with 108 Liberals. Only one House member, Liberal Keith Hymmen, was absent for the vote.

The House went wild as the final results of the vote were announced. MPs littered the Commons floor

Town meeting backs Nixon impeachment

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

Amherst Town Meeting members last night defeated a motion to request the state legislature to impose a moratorium on the construction of nuclear power plants in the state.

The motion, made by Amherst Board of Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, was debated for approximately 25 minutes and defeated in a standing vote with 104 members voting against and 79 for.

In other action, a motion urging Representative Silvio O. Conte to vote in favor of the impeachment of Richard Nixon was passed by a standing vote of 95 for and 79 against. The passage of this motion was applauded.

Last night's meeting, which was the second part of the annual town meeting, lasted approximately five hours with 44 articles discussed and dismissed or voted on.

Motions voted on included:

—Passage of a motion calling for the town to raise $35,000 to construct new sidewalks and bike paths or combination "bi-walks" on various streets.

—Passage of a motion calling for the town to raise $10,000 or some lesser amount for the use of the Franklin-Hampshire Mental Health and Retardation Area Board. Some funds from this board are given to the UMass Psychological Services Center and the Hampshire Day Care Center.

—Passage of a motion calling for the town to raise $25,000 for the Conservation Commission to be placed in the Conservation Fund.

—Passage of a motion calling for the establishment of a Hitchhiking Safety Study Committee.

Armed man arrested after police scuffle

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

UMass police arrested a man yesterday morning in front of the Student Union building following a brief scuffle and discovered a loaded weapon on him, according to David Johnston, director of Public Safety.

Joel R. Carlinsky, 32, of Holyoke, was arraigned in Northampton District Court yesterday on charges of possession of a deadly weapon (a .38 revolver), having a firearm on campus, carrying an unlicensed firearm, assaulting a police officer ([illegible] counts), assaulting a police officer with a deadly weapon (two counts), and trespassing.

Johnston said that Carlinsky had been picked up by UMass police a year ago for loitering, had been found to have two warrants out for his arrest from Holyoke, and at that time had had a trespass order placed on him. His presence on campus at this time was in direct violation of that order.

Carlinsky had reportedly been sighted last Wednesday in a crowd when Governor Sargent was at UMass to deliver a speech on Nuclear Energy.

"We saw him, but he gave us the slip before we could get to him,"

Quinn and Sarge collide on B'town

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

The Sargent administration and the state Attorney General's office appear to be on a collision course with the Belchertown State School issue — again.

Although the state has granted over $3-million in concessions for major improvements at the institution for the mentally retarded, both sides are willing to trade the blame for the handling of the court suit.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn has credited his office with having achieved the consent decree in which the state is meeting some of the demands made by the Belchertown State School Friends Association two years ago.

"And if there has been any dispute it is because I represent the agencies of state government," Quinn told the Collegian in an interview.

State Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark, who admits too much friction exists between himself and Quinn, regarded the Attorney General's comments as "utter nonsense."

"The Attorney General originally wanted to contest some of the charges against the state; and in fact filed papers without my consultation," he said.

"I thought a lot of charges were true and that the Commonwealth should be enjoining an effort to improve things at the institution — not defend itself against the charges."

Asked if Quinn, an unannounced gubernatorial candidate, was attempting to use the Belchertown issue as political dynamite against Sargent, Goldmark replied "I would have to assume so."

"The silly season is upon us, and the politicians will be making some rather outrageous statements in the coming months."

Assistant Attorney Gen. Terence P. O'Malley said Goldmark's statements "are just not appropriate."

"It's just incredible for him to say that when the Attorney General was taking all sorts of heat after having this thing slapped in his lap," he said.

Goodbye to 1 a.m. pizzas

By SHERMAN BOYSON
MDC Staff

Amherst residents of the streets neighboring Southwest have forced an early closing hour on University Pizza, the Southwest spot for late-night munchies. Richard Piccicuto, the restaurant owner, estimates the midnight closing time he must honor will cut his business by one third.

University Pizza, located on the corner of Sunset Ave. and Fearing Street, used to stay open until 1 a.m. on weekdays, and 3 a.m. on weekends. When Piccicuto took over the place during intercession, he discovered it had a permit to stay open only until midnight. To make it legal, he applied with the Amherst Zoning Board for a permit to remain open later.

The procedure for granting a permit change requires that a notice be published in a local newspaper to inform the town of the hearing. Local residents surrounding the establishment collected 97 signatures on a petition to have the permit denied. The Zoning Board ruled with the residents.

The residents complained that the extra hours would increase noise in a residential area, add to the amount of trash on private property, and increase traffic.

Piccicuto asserts the noise "is coming from the dormitories, not from my place. Closing me down isn't going to stop the noise." He has also hired a man to clean up any trash his customers might leave.

As for increasing traffic, Piccicuto feels the reverse will happen. "Most of my customers are walk-ins," he stated. "They come in from Southwest. If they have to go

A book of clowns

By BILL GONET
MDC Staff

All of society can be subdivided into three major subgroups: baseball fans, non-fans, and baseball fanatics.

Bill Heward, a doctoral candidate at the UMass School of Education, is a baseball fanatic. Because of his love of the game, Bill has spent the last three summers on the road with one of the last great barnstorming baseball teams, the Indianapolis Clowns. In collaboration with Dimitri Gat, from the UMass English Department, Heward has written a book about his experiences with the Clowns entitled Some Call Them Clowns, soon to be released this summer by Thomas Y. Crowell and Co.

According to Heward the Clowns are the vestiges of a bygone era who've dropped into oblivion in the face of "overwhelming competition for the entertainment dollar" generated by the giants of the organized sports industry. Elaborating, collaborator Gat said, "the Clowns organization is a 1930's business being run in the 1970's.

Using the same format as the Harlem Globetrotters, the Clowns, in 1929, started as the Miami Clowns, an all black ball club which mixed burlesque routines with talented ballplaying. In the 30's, now franchised in Cincinnati, they joined the Negro American League. With Jackie Robinson's breaking into the major leagues in the early 50's, segregated baseball came to an end and with it the Negro American League.

At this point, managed and owned by flamboyant baseball entrepreneur, Ed Hamman, former business manager of the Harlem Globetrotters who still manages and owns the Clowns today, the clowns returned to the burlesque baseball circuit.

Barnstorming through rural America from Musketine, Iowa to Pomonkey Maryland, the Clowns challenge local talent to seven inning games. Despite the fact that the locals often scour the countryside for ringers, their efforts are usually futile. For during the game they are confronted by a dazzling display of baseball wizardry.

After the Clowns' 33 inch midget defies the hometown favorite at the mound to find the strike zone, perenial shortstop, Birmingham Sam fields grounders from a lawn chair, throwing with perfect accuracy to his one-armed teamate at first base. Meanwhile the rest of the Clowns, keep the crowd in a state of near hysteria with constant and outrageous umpire - baiting. Following the game is a pantomime infield practice without a ball set to music.

After reviewing the book one critic called the Clowns "the M.A.S.H. squad of baseball." However, the book is far more than a series of funny anecdotes.

When asked why he wrote the book, Heward replied "Most sport books are about super-stars who've made it. This book is about those who didn't and who play with the clowns in order to grab at one last chance for big-league exposure."

However, its not an utterly impossible dream that motivates the Clowns' rookies.

Hank Aaron is only one of many graduates from the Clowns' organization. Among others are Paul Casanova, Hal King, and Choo Choo Coleman.

Besides the rookies looking for a chance to be spotted by a big-league scout and the clowns and midgets who would be unemployed otherwise, the Clowns attract others who are solely driven by a love of the game. As Heward says, "every spring my feet start to itch, and the only way to soothe that itch is to play ball everyday.

Dero Austin, 31-inch midget takes his turn at the plate. A new book by UMass School of Education doctoral candidate Bill Heward called Some Call Them Clowns is all about these remarkable people.

Although he readily admits that in the back of his mind is the ever-present dream of making it to the majors, he points out that he main reason for playing with the Clowns is that they are one of the few clubs left where a talented baseball nut can play every day. For, as a result of competition from television, the number of minor leagues has decreased from 60 to 17.

Besides the opportunity to play ball everyday, Heward cited other redeeming features of his annual cross-country treks with the Clowns.

First, the team is a big melting pot which draws people from a broad cross-section of backgrounds: small town country boys, bit city dwellers, old-timers in their late forties, rookies right out of college, black and white. Likewise the itinerary of the Clowns takes its players into the isolated backwaters of rural America where the players get to experience a different tempo of life. Moreover, a berth on the Clowns offers the unforgettable experience of working with the Clown's manager and owner, Ed Hamman, who is motivated by the same case of itchy feet which strikes author Bill Heward each summer.

Racial, sexual oppressions dramatized

By DENNY MATTEAU

Some human development counselors in the Northeast dorm area got together a few weeks ago and began putting together a program to raise area residents' awareness of racial and sexual oppression. They staged their debut last night, in Knowlton and Dwight houses. They'll be performing again Thursday, at 6, in Crabtree house.

The program they developed is a four act play, each act presenting a different scene involving common assumptions about women or black people. After the play, which itself is call "Cope" for "Combatting Oppression (Through) Peer Education", the audience is asked to express some opinions about what went on, like, "Was it true to life?"

The first scene takes place in an office: a woman sits at a desk typing, and two male coworkers begin discussing her looks. Just as one of the men suggests she might be a good pick-up, another woman enters the room. The first women looks up and says "I'll be done in a few minutes. I'll meet you for lunch, ok?"

The second woman answers "O.K.", kisses her, and says "I love ya." The two men look at each other, aghast.

After all the skits are done, and the discussion starts, some surprises can happen. In Knowlton, a guy didn't realize that the first skit referred to the women's being gay. That inspired a discussion of social attitudes about simple expressions of love. Why should "I love you" be implicitly sexual? And when it is, why should it be shocking?

Another skit dealt with the kind of questions and comments that can be expected to happen in a dorm which is just becoming integrated. "Hey, I didn't know you guys had to comb that hair!" says a white fellow to a black in the washroom. Audience reaction to that skit was mixed. In Knowlton, several white women admitted to have made similar comments. In Dwight, a white woman said she couldn't imagine anyone being so obtuse.

The people doing the skits now are Sally Majewski, Dwight head of residence, Bob Winfield, a School of Ed doctoral candidate, Pam Cushman, Leach counselor, Bob Fowler, assistant area director, Ann Kelleher, future Crabtree counselor, Bill Foster, future Dwight counselor and Drew Ryan, Hamlin counselor. The group welcomes membership from anyone, and is willing to help any other group which would like to benefit from this type of program. Bob Fowler said C.O.P.E. hopes to have an impact at freshmen orientation, since more dorms will be integrated next year.

Activities tax ...going up!

By MIKE HENAULT
MDC Staff

The student activities tax will be eight dollars and seventy-five cents more than it was last year, according to student senate treasurer Paul Hamel. The tax hike will be inevitable, Hamel claims, if the current level of budget spending continues.

In actual figures that will mean that the student senate will be $154,000.00 in the red.

The increase is in addition to the $3.50 increase scheduled to go to area governments. That increases combined with the campus center fee could reach an unprecedented $125.00 per student for student activity related expenses.

"There'll be no deficit spending", Hamel said. At the present a number of student senators are working on a plan which would avoid some of the extensive increases predicated by the senate's action. Sens. Birnbaum, Muldoon and Carter have drawn an alternative program for cutting the whopping increase.

Under their plan all budgets would be slashed across the board. First, by a percentage slash in a respective organizations budget increase over last year, secondly by chopping RSO funding by their priority rating.

Under the "Birnbaum Plan" any budget increases will automatically be dropped. In a second round of reductions all clubs will have their student activities income cut by their pre-arranged priority rating. Groups in priority would be cut by 25 per cent.

Organizations like the Collegian would loose up to $3,000.00 of their budget. The student bussing service could be cut as much as $10,000 which could be translated to mean that next year their will be no Belchertown route and possibly a cut in the already meagre South Amherst run.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

The office of the DAILY COLLEGIAN is on the second floor of the Student Union on the campus of the University of Massachusetts, zip code 01002. Telephones: 545-2550 (news); 545-0344 (sports); 545-0731 (business).

Second class postage is paid in Amherst and additional mailing in Ware, Mass. 01082. THE DAILY COLLEGIAN publishes Monday through Friday during the academic year, except during vacation, exam periods or holidays. Accepted for mailing under the authority of an act of March 8, 1879; as amended by an act of June 11, 1943. Subscription rates are $6.00 per semester or $10.00 per year.

Want to park?

Registration materials for next year's parking system are now ready. Persons presently registered in the system will receive a registration packet by campus mail. Those who did not furnish a valid campus address when applying for parking last year will be able to pick up the forms at the Parking Office in Hampshire House. If you have not received a packet by May 1, assume that it was not mailed.

Persons presently in the system have the options of renewing their present assignments (if the assignment was received by March 15) or applying for a change to another lot. The deadline for exercising the renewal option is May 15. A continuation of the present assignment for all renewals received by that date. Persons presently in the system who apply for a change (in the assignment they held on March 15) will be given priority over new entrants into the system until May 15; after that date, all applicants will be considered as new.

Persons with unpaid parking fees for the current year, and persons who have defaulted on court summons' covering parking tickets, will not be issued registration materials until the amount owed has been paid.

Questions should be directed to the Parking Office, 103 Hampshire House. Tel. 545-0065.

Staff bash!

Ladies, gentlemen, Collegian staffers:

Plans for the zowee!! socko!! anacanapooner!!! Printers' bash have been finalized and the bus will be ready to leave from the bus circle in front of the Campus Center at 6:30 tonight.

The printer has promised heaps of food, bread, wine, and beer for all MDC do-bees, and has hinted that dancing persons may be forthcoming (don't count on it, though).

If you have signed up, make sure you're at the office by 6:30.

That's TONIGHT.

WUMV to show special on gubernatorial race

UMass video tape station WUMV will present a first in campus media next week with its "Telopolitics" special on "The 1974 Massachusetts Gubernatorial Race."

Director Chris Sophinos said the station is currently negotiating arrangements for the one-hour program to be shown in the campus center before making it available to various cable TV stations throughout Western Massachusetts.

The show is a compilation of half-hour press conferences with the candidates for Governor pertaining to some of the important issues in November's election.

The highlights include the candidates' views on human services, education and public disclosure of personal finances and campaign expenditures.

Sophinos said the production has received favorable review from those who have reviewed it and is "a very good example of the quality shows we can produce if provided with adquate equipment."

According to Sophinos, WUMV has been operating on a "shoe-string budget" for the past few years and student senate leaders are only now beginning to recognize the potential for cable tv.

"Student video vis a vis WUMV has been kept down on this campus — mainly because there exists no outlet for exhibition," he said.

"Because cable tv will be a major force within the next few years here in Amherst, it is of paramount importance that UMass students maintain a video facility which will allow them access to production equipment — thereby opening the lines of communication in the community."

Sophinos said he intends to have the "Telepolitics" production reviewed by student senate leaders in order to convince them to vote favorably on a proposal which would expand the video station's exposure.

Several senators have suggested that a system of permanent monitors be installed throughout the campus center, replacing the temporary video-side wall.

Such a plan, if implemented, would place WUMV on the same plateau with the Collegian and WMUA, Sophinos said.

Nestled in the woods, Sylvan offers much in the way of academics, social functions and a thriving area newspaper.

It's a long way to Sylvan but definitely worth it

By SAMUEL HASSAN
MDC Staff

This is the final of a four part series on the Sylvan Residential Area at UMass.

If you walk up to Sylvan this week-end for the Arts and crafts Festival, you'll probably find it a fairly long walk from campus, and even longer from Southwest.

There's only one way bus service down the hill from Sylvan, and its no wonder so many residents have bicycles. Of course bicycles must be tended to occasionally, thus there is a bicycle workshop in Brown House, adjoining the ceramics room.

Down the hall from these rooms is an apartment type setup in which is located a photo lab. Dozens of photographers use the lab for developing, and in the future it is hoped photos will be added to the Parchment, Sylvan's weekly.

In a room next to the photo lab several people have started a womens center. The center has just recently opened, and of late has been sponsoring films and discussion groups. Already off the ground, the womens center should become a productive addition to the Sylvan community.

Any addition is encouraged, but while there is a solid academic program, a subshop, newspaper, radio station, and recreational facilities, Sylvan is not a "Residential College."

The Sylvan Student Affairs office, around which everything in Sylvan is centered, has strived to maintain a service operation, receptive to students' everchanging personal needs.

The office is located on the ground floor of Cashin, and is a warm, comfortable place for students to seek an answer to any problem that may arise. The staff members know their limitations, and have referral professionals to deal with problems out of their realm.

One service offered through the Student Affairs Office (S.A.O.) is academic counseling. This service is run to coincide with academic counseling week at the University, but is open to students on a year round basis.

Another service offered is intensive personal counseling done by Frank Culley, a staff member.

Tom Trottman, who has his doctorate in Education, is Sylvan's Area Director, and for the most part is involved with Sylvan's ties to the Administration (Whitmore). His assistant Ken Burnham, who has a Masters in Education, handles more of the domestic affairs.

Speaking about services performed by the Student Affairs Office, Burnham said, "We're straight red tape cutters."

To borrow from the S.A.O. Goals and Objectives Report of October 26, 1973: "This office endeavors to capsulate the mass of information and services scattered throughout this mega-academic complex into one small place, centrally located for the 1400 residents of Sylvan."

Anyone who has utilized the S.A.O. knows of the success they've had in doing so.

The Sylvan Area Government President Mark Spengler, vice president Mike Narkewicz, recording secreatry Lynn Stockford, treasurer Mike McLure, works with the S.A.O. and the individual house governments to organize Sylvan.

For two years the Area Government has had something Southwest has just recently initiated, a finance committee, consisting of the three house treasurers, Area Director and assistant, business manager and area treasurer. The committee manages Sylvan's $36,000 budget.

The Area Government holds their meeting on Sunday nights at 7:00 p.m. in the Area Conference Room. Anyone can attend, and during the recent selections of Heads of Residence, a tremendous amount of student input was utilized in making the decisions. Heads of Residence have been chosen for Bown and McNamara, but the selections will not be made public until next week.

One of the greatest difficulties facing any form of student government organization is in getting people to work with them.

An attempt at maintaining student awareness of upcoming and ongoing events in Sylvan is made through the areas weekly newspaper, the Parchment.

The first issue of the Parchment came out on November 22, 1971, making it the oldest existing residential area publication, coming ironically from the newest area on campus.

Two former Chasin residents Betsy Clinch and Bob Sylvia started the paper, and it has continued since, printing most every week the news, events and opinions in Sylvan.

The Parchment is an effective answer to the communications problem. It has been used by residents and staffers alike, and despite criticism from other media on campus, the Parchment continues to be juvenile journalism at its best.

There are some nice people around campus, and one of them is dining commons employee Gerry Baldassoro, pictured on right.

Watery cole slaw and nice people

By LORI ANN YESLOW
MDC Special

There we were sitting at a table facing Cance, tapping our feet in time to the trumpet version of "White Christmas", trying to look happy while also shoveling down watery cole slaw.

When a man came over to our table and started talking to Laura, saying things like, "Oo don't look at me that way. you send me." Now Laura's no fool and she started laughing. I became confused and gazed down at my stew almost hoping something would crawl out of it, to break the monotony.

My mother warned me about college life, wild men, and fast words, but I never thought the wild men would consist of a dining commons employee, or the fast words: "You send me." I don't even know how to send someone.

Gerry Baldassoro is the dining commons employee I speak of. To first meet him, you'd think he is the classic dirty old man just hanging around the dining commons. But if you researched it, you'd find his title is supervisor of Berkshire Commons and his interest is people.

In September when lost freshmen are dumped by the thousands into UMass, and spend their first week eating alone it's good to know there's someone that isn't too busy to befriend people and help with the transition. It isn't unusual to find him in the middle of a table full of students talking, and in a place as large, and at times, as scary as Southwest, it's nice to hear his stories. His life is people and parts of his memories are letters from everyone from students doing graduate work at Cornell to the chancellor.

Within the near future Gerry will be retiring.

"I'd like to spend some time with my wife and work with disabled children at Sunset Village.", he said.

In a place as overloaded as UMass, and so often accused of being a factory, its going to be sad to say goodbye to someone who make so many people happy.

Harrington speaks tonight

Attorney Edward Harrington of Needham, an announced Democratic candidate for the office of Massachusetts Attorney General, will be the featured speaker at this week's meeting of the Project Ten Political Campaigns Seminar on the University of Massachusetts campus.

Harrington will address the seminar at 7:00 p.m. Thursday in Pierpont Hall in the University's Southwest Residential Complex.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

At 8:00 p.m. Thursday, Harrington will speak at the monthly meeting of the Amherst Democratic Town Committee in Town Hall.

Harrington is the former head of the New England strike force against organized crime.

Watergate panel to release report

Committee says Mitchell planned Watergate

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The proposed final report of the Senate Watergate committee says the "weight of the evidence" shows that former Attorney General John N. Mitchell approved plans that led to the 1972 Watergate break-in, informed sources said yesterday.

The draft, which was distributed to the seven committee members Tuesday night, also said:

–There is no evidence to support President Nixon's claim that he withdrew his approval of a 1970 domestic intelligence-gathering plan.

–It found it difficult to accept that former White House aide John D. Ehrlichman did not approve the 1971 break-in at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

–That evidence tends to confirm that money paid to Watergate defendants was hush money and not money for lawyers' fees, indicating possible obstruction of justice.

"The committee finds that the weight of the evidence tends to establish that Mitchell did approve the Watergate conspirator G. Gordon Liddy intelligence plan with a $250,000 budget in Key Biscayne, in March, 1972," it said.

Nison said in his lengthy May 22 "white paper" that he approved the domestic intelligence-gathering plan, authored by White House aide Tom Huston, in June, 1970, but withdrew his approval five days later because of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's opposition to it.

But the committee draft, which still could be changed before the final form is made public May 28, disagreed.

"The committee finds no evidence to support the President's claim ... that he withdrew his approval of the Huston recommendation," it said.

The committee also said it "finds no legal justification for the Ellsberg break-in on national security grounds" and it found it "difficult to accept" that the break-in was not carried out without Ehrlichman's authorization.

Ehrlichman, who testified before the committee last summer that he found out about the break-in after the fact, is under indictment for what part he played in it.

VIEWING RESTRICTED TO APA MEMBERS ONLY

Doctors gather shoulder-to-shoulder Monday watching an American Psychiatric Association meeting exhibit which features a color film showing explicit scenes of a nude couple in the act of love. Easily the most popular exhibit at the meeting, the film is called therapeutic audio-visual material for professionals. Complete with sound track giving a clinical analysis of what's happening, the films are for sale to professional groups.

Judiciary counsel wants more tapes

WASHINGTIN [UPI] – Special counsel John M. Doar of the House Judiciary Committee said yesterday the White House had submitted insufficient impeachment evidence and the committee should issue another subpoena for more.

On the eve of committee hearings into whether there are grounds to impeach President Nixon, Doar responded to a White House vow Tuesday not to submit any more Watergate materials to either the Judiciary Committee or special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski.

Nixon's Watergate lawyer, James D. St. Clair, said both investigations had plenty of evidence to determine Nixon's guilt or innocence.

While Doar said he favored issuing a second subpoena for more White House materials, Committee Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., said the committee would not vote on issuing another subpoena when it begins closed hearings at 1 p.m. EDT today. But he did not rule out the possibliity of such a vote when the committee meets again next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Rodino told a news conference yesterday that these first four meetings, closed to the public and news media, would deal with the Watergate scandal. Asked if his special Watergate staff of 150 had all the materials it needed, Rodino replied: "Definitely not."

The first subpoena for 42 tape recordings of presidential conversations was approved on a 33-3 vote. When Nixon responded by supplying transcripts of the tapes instead, the committee voted 20 to 18 to declare that Nixon failed to comply with terms of the subpoena.

Rep. Lawrence Hogan, R-Md., usually a strong defender of Nixon, said Wednesday he would approve of issuing a second subpoena.

White House priest defends morality of President

WASHINGTON [UPI]– A White House-employed priest said yesterday accusations of immorality against President Nixon are "erroneous, unjust and contain elements of hypocrisy."

The Jesuit priest, Dr. John McLaughlin, apparently directed his remarks at such congressional and religious critics as Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott and Rabbi Alexander M. Schindler, president of the American Hebrew Congregations.

Schindler said Nixon's response to Watergate, as reflected in the transcripts of his Watergate conversations released last week, "reeks with the stench of moral decay" and Scott described it as an "immoral performance."

McLaughlin, who has served as a presidential adviser and spokesman for more than two years, told a news conference that in the Biblical view of St. Paul morality is charity and Nixon is a moral man.

Schindler criticized Nixon particularly for his frequent use of profanity, most of it censored in the transcripts with the phrase "expletive deleted."

He said it is "not the language of the presidency but the language of the gutter" and "reeks with the stench of moral decay."

Some progress in Syria

Kissinger hands Israeli proposal to Assad

TEL AVIV [AP] – American officials said yesterday a disengagement pact between Syria and Israel on the Golan Heights was now "a little more likely."

They spoke as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger shuttled back to Isreal from four hours of secret talks with Syrian officials in Damascus.

"Some progress was made but no agreement was reached, and therefore the talks are continuing," Kissinger said as he left Damascus airport.

The statement allayed Israeli apprehensions that Syrian President Hafez Assad might flatly reject an Israeli truce offer and collapse Kissinger's efforts to end the fighting on the Golan front, now in its 58th straight day.

All details of the day's maneuvering were kept from newsmen accompanying Kissinger. They were told that the talks had now reached a critical stage and information would be tightly guarded.

Kissinger said he would return to Syria later this week to continue the talks. He was also scheduled to visit Saudi Arabia and Cairo to keep his line open to other Arab capitals.

The Israeli plan Kissinger took to Damascus included an offer to yield some territory taken during the 1967 war.

Despite the concession, U. S. officials said Kissinger plans to continue his disengagement diplomacy into next week. This suggests he expects to succeed in separating the opposing armies on the Golan Heights – but not without considerable haggling.

Israeli sources let it be known in Jerusalem that Kissinger was authorized to negotiate withdrawal from at least the eastern part of Kuneitra, a provincial capital and a primary Syrian objective, in exchange for continued Israeli control of three strategic hills around the abandoned city.

A buffer zone manned by U. N. forces would control eastern Kuneitra, but Syrian civilians would be permitted to return there.

...and the world

Brandt vigorously denies he was open to blackmail

BONN [UPI] – Former Chancellor Willy Brandt, angrily lashing out at "grotesque" charges surrounding his dramatic resignation, denied yesterday that a Communist spy had learned embarrassing personal details that opened him to blackmail.

But Brandt later admitted that he made a mistake by giving the spy access to top secret government documents during a summer vacation in Norway last year.

The newspaper Bild said one of the documents was a secret letter from President Nixon dealing with the future of the Atlantic alliance.

Brandt's outburst was provoked by opposition newspaper reports that he may have quit Tuesday because he feared the spy had forwarded embarrassing details of his private life to his Communist bosses and opened Brandt to possible blackmail.

"Whatever else may be written about the reasons for my decision, it is and it will remain grotesque to believe a Federal Chancellor could become blackmailable," Brandt said. "I at least am not."

In announcing his resignation, Brandt accepted full responsibility for "negligence" in allowing East German spy Guenther Guillaume on his staff. Guillaume admitted his role last week.

news roundup

Wallace, Glenn win

United Press International

Voters in Ohio and Alabama delivered a pair of turnabouts in primary elections Tuesday. A one-time national hero succeeded as a political underdog and the country's bestknown racial politican was victorious with black support.

John Glenn Jr., the first American to orbit the earth in 1962, took the Ohio Democratic senatorial nomination away from incumbent Howard M. Metzenbaum by more than 100,000 votes. Glenn had to overcome a loser image from two previous defeats and the opposition of both state Democratic leaders and organized labor.

Gov. George C. Wallace, who rocketed to prominence in 1963 when he "stood in the schoolhouse door" to try to block integration at the University of Alabama, as expected won renomination for a third term with a landslide plurality of 66 per cent - but this time with measurable black support.

Simon sworn in WASHINGTON [AP] – William E. Simon took office yesterday as President Nixon's fourth Treasury secretary and called for a new political will to fight rising inflation.

Simon's move into the top Treasury spot is unlikely to result in any major shifts in U.S. economic policy since he has said he basically supports the policies followed by Shultz favoring restrained government spending.

He also is on record against a tax cut and rigid wage and price controls.

Strike hits India

NEW DELHI [UPI] – Panic buying broke out in India's largest cities yesterday as striking railway workers, angered by the arrest of their leader and 6,000 other unionists, demonstrated their power to cripple the nation's already limping economy.

Reports from across the country on the effectiveness of the strike were mixed, with trains reported running normally under heavy police escort in the eastern sectors but grinding to a halt in much of the south, west and north.

By early afternoon it was apparent that the nation's two largest cities, Bombay and Madras, had been virtually paralyzed on the first day of the strike.

Town meeting votes against nuclear power watchdogging

—Passage of motion calling for a regulatory by-law on political signs.

—Passage of a motion authorizing the Board of Selectman to submit a petition to the General Court for legislation permitting the town to explore for a water supply within the town of Hadley. Half of the town's short water supply is used by UMass.

—Defeat of a motion calling for the establishment of a new permanent Bikeways Committee.

—Defeat of a motion which included a call for the legalization of "streaking", defined as "public nudity while running at large for the purpose of free expression or recreation."

—Defeat of a motion calling for a by-law concerning the possession of marijuana. The suggested by-law read, "Any person, being 18 years or over, who shall possess or sell without profit not more than one ounce of marijuana shall be subject to a civil fine of not more than $25."

Sarge, Quinn face off on Belchertown issue

"I think one of the problems was that Secretary Goldmark wanted to make legal decisions."

"But the single largest factor holding up the Belchertown suit was the clash between what the program people considered desirable and what the budget people could come up with."

Regarding consultation with Quinn's office on the case of Russell Daniels, the former Belchertown State School resident serving a life sentence in Norfolk Prison on a murder conviction, Goldmark said he saw no need of it because of "past experiences" with the Attorney General's office.

O'Malley contended "It's beyond me how Mr. Goldmark can make a statement like that. He's never consulted this office on anything I know of."

Charges presented against SW students

By FRAN BROCK
MDC Special

In the last set of charges presented by the Southwest Assembly against Southwest residents, one student pleaded guilty and was given one semester of probation, three were found guilty without sanction, and cases were dropped against two defendents on the grounds that they knew who did drop water from their window and who stood on their window ledge.

The prosecution agreed that if the residents could find, or would reveal the persons who did commit the acts which violated the Southwest Assembly's Endangering Act, the responsibility and charge would not rest on the room's residents. If no one would admit to the crime, then, according to the Act, the resident is responsible for his-her room.

"Charges will be brought against those who did commit the acts," the prosecution said.

The Student Court did decide to examine the Assembly's Act. The judges, the prosecution and the defense lawyers plan to meet and discuss necessary changes in the Act. They would then submit their recommendations to the Assembly.

But until such time that the Assembly changes the Act, the court has recognized it as law by ruling in favor of it.

Pickets continue at A & P markets

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Special

A&P, the second largest chain supermarket in this country, is the only major chain store in this area that has not supported the United Farm Workers boycott and that continues to sell non-UFW produce. A&P's all over New England have been picketed for months in support of the national boycott against the chain.

Last Monday A&P officials met with UFW representatives to negotiate a possible agreement concerning grape and lettuce sales. A&P officials admitted that the pressure of the New England boycott had forced them to reevaluate their position concerning the boycott. No agreement was reached at the meeting, however another session has been scheduled for next week. A&P is now considering to what extent they will comply with the boycott.

To show support of the striking farmworkers and opposition to A&P, the UFW will picket A&P on Rte. 5 in Northampton Thursday and Friday nights. On Saturday, May 11, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. there will be a mass picket at the same store. The mass picket is designed to express large-scale, popular support of the boycott. It is particularly important, this weekend, in view of the critical state of the A&P negotiations.

What's the story?

By EDIE WIEDER
MDC Special

WHAT'S THE STORY? is a regular feature in the Collegian . If there's something bugging you and the cause of the problem is even remotely related to the University system, I can help you. Just record your question or gripe on the back of a Bazooka bubble gum wrapper or any other available piece of scrap paper and drop it in the WHAT'S THE STORY? wall box located at the entrance to the University Store or just deliver it to the Ombudsman's Office [919 Campus Center].

Q. Why is it that Spring Day isn't the way it used to be? I talked with some people who attended UMass thirty years ago. On their Spring Day, the chapel bells would ring and classes would be called off. Why couldn't we have an all-day picnic in the field across from Southwest and really call classes off? Sure the paper said there were no classes yesterday, but try telling my Psych professor that.

A. Ah, for the good old days when UMass was a college whose campus could be traversed from end to end in five minutes and total student enrollment was 1,021. I talked to retired Professor Harold Cary about Spring Day during the 30's and you're right--it was radically different than it is today. Spring Day used to be a University-sponsored and sanctioned event in which both students and faculty took a day's vacation from academic drudgery and turned out in large numbers to feast on lunches provided by the dining commons and play softball by the Campus Pond. Classes were officially cancelled for the day.

Spring Day, as well as other similar frivolities, lost its appeal with the advent of WWII. Even when all war-time activities were concluded, no one thought to resume the celebration of this event. Twenty years later, during the early 60's, a member of Beta Chi, the University Veterans' fraternity, took it upon himself to reactivate interest in Spring Day. At this point Spring Day became no longer an official University holiday but rather a student-conceived act of rebellion against the University. This day was set aside to generally raise hell, drink oneself into oblivion, and cut classes; all done in the name of Spring.

Beta Chi facilitated acceptance of the event by advertising in the Collegian that classes were called off for the day. Let's face it--how many students know that any schnook could write such an ad and get it printed? Apparently not too many, for each year around 2,000-3,000 enthusiasts cut classes and went their way to the stadium hoping to share a hotdog, a can of beer, or a joint with someone. No wonder your Psych professor doesn't understand.

As for the matter of the event's location, I could venture a guess that the University administration wants the activities as far away from the dormitories as is possible, as long as they are on-campus. Before 1970, Spring Day was held in various off-campus spots such as the Rifle Range and Cranberry Pond. A number of unpleasant incidents were associated with Spring Day in the 60's involving injuries which were the result of drunken driving, and at one point the University fiercely opposed the event. In 1970, a compromise was reached which appropriated the field near the Stadium as the site to be used in hopes that past dangers would be eliminated.

In effect, the University acknowledges the holiday but does not sanction it. Consequently, classes are not officially canceled and teachers are expected to teach.

Drop me a line soon!

Campus Comments

Text by E. Patrick McQuaid

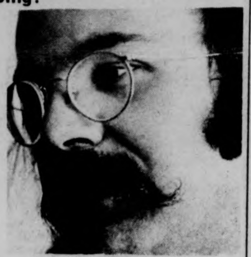
Racism and counter-racism seems to be an issue of paramount concern erupting on campuses across the nation. At the University of Connecticut Profs. William Laughlin and Benson E. Ginsburg have been charged by minority-group and political organizations with supporting racism through their genetic research in the Anthropology department.

The Question: Do you think that genetic research of this kind should be halted if offensive to any minority, political, or religious grouping?

Bob Pooler, Zoology major, Puffton Village, 21, junior, hometown Cape Cod: Well, I think that being a science major that Genetic research should be continued. Things will not be found out any other way if it's genetically connected. I don't agree with interbreeding of the different races just for an experiment or anything like that. It's all so intertwined that it's impossible to have one race either superior or inferior to another. If you had isolated cases, yes, but I don't believe there are any.



Natashia Phelps, History major, Sunderland, 30, Graduate Student from New York City: Science has accomplished some good things and I think research should be continued. As far as saying that one race is superior to another, well that's ridiculous. Environment has a lot to do with it as much as genetics. I used to teach school and I could plainly see that. Some of these experiments are manipulating people like plants. I imagine that if they put two intelligent people together they's get an intelligent offspring but I don't know how good that would be.

Tony Pendleton, Special Education major, Orchard Hill, 20, Freshman, Haverhill, Mass: What can you gain by it? Everyone has different backgrounds, you can't learn anything by that. Maybe distinct differences can show something, but what about a mullato. Is he half better than the average minority and half less than the average white? Anything's possible, look at History. Breeding and all, I suppose it could happen, but what's to be gained?

Margaret Valdario, Everywomen's Center Sec., Computer Sciences major, Northeast, 21, junior, Medford, Mass: I think that someone else should come into the picture and see if there's anything valid in genetic research. I feel there is enough prejudice and discrimination in this country against people. A conclusion that one race is superior to another does not help the situation. I feel that this should be discontinued and let nature follow its course, not scientific interference.

Dennis Desmond, Anthropology major, Federal St., Belchertown, 21, Weymouth, Mass: I don't think it should be continued because I just have the impression that it doesn't do any good. If you want to select out for traits, there are so many of them, so many people carry these other different genes, that you didn't want. I think that something like clonning is possible. They've clonned a frog in England next they'll clone a human in America.

James Walker, Political Sciences, Central, 19, Freshman, Air Force Cadet, Roxbury, Mass: I don't like the way the research is done, because it does sound racist to me. Any txpe of book on genetics appears racist. It hasn't any validity, it keeps racism flowing. Breeding superior races sounds rather far fetched and impossible. I think it's useless for that. There most definitely is a need for genetic research to cure diseases and all, but not to put down any races. I can't see any test tube creations. It would be a modern day Frankenstein, an accident.

Letters to the editor

Thanks from Boltwood-B'town

To The Editor:

On April 16, the Boltwood Project sponsored the Emmett Kelly Jr. Circus on campus for the benefit of the residents at Belchertown State School. Admission was paid for the residents to attend by donations from local merchants and businesses. We would especially like to thank the Blue Wall bartenders who contributed all their tips on Thursday April 11. Their generous donations are sincerely appreciated.

Thanks from Randolph Bromery

To The Editor:

I would like to express my thanks to the many students who volunteered their time to take part in the recent Student Phonothon. Such an effort required a great amount of work and I was pleased to see the number of students who turned out to help. To my knowledge this was one of the first attempts anywhere at a student run phonothon. Personal contact by phone is one of the most effective ways of encouraging our alimni to actively support the University. To meet the increasing demand for such things as scholarship aid and funds for the acquisition of books for the library, we need their generous help.

I think this was also a step toward greater cooperation between students and alumni. We are just beginning to involve some of our alumni in working with students in career planning and counseling. I think it is important to continue to foster this kind of cooperative spirit.

By getting our students involved in alumni activities while they are here at the University, they will have a better understanding of how they can continue to be a part of the University community after they have graduated. This first student phonothon was a great success thanks to the efforts of the Alumni Office staff and all the students who participated.

To The Editor:

I knew I'd end up writing a letter about Fred Weiss sooner or later. In the past I have been critical of certain people from the Collegian staff. But even an arrogant person like myself can be reached with good common sense. His editorial "No room left for hate" is just the latest in a long series of brilliant commentaries. My intent is not to boost your ego, Fred. This is a humble thanks for a job well done.

Women back Drum budget

To The Editor:

Recently Bobby Daniels has found through his research that: "The more people know about other people's differences and commonalities the more acceptance we will have."

This is the basis for the Student Senate Womens Committee's support for the frequent publication of Drum, the only Third World literary magazine on campus. Drum presents a black perspective and it addresses concerns of particular interest to the Third World community. We feel the imperative need for such a magazine in order to effectively operate with this goal in mind. A single issue could only be regarded as a token stab at the complex dilema presented by the many repressive attitudes prevalent at UMass. This illustrates the rational behind the committment of Womens Committee to adequate funding of Third World organizations.

Store has no Indian Lit.

To The Editor:

I am most deeply distressed about the new University Store policy of excising from your inventory available to faculty, students, and townspeople the supply of Native American literature. Meager and insufficient as it was in the past, your inventory did indeed serve a basic purpose: of acquainting, in whatever small and primal fashion, the Anglo-American reader with the culture of the Native American.

Please bring this to the attention of your superior immediately.

We have had our Wounded Knees, our Trails of Tears, our Alcatrazs. I am only one-fourth blood-Cherokee, because of my father's father, but I am also an educated man and sad because evidently there exist so few educated people, viz., those who have so flagrantly abused, once more, the Native American's basic right to be recognized in so petty a cultural operation as the University Store is now becoming.

Thank you for your time. I hope the situation will somehow improve before it deepens into its evident present condition.

For now, I am

C.B. Theatre: cons need help

To The Editor:

After attending the Cell Block Theatre last Saturday night I realized how unaware I am to problems related to prison reform. The ex-cons in this theatre group are some of the lucky ones — they managed to mentally survive being in prison and are now doing something valuable and important with their lives. However, there are thousands of other people still in prison who are being treated as objects and animals.

I want to do something, and I can certainly take the time to write letters. Can anyone help me? Which senators and-or legislators are upset about the way prison reform is being handled? Are there any organizations on campus or in the area involved in this? I have faith in the communicative abilities of this column of letters, and will be anxious for a reply.

Next to the last song

In approximately three weeks I will leave here, clutching a UMass diploma in one hand and a freshly-polished pair of white waitress shoes in the other.

It seems that the sharp downswing of the economy and the clanging shut of the job market doors were carefully synchronized with the moment I dropped 25 envelopes, stuffed with my resumes and nice letters about me, into the Student Union mailbox.

Alas, Editor Tucker tells me, have no fear. As soon as our shabby, immoral President receives his due and is impeached, the economy will boon upward and I will be able to quietly soft shoe my way into the nearest small-town news room. To begin at the bottom again.

And I can dump my waitress shoes, apron, tray, phony patience and phonier smile...forever.

While I wait (or should I say waitress) I have lots of time to think:

About my two years at UMass:

And my advisor Howard Ziff, who unknowingly changed my life three times while Bill Ballou knowingly saved it at least 100 times.

And the people at the Collegian and Poor Richard's of last semester, who actually gave me the confidence to show the real Big, Bad-assed, Josherina Tough-cookie Barbara Voorhees on paper.

About four years in college: college means pushing and pulling yourself and crying and giving up and quitting and coming back and questioning, questioning, questioning.

What can I say? College is like life. Some days made me feel high as hell while others made me feel the lowest of the low.

And especially about leaving:

And I am afraid that I have not learned, I am not ready...

Ah, a college education is the key to open all doors, my dear.

But only now, as I finish up, do I realize what I want to know, what I should have learned, what I need to know to be ready.

Do this, do that, you've got to know this, you've got to know that, relax, get worried, be serious, don't be so serious, sit down, stand up, and sometimes I'm afraid that I'll go to pieces, little fragments dropping with a horrible tinkling sound.

The reality that no one out there knows or cares who or what I am is a shock.

And I want to shout that I don't care about anything here or out there.

When what I really mean is that I care. About everything. Too much.

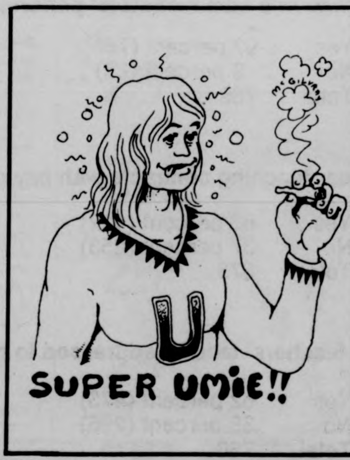
SuperUMie

As the sun sets over the city of UMetropolis, deep in the heart of nowhere, the residents, commonly known as UMies, feel at ease to sit back and read books, because they know that they're safe - that there's somebody protecting them. And every once in a while, if you listen closely, you can hear a familiar sound...

"It's a bird!"
"It's a plane!"
"It's a psych major!"
"Who cares?"
"No! It's SuperUMie!!"



Yes, it's that tememdous spectacle zooming above us all. SuperUMie, inconspicuously clad in green and yellow - that magnificent protector of truth, jsstice and-or the American way - has become a legend in his own time by taking from the administration and giving to the students. It's that very hero that soars in and out between the buildings, as he glides leisurely through the atmosphere of UMetropolis, where he is revered as "the highest UMie."

They still talk about the time that he rescued a man who had fallen off the top of the library. They were going to give him a medal, but they lost it. It's just as well, because they found out later that SuperUMie had pushed the guy in the first place. He was pretty drunk at the time. The reason he kept saying, "Oh, it was nothing." was that he couldn't remember anything about it. That's the way things are in UMetropolis.

One Saturday night last year, our super human friend got so drunk that he flew right into John Adams Tower. The UMetropolis police tried to arrest him for "flying to endanger", but he just beat them up and flew away. Nobody messes with SuperUMie, especially when he's drunk.

Then there was the time that his girlfriend, Louise Leibowitz, was left in a room with four feminists, who were trying to fill her head with unAmerican ideas. Well, she managed to get out to go to the bathroom, and when whe was through, she went over to the window and yelled, "Arthur! (which is SuperUMie's other identity) I need you! Come quickly!!" Within minutes, three guys named Arthur showed up, along with one guy named Fred who just came along for the hell of it. But none of them was our hero. Unbeknown to Louise, our man had gone downstairs in the Campus Center with a few friends from Sylvan.

But so much for reminiscence, actually, SuperUMie, in his alias as Arthur Winston has achieved a moderate degree of fame for himself as a reporter for the Daily Trivia, the newspaper in UMetropolis. He's been the only reporter to catch SuperUMie in any of his adventures. You'd think that after six times, they'd catch on, especially after he did that exclusive interview. But the fact is, that nobody could possibly conceive that a meek, mild mannered, and utterly boring dude like Arthur could ever be their great and powerful super hero. They just figure that he never has anything to do, so he goes checking around to see what SuperUMie's been up to. Little do they know that underneath that obnoxious image is the body of that sensuous super sleuth and all-around good guy, SuperUMie.

So for now, his secret identity will be preserved, and his reputation will remain untarnished. And if you ever pay a visit to the city of UMetropolis, and you happen to be walking around at night, just stop for a second and see if you can hear the familiar sound...

"It's a bird!"

"It's a plane!"

"It's Chancellor Bromery!"

"Who cares?"

"No! It's SuperUMie!!"

Student action at it's best

A group of University of Massachusetts students this past semester have proven that citizens do have a recourse Available to reform state government.

Too often in our daily lives we feel powerless and yield to huge bureaucratic machine that remains insensitive to society's problems.

A year ago a mentally retarded citizen, Russell Daniels, was convicted of murdering a Springfield woman. It is now apparent that the sole basis of the conviction was a confession which even Gov. Sargent admits may have been illegally attained--a wholesale denial of Mr. Daniels rights.

Daniels was sent away to prison and forgotten by the Department of Human Services--the agency which should have been his guardian.

Even after a Connecticut television station produced an award-winning documentary on Daniels' fate, nobody in state government was showing much concern.

What it took to force Governor Sargent and other officials in this Commonwealth to review the Daniels case was a clamor raised by UMass students and a dedicated professor--Dr. Benjamin Ricci--who has distinguished himself well at this University as an advocate for the rights of the mentally retarded and disabled people.

Dr. Ricci and a handful of students have done what the Massachusetts judicial system could not do--safeguard the rights of a fellow citizen.

Their remarkable demonstration of fortitude in pursuit of human decency ought to be commended. Their example of citizen action should be living testimony that we are not completely powerless against the system. It further goes to show the critics in Boston that students at the Amherst campus are not all "apathetic".

Indeed, if awards were given out for outstanding achievement by a student group in social action in Massachusetts this year, Dr. Ricci and the 25-plus students involved merit considerable credit--they are a credit to this University and to the Commonwealth.

Tenure for teachers?

Ed. Note: reprinted by permission from the Christian Science Monitor, copyright 1974, The Christian Science Publishing Society, all rights reserved.

By CYNTHIA PARSONS
Special to The Christian Science Monitor

—Teachers should work under contract subject to some sort of reveiw and rating system.

—Legislators should make new laws to provide some safeguards for teachers in public schools, colleges, and universities, but also to give school districts and institutions much more freedom to hire and fire.

—Teachers should be held accountable for what and how well they teach. Administrators should be held accountable for the way they manage.

These were the conclusions of readers who responded. But the same readers saw problems in fulfilling these goals. While they wanted teachers to work under a merit system, they thought school principals, superintendents, college deans, or presidents — by themselves — are not capable of judging fairly or accurately which teachers are or are not doing a good job.

Balance of views urged

And while they want students to be in on the judging of teachers, they feel student views should be balanced with those of fellow teachers, supervisors, and parents.

Are you surprised at the summary? You have a right to be — the respondents were far from unanimous on the six questions:

1. Do you think tenure should be abolished for all school personnel? If not, why not?

A tenured teacher cannot be dismissed when a school board and/ or administration no longer approve of his methods. On this question many wanted to abolish tenure for the very reasons others wished to preserve it.

Some 522 answered yes, while 360 said no. The reason given most often for wanting to keep the present tenure system was to ensure that teachers' jobs be protected from "politics" and "favoritism."

Not a few of the teachers who responded told of a personal instance in which they went against the grain (in their eyes, with justification). They would have been fired, they said, without tenure.

Many argued that if tenure laws were removed school boards would fire teachers for unjustifiable reasons — to economize, for example, by getting rid of higher-salaried teachers and replacing them with less experienced and lower-salaried people.

Many who did want to abolish tenure also gave reasons. For the most part they argued that tenure laws protect the lazy and incompetent. Tenure, they said, also gives an unfair advantage to public-school teachers, since many other professions have contracts that can be terminated.

2. What type of rating system would you prefer?

Some 764 persons answered. About 30 percent said they wanted some sort of merit system — teachers and schools rated on the basis of pupil performance, for instance. Another 317 (about 40 percent) called for ratings on teacher performance by a large mix of persons.

Formula suggested

One reader wrote out a formula for weighting rating. It allowed for 34 percent of the teacher's rating to come from students, 30 percent from an immediate superior, 30 percent from the teacher himself, and 6 percent from the head of the school or its district.

Fifty people (7 percent) argued that no rating (other than self-evaluation) should take place. The reason most gave for this view was that a professional should police himself.

Fifty-one said that only administrators should do any rating, while 46 said that only teachers should rate. Eleven said rating should be based solely on opinions of students.

A number of persons wrote that, though they didn't have a solution to the rating problem, they felt that present systems were both unfair and destructive.

3. Do you think your building principal should be rated by the superintendent, by the teachers in the building, or by both?

There were 788 answers to this question, 563 saying principals should be rated by both superintendents and by the teachers they supervise.

To rate or not to rate?

Only 70 answers indicated the superintendent alone should rate building principals, and only 48 thought that teachers should be the sole raters. Some 23 persons said that principals shouldn't be rated by anyone.

Eighty-two persons recommended that the rating of principals be done not only by superintendent and teachers, but that students, school-board members, and parents should participate. Again, there were suggestions for weighing the ratings.

A few respondents suggested that rating of a principal should take into account test results of the students in his school, as well as the more subjective evaluations of teachers and the superintendent.

4. Do you think you as a teacher should have to contract every two or three years with your school district and be rated by your supervisors and paid accordingly?

Only 675 persons answered this question, many of them identifying themselves as teachers.

Longer time span favored

While most qualified their answers, the simple breakdown was 422 yeses and 253 noes. Many who favored a contracting system said they preferred a five-year time span and not a shorter two- or three-year period.

A surprising number of those who want to keep tenure agreed that they would be willing to contract with a school district — and be rated — on a regular basis.

One class of 70 education students — future instructors — answered this question. More than three-fourths of these students thought contracting would be a good substitute for present tenure laws. They said also that they would want the details of the rating system to be spelled out in their contract.

Most who wanted rating systems suggested the rating be done by students, peers, supervisors, and the teacher himself.

What basis for salary?

A great number of those who said they would be willing to contract and be willing to be rated, balked at the phrase, "...and paid accordingly." Many of these argued pay should continue to be based on graduate credits and years of experience, rather than ratings.

5. As a parent-taxpayer, are you interested in new laws that would remove tenure from the teaching profession and allow local school districts to hire and fire school personnel at will?

Many readers found this question ambiguous and difficult to answer. Yet 768 did respond. A great many cut the question off after the word "profession" and answered yes. In fact, 62 percent said they were interested in new laws that would remove tenure. Thirty-eight percent said they did not want to remove tenure if removal meant local school boards could "hire and fire at will."

A great many teachers with more than 25 years' experience said tenure was necessary to safeguard students against management changes and innovations of which a teacher might not approve.

6. As a student, do you think you could judge the performance of the teachers and administrators in your school system? If yes, who else should be in on the judging?

Of the 589 respondents, many admitted they weren't students but wanted to give their opinions anyway. Some 196 (33 percent) said students shouldn't judge a performance of teachers and administrators.

While 67 percent though they should, only a handful thought students, alone, could handle the job. Forty-eight said parents should be included. And 170 said many others should be involved but that most of the judging should be done by teachers.

Several readers spoke of their own experience, when as students they were sure they were correct in their judgment of a particular teacher, but then after a period of time and growth reversed their assessment.

Obviously, the opinions on all six questions are strong, and there are no easy solutions. But legislators take note: 473 out of 768 people wrote in to say they favored new laws which would modify, if not abolish, tenure. They feel the present tenure laws are regressive — that something must be done at the state level. Perhaps now is the time for each state to hold hearings and symposia on this question.

Teachers' groups that favor existing laws are organized. They now have, and have had for some years, the attention of their state legislators. Those interested in abolishing tenure and providing a contracting system generally are not organized and are not known to their legislators. They may have a tough job ahead.

Gov't healing forests of Vietnam

By Mass. Audubon Society

During the month of May the Defense Department will convene a committee from eight governmental agencies to look into ways to heal the widespread scars which herbicides left upon the forests of South Vietnam.

Herbicides destroyed 36 per cent of the mangrove forests in the Mekong Delta region and caused "extensive and serious" damage to South Vietnam's inland forests, according to a February report to Congress by the National Academy of Sciences.

The National Academy of Sciences, a private organization of leading U. S. engineers and scientists, is an official advisory group to the Government on science and technology.

In the Rung Sat, a delta area south of Saigon, the mangroves are not recovering, and "under present conditions it may take well over 100 years for the mangrove area to be reforested." However, the destroyed mangrove forests could be restored in about 20 years with "a massive reforestation program."

The committee also found many reports of birth defects, stillbirth, sickness, and death among children in provinces of South Vietnam which were heavily sprayed. However, it found "no conclusive evidence of an association between herbicides and human birth defects." Reports of sickness and death could not be scientifically confirmed, being based primarily on interviews on interviews with refugees. The committee recommended prompt evaluation of hospital data and other sources to determine whether there is any relationship between herbicide spraying and medical problems.

The Academy committee recommended that work "be initiated promptly, since any delay will make its accomplishment more difficult."

The convening of the interdepartmental committee to study what action would be taken upon the Academy recommendations is the first direct government response to the February report. The committee called together by the Defense Department will include representatives from the Defense Department, State Department, Department of Agriculture, Department of the Interior, Agency for International Development, Environmental Protection Agency, and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Dear Aggie...

Dear Aggie,

I have never written to a column like yours before. I really hope you can help me out.

A couple of months ago, I met this guy, whom I like very much. He likes me too, and we've been seeing each other for a while. The first half of the problem is that he is also attached to another girl, and won't give her up because he doesn't want to hurt her. This would be fine except that he doesn't want her to know ANYTHING, so we never go out in public, and whenever we come together to a place where there are people we both know, I have to pretend that I don't know him that well.

The second part of the problem is that is all the time we have known each other he has never asked me about my feelings in general, or about what I like to do, and we never discuss anything intelligent. He says he likes me, but he doesn't really KNOW me. Basically, we just sit around and make out when we can. My roommate says she is wondering if he really exists, because he won't walk me back to the dorm for fear of being seen with me. I really like him, but I don't like this state of affairs, and I don't know what to do about it. Can you help me?

Definitely Confused

Dear D.C.,

I hope what I'm going to say will not offend you, but I'm going to tell you exactly what I think of the whole situation. Please remember that this is only my opinion. Take it for what it's worth.

To tell you the truth, I really think you're being taken for a ride. You say that the reason he isn't telling his girlfriend about you is because he doesn't want to hurt her. If this is true, then he's hurting her more by not. Actually, I think the real reason he isn't telling her is because he doesn't feel it's necessary. You're not anything to him — just someone he can make out with whenever he wants. If he were interested in you, he would have taken the time to get to know you, which you say he hasn't. He doesn't even have the common courtesy to walk you home, which I gather is at night, when he wouldn't even be able to be seen (with you, or anybody!)

If what you want is just a physical thing, then that's fine. But if what you want from him extends farther than a few kisses, and this is not being reciprocated, you better start thinking about exactly what he wants from you, and then, if that's what you want, too. If you don't know, ask him and find out.

Aggie's All-Time Rule No. 1: Never get involved in a triangle. Someone's bound to get hurt, and with your luck, it'll probably be you. Get out while you can and spare yourself the grief.

Got a problem? Tell it to Aggie, The Collegian's exclusive advice columnist. Send letters to Dear Aggie, The Collegian, Student Union Bldg., UMass.

Notes, quotes & anecdotes

Spring day

The Southwest Women's Center is sponsoring a Spring Day, Sunday, May 12, and has a full day's activities planned. The events will begin with a workshop from 11-2 in the afternoon. The workshop will be discussing the actions of the Center, and directions for next year. At 2, a barbeque will be held for the participants of the workshop, on the field across from Patterson House. A softball game is planned for the remainder of the afternoon on the same field. In the evening, Hamden Center will be the setting for a Women's Craft Show, where crafts can be bought or admired. The Show begins at 7 and will be followed from 8-12 bv a Women's Dance, featuring the group, Lilith. Admission to the dance will be 50 cents. All women from the University are invited to participate, contribute ideas, and enjoy.

League booksale

The Amherst League of Women Voters will be holding its 26th annual booksale on the Common, Friday, May 10 from 9 a.m.-7 p.m. and Saturday, May 11 from 9 a.m.-1 p.m.

Proceeds from the sale are used to support many League activities as Voters Service, campaign financing reform, Equal Rights Amendment, televising candidates' night and holding warrant meetings.

A wide variety of books will be available for purchase including children's books, cookbooks, text books, mysteries, foreign language books, bridge books, golf books, and biographies. Magazines and records will also be on hand.

Since the sale is held under a huge tent, it will be held rain or shine.

Improvisation festival

On Saturday May 11 at 7:30 p.m. in the Old Chapel at the University of Massachusetts, the Valley Chamber Players will present a "Festival of Improvisation" to raise funds for the resettling of orphans in the Village of Tay Loc, South Viet Nam.

Performing at the festival will be two local groups - an improvisation group from Amherst High School and the Valley Chamber Players Trio, as well as Philadelphia composers Thom Holmes and Ed Cohen. John Peters' "Provocations" for sax-flute, piano, bass and two solo dancers will receive its premiere performance and Thom Holmes' "Three Open Windows, One Small Antenna" for short wave sounds, synthesizer, tape and three vocalists will receive its area premiere.

The program to resettle Vietnamese orphans in Tay Loc was organized two years ago in Paris by representatives of the Jewish Peace Fellowship and the United Bhuddist Church. The fund has been named in memory of Rabbi Abraham Joshua Heschel.

Admission is free. Donations will be accepted inside. Other contributions to the fund can be through Hillel at the University of Mass. in the Student Union, rm. 302.

Chorale spring concert

The University Chorale and Chamber Singers, conducted by Richard du Bois, will present their spring concert Sunday, May 12, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

On the program will be Mozart's Mass in C and Monteverdi's "Lagrime d'Amante al Sepolcro dell' Amanta."

The concert will feature student soloists Deborah Chromow, Holly Warner, Robert Ruplenas, and Peter Boynton. The singers will be accompanied by members of the University Symphony Orchestra.

The Chamber Singers will be leaving two weeks after this concert on a European tour which will include appearances in Florence, Venice, Vienna, Munich, Salzburg, Interlaken, and Zurich.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Choir and chorus concert

The University Women's Choir and University Chorus will present a joint concert Sunday, May 12 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the UMass-Amherst campus.

The Women's Choir, directed by Sue Brown, will perform works by Francis Poulenc, Anton Dvorak, Johannes Brahms and Karen Tarlow. Ms. Tarlow is a graduate student in the university's Department of Music.

Two little-known works by major composers will be sung by the University Chorus, directed by John Maggs, in their portion of the program.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

somewhere else to eat, then they will walk or ride through the residential sections to get to Bell's Pizza or Gaslight II."

The Zoning Board felt that excessive noise would be a result of later hours. Piccicuto challenged the Board to stand outside his restaurant and see if the noise was coming from inside his shop.

"I'm the scapegoat," Piccicuto feels. "The problem with noise is from Southwest."

The Board also ruled that the restaurant is not compatible with a residential district. The decision stated "The Board does not have the authority to revoke such use, but neither does it have the authority to extend such incompatibility."

The Board did not give a reason why the few extra hours would be harmful. Ken Rosenthal, head of the board, refused comment because of possible further litigation on the matter. He was referring to Piccicuto's intention to appeal the decision.

Piccicuto has gathered 1800 signatures in support of his appeal. The signatures are almost entirely of students who patronize the restaurant. "Students hate this closing time" Piccicuto claims. "They are willing to fight it."

If the permit is not granted, Piccicuto estimates he will lose a third of his business.

Johnston said. "We understand that he's quite a nuclear energy fanatic, so it could potentially have been a very serious situation. Especially in light of the fact that we discovered a loaded gun on him, which he could have had at that time as well."

Johnston emphasized the fact that this was the second time in as many weeks that the UMass police were forced to deal with people carrying guns."

"I hope that those people who question the carrying of guns by UMass police will see why they do after this," he said. "Both times there might have been serious consequences if the police had not been armed — not only to police, but to students as well."

Police arrested two armed men in John Quincy Adams dorm last Wednesday.

Detective Michael Grabiec, who with Detective Richard Grader, arrested Carlinsky, said bail had been set at $5000 and the trial was set for May 15.

SGA Action Officer needed

In order to act on legislation passed by the Student Senate, a search committee has been formed by the Student Attorney General, Jim Pappas, to find an Affirmative Action Officer for Student Government. This person will assume the responsibility for enforcing the Affirmative Action Statements submitted by R.S.O. groups to the Student Senate for Fiscal Year 1974-1975.

Applications are available in the Student Senate Office and are due by May 13, 1974. A selection will be made by the end of the semester.

The Affirmative Action Statements to be enforced have been approved by the Women's Committee of the Student Senate. These statements address the group's policy on recruitment, selection process for paid positions, details of how the program addresses issues relevent to Third World Students and Women, and plan to meet Affirmative Action goals. The affirmative Action Officer will prosecute, in the Student Court any groups which violate their Affirmative Action Statements.

Other duties involved with this position are: maintaining channels of complaint against the S.G.A., establishing a liason with the University Affirmative Action Coordinator, and reviewing committee and job appointments within S.G.A., among others enumerated in the legislation.

Masspirg commends Sarge

Mass PIRG Executive Director Ronald E. Bogard commended Governor Francis Sargent today for his "timely efforts to regulate the growth of nuclear power in Massachusetts." In a letter to the Governor released this morning, Bogard said, "You have taken an important first step towards protecting the people of the Commonwealth from the dangers of nuclear development."

Sargent, speaking at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst Wednesday, called for a comprehensive study of the pros and cons of nuclear power, as well as other measures designed to improve safety at nuclear plants and involve the state in monitoring plant operation.

In an address before Trustees of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, the Governor said he would seek assurance "that no new plant is built unless it meets rigorous economic, environmental and safety tests." Sargent also promised to insure "that existing facilities are totally safe," which, the state is not equipped to do at this time.

Bogard expressed concern that the Governor did not propose specific study of the Price-Anderson Act of 1957, which limits liability in case of a reactor accident.

"Price-Anderson," Bogard said, "raises the basic question: if nuclear plants are so safe, why do the utilities and the insurance industry refuse to provide coverage for loss due to a reactor accident? We urge that your investigation include careful study of this Act, which makes it impossible for citizens to secure adequate insurance protection for loss of property, health or life following disaster at a nuclear power plant."

Mass PIRG announced support for a moratorium on new nuclear plant construction in Massachusetts last January, shortly after the Northeast Utilities Company aired plans to construct two reactors in Montague.

Beekman's Multatuli almost here

The University of Massachusetts Press is pleased to announce the publication of E.M. Beekman's latest translation, The Oyster and the Eagle: Selected Parables and Aphorisms of Multatuli, to be released on May 30.

Multatuli, a jumbled Latin phrase meaning "I have suffered much," is the pseudonym of the Dutch writer Eduard Douwes Dekker. Dekker has been best remembered for his satirical and stringently anti-colonial novel Max Havelaar, which was published in English in 1927 with an introduction by D.H. Lawrence.

Despite the fact that he rivaled Nietzsche as a leading figure in German literary circles during the late 19th century, and despite the fact the Freud counted him among his primary influences and called him "That great thinker and firend of humanity," the rest of Multatuli's work (including a seven-volume work, Ideen, essentially a one-man magazine) has gone untranslated and ignored by English-speaking peoples.

With this translation, Professor Beekman reveals a little more of the vastness of Multatuli's genius to a wider circle of readers by presenting selections from two of the genres for which Multatuli has been especially admired: the aphorism and the parable.

The Oyster and the Eagle will be available in cloth, 122 pages, at $8.00

Heavyweight boxing champions: the current titleholder, George Foreman, Capricorn; Joe Frazier, Capricorn; Muhammed Ali, Capricorn; Floyd Patterson, who is the only fighter ever to regain the world championship, Capricorn. The coach of the world champion football Miami Dolphins, Don Shula, also a Capricorn. Then there is Richard Nixon and Mao Tse-tung, both born under Capricorn. Is someone trying to tell us something?

– – – – –

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Emphasis is on learning process. Your abilities break through bonds of limitation. Language, special studies are spotlighted. You successfully complete project, make wide-ranging contacts and can gain added recognition. Travel plans are in picture, too.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take special care where investments, money partnerships are concerned. Someone apparently wants something of value for nothing — from you. Eschew wishful thinking. Get facts. See in light of reality. Pisces, Virgo persons could be involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message for valid hint. Avoid basing actions on impulse. Defer to wishes of partner or mate. Patience now is a valuable ally. Know it and act accordingly. Public relations program should be considered. Question concerning marriage surfaces.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Pace quickens. Vitality becomes major factor for consideration. Vitamin intake should be reviewed. Forces tend to be scattered. You may be attempting too much, too soon. Work associates are not as dependable now as they might be in other circumstances.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Creative abilities are utilized — and appreciated. Personal magnetism becomes vital factor. Be ready for change of scenery. Emphasis is on remodeling. Changes which occur are beneficial. Member of opposite sex plays key role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Steady approach is necessary. Gather information. Analyze data. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Reject the superficial. Gemini and another Virgo figure prominently. Property, home, older family members are spotlighted.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent is on ideas which require time to develop, short trips and agreements reached with relatives. Strive to erase misconceptions. Harmony on home front is more important than usual. Money question will be favorably resolved.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Hold off on final decisions, legal contracts. Individual who boasts of assets may be covering lack of funds. Know it and proceed with caution. Check behind the scenes. Surface indications could be deceptive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This is a power day for you. You obtain results. You gain authority and prestige. If single, you could gain a mate. If married, you gain in business deal, enhancing security. Married or single, nothing will occur halfway. Go all out – press and you emerge victorious.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Retrace steps. Go back and review lessons. Study a variety of techniques. Popularize your presentation. Get out of arcane area into bright light of sun. Means realize you are not performing for benefit of privileged few. You will understand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Popularity surges to forefront. Back slappers appear. Where were they when you needed them? Ask it and be mature. Keep balance. You are due for a windfall and for many who want to "take" you. Keep guard up, especially in emotional clinches.

FDA: fun and games at the dump

By STEVE MASSE
MDC Special

Believe it or not, there is a viable organization called the Fraternal Dump Association (FDA), and it has recently made its grand opening at UMass as a Recognized Student Organization. The major purpose of the FDA is to explore and promote the social and recreational potential of dumps and dumping.

A recent membership campaign on the Campus Center Concourse has been glutted with interested people. To increase the public sentiment, a raffle is to be conducted Thursday. Either Chancellor Randolph Bromery or his assistant, Dr. Forsythe, will preside at the drawing.

First prize is a genuine antique rowing machine, hand picked from the dump. Second prize is a certificate for 2,500,000 shares of stock in the Kennebunkport Dump Association (of which FDA is an affiliate), and third prize is a Bicentennial Commemorative Dump puzzle, which commemorates the 198th anniversary of Free Dumping under a Democratic Republic.

The Fraternal Dump Association is open to new members at a material cost membership fee (50 cents). This fee entitles card bearer to all privileges and benefits granted by the Dump Association. Also included with membership is the Dump Credit Card, which entitles bearer to national Dump Visiting privileges, and makes roadside dumping thereby unnecessary.

Other activities of the Fraternal Dump Association include National Dump Week from July 4th through Labor Day. A Giant Trash Parade will be held, followed by a Miss Dumpy Pageant. Also there will be an Anti-Litter Protest March, as well as a Dump Exhibit. These festivities will be held in Kennebunkport, Maine, under the auspices of the prestigious Kennebunkport Dump Association. The UMass FDA will enter a float in the parade.

A Dump Amnesty Program is also planned concurrently with National Dump Week. Since it may be difficult for many UMass people to get to Maine during that week, the FDA Planning and Development Committee has voted to proclaim a general litterbug amnesty throughout the nation. During this time all litterbugs will be encouraged to gather from the roadsides an amount of trash proportional to their past misdeeds and will be allowed to present this offering to their local dump — no questions will be asked. There must be an end to decentralization of non-biodegradable resources.

Dozens of unsolicited testimonials were received from people stopping by at the FDA membership table. Many claimed to have furnished their entire apartments here in Amherst from articles gleaned from the Pioneer Valley Regional Dump. Many students have gained summer employment as summertime garbage men or as recycling engineers.

LITTER PROBLEMS AT UMASS

According to a spokesman for the Physical Plant, there is a massive litter problem on campus. The Physical Plant employs two trucks and 200 work hours doing nothing but picking up litter. Surprisingly enough, beer cans are not the major source, according to the spokesman. It is the accumulation of run-of-the-mill litter which taints the landscape. This litter problem is not seasonal, though it dwindles slightly in the summer. It concentrates around dormitory areas, especially when students have time out. There is a hard core littering population on campus, some members of which go as far as starting fires in litter barrels. This prank is highly detrimental to proper dumping procedures.

A Litterbug Persuasion Committee is being formed for the limiting of litterbugs. Vacancies in the committee are being taken, but more qualified committee people are needed. Persuasion techniques include bahavior modification and aversion therapy. Applicants should have gang war or street combat experience. Interested people should contact Director Tom Driscoll by calling 546-5864, or by applying to FDA Persuasion, 804 Brown House, UMass.

The most important Campus Committee of the Fraternal Dump Association is believed to be that of the Litterbug Persuasion Committee. However this committee is far from the central steering of the FDA's major goals.

Other committees include the Plans and Development Committee, which is currently developing a prototype for a litterproof beverage container. Another is the Research Committee, which is coordinating efforts with the Anthropological Researchers at the University of Arizona. The Anthro Researchers are currently conducting Market Research on consumer buying habits by perfecting analytical techniques of examining consumer trash content at local dumps.

Cooperation is also planned with Psychology Researchers at Long Island University, where a prototype talking trash can is being tested. The trash can says "thank you," and other appropriate comments which are believed to be an incentive for people to use the trash cans for disposal rather than the ground around them.

There is a Lobbying Committee which has been trying to influence major plastic industries to introduce a line of transparent trash bags. The present opaque models make it difficult and unsanitary for the dump picker in that he must tear through several bags of garbage in order to find desirable items. It is almost as though people were ashamed of their trash, the way they hide it in these opaque containers. Efficiency studies show this is detrimental to orderly dump picking activities and recycling brigades. An independent dump study recently claimed that 87.5 per cent of one seacoast community would prefer to take their trash to the landfill areas rather than dump it on the beaches. Clearly this finding shows that it is time to unite the trash forces in the nation, and steer away from Decentralized Disposal.

A bill is being introduced to the House Ways and Means Committee by the Fraternal Dump Association which calls for Elementary Dump Education Programs in all public schools, grades kindergarten through six. Materials are currently being developed which will aid in the education of the young toward anti-litter practices. Collaborating organizations are the Fraternal Dump Association, UMass Chapter; the Kennebunkport Dump Association in Maine, keepers of the Nation's Number One Dump; and the South Kingston Dump Pickers Association in Rhode Island, an organization with 350 members fighting for the retention of picking privileges in their local facilities.

According to the FDA Constitution, on campus activities of the FDA are: Regular meetings to be held not less than once a semester as decided by officers. Activities will also include regular and special staff meetings, discussions, field trips, inspections, research, public service projects, sports, compilation and dissemination of dump information, and other social and recreational activities as decided by members.

PALMER BYRD, championship pool player, will be behind the 8-ball Friday in the C.C. Auditorium when she gives several exhibitions of the sport.

Billiards expert to show art

Pretty Palmer Byrd, Brunswick billiards star from Detroit, Michigan, will demonstrate her skills with a cue at a special exhibition Friday, May 10 at 12 noon and 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

She will also teach fundamentals to beginners after the 12:00 exhibition.

Don't be surprised if the shapely miss runs the table several times. Her best tournament performance approaches 40 balls sunk in succession. After demonstrating the fundamentals of the game she will demonstrate her array of trick shots. Afterwards she will giver personal instruction to those who request it.

Miss Byrd only began playing the game in 1968 while she was a freshman in college. She entered her first tournament in 1970 finishing fifth. Later during the same year she won her first title, a women's amateur championship.

She entered the prestigious U.S. Open in Chicago in 1971 taking eighth place In successive years since then she moved up to seventh place and sixth place in 1973.

In 1972 Miss Byrd captured the New England Open title and in 1973 she won the Eastern U.S. Open women's championship.

Employed as a bookkeeper full-time, Miss Byrd finds time to write a colums for the National Billiard News and take care of a menagerie of pets in her free time.

Quarry on road back

By TIM O'CONNELL

On January 5, 1973, Jerry Quarry made a comeback, sloppily stopping Randy Neumann in the seventh round. Since then he has destroyed James J. Woody and Tony Doyle and whipped previously unbeaten giant Ron Lyle, ten rounds to two. Most recently he kayoed powerful Earnie Shavers, who knocked out Jimmy Ellis in one round. Earnie didn't see the second round of his fight with Quarry, either.

Jerry attributes his successful comeback to three things. His new manager, Gil Clancy, whose New York location frees Jerry of his family tensions in California, is one. His maturity is another. "I was a kid then. I'm a man now." The third and possibly the most important factor is his new wife, "Charlie", the former Arlene Charles, an actress and former Miss Indiana. "Let me tell you something. When you've got a great lady behind you, you're not gonna let anything stop you from giving her what she wants." And she wants what he wants. "My first wife didn't care about my boxing career." The new Mrs. Quarry does, and she's behind him 110 per cent.

Now it looks like Jerry's "isolation" may be over. It's not definite yet, but it is more than likely that he will meet Joe Frazier in June. When I suggested the 23rd as a date Jerry replied "That would be a nice anniversary." He is positive he will beat Frazier. He stupidly tried to slug with Frazier in their first encounter, to prove to his critics that he could take a punch, that he could give a punch, and that he had guts. Many experts felt that had Jerry fought his own fight, he would have whipped Joe. This time he will. He wants another fight in September, possibly with England's Joe Bugner, who lasted the distance with both Frazier and Ali. "By then, after Foreman-Ali, there'll be no one else left. Foreman will have to fight me."

During the course of the session with Jerry, the group of people involved discussed many topics, some totally unrelated to boxing, some which are of interest to only the most avid boxing fan. He is a complex individual, not at all conforming to the stereotype of the punch-drunk boxer walking on his heels. His goal, after the Heavyweight Title, is to own a self-supporting horse ranch. My primary impression of Jerry Quarry is that of a down-to-earth, striving individual. In my opinion, he has unfortunately been denied much of the credit which he deserves and probably would have been accorded in a different time. But the social-political condition of modern America has created a situation in which some men, guilty only of being themselves, must either subserviate themselves to the heroes of a usually hypocritical, condescending portion of the general public, or face the critical attacks of that public. Jerry Quarry has too much pride to conform to this role ascribed by society's do-gooders. He never accepted a passive role in any phase of his life or boxing career, and I hope he never does.

JVs win, 13-4; lose, 5-4

By BILL DOYLE

Two unearned runs in the sixth gave Dartmouth a 5-4 victory over the UMass J. V. baseball team and enabled the Big Green to rebound from a 13-4 thrashing in the first game of a twinbill, Wednesday.

UMass pitcher, Mark Santini, coasted for the first three innings in the nightcap and had a 4-0 lead but he couldn't hold it. Dartmouth picked up two runs in the fourth, one in the fifth and two in the sixth. The last two were cheap runs to put it mildly. After a leadoff single, and a popup, Santini got the next batter to hit what looked like a possible double play ball but the throw to first was wild and the runner went to second. The next batter lifted a pop fly into short left field that fell between three converging UMass fielders and a run scored. A grounder that went through the shortstop's legs scored the go-ahead run and Dartmouth hung on for a 5-4 win.

UMass scored all their runs in the third inning on Steve Wright's double, a walk, Bob Moore's triple, Bavel Cuming's single and a sacrifice fly by Paul Abramowicz.

Dave Tewhill pitched well in his four inning stint, in the first game, giving up four hits and two runs to pick up the victory.

The J. V.'s play Worcester Academy today at Worcester. The prep school is 5-0 on the year.

Ruggers one of favorites as hosts of 25 squad NE tournament

By HUESS McDEWIS

This weekend UMass will be hosting the New England Rugby Football League Tournament. In this tournament, every team in New England will be represented by their first squad, which will attempt to win this single elimination play-off. As around twenty-five teams will be represented, some teams will have to play five games to make it all the way. It will be a long arduous weekend for some, as one game a week is usually enough.

The UMass team will be one of the favorites. Although losing two games this season, the total point spread for these games was only four points. Providence made a penalty kick with only a few minutes left in the game to break a tie, and Harvard, winning by one point, had a field that was thirteen inches deep in mud and a referee whose knowledge of the rugby rules was even less than his knowledge of the eighteen minute gap on Nixon's tapes. All considered, it looks good for UMass in the tournament.

For those who get knocked out of play early, there will be plenty of beer on the sidelines to ease the pang of defeat. Saturday night there will be another of the infamous rugby parties. No one will be walking away from this event. Crawling is the norm. Sunday the semi-finals and the finals will be held. Between these two games however, will be the most important game of the weekend, the drunkard's XV's. In this contest, where some people go down without being tackled, the finest ruggers in the land (and also the finest drunks), will strive for victory.

The action starts Saturday at 9:00 a.m. It will be different.

IM teams only campus winners

By RUSS SMITH

Baseball doesn't seem to be THE SPORT this season. Look at the Boston Red Sox... Before the season regular season began a month ago, they promised to be a first rate team for a change (at least on paper they did). Their reputation for being a second-place team appeared to be a thing-of-the-past.

Well, it is! Now, they're a last place team!

Then take a look at the varsity baseball club here at UMass... After a decent start down in Florida (maybe they scrimmaged the Sox), they returned to their home, Amherst.

But, the ex-Yankee Conference champs just didn't have the stuff, and they too fell apart, much to the dismay of us disappointed basketball fans (you remember what happened up in New York's Madison Sq. Gardens two months ago).

Since no one is playing baseball with any kind of consistency (with the exception of the J.V. team), I thought I'd let you know what's happening on the intramural softball scene.

The field of 250 teams has been cut down in the last two weeks to just 8 teams going into the quarter finals of the 'real' campus playoffs.

In yesterdays action, Beta Kappa Phi chopped the Beavers, 9-5; Brotherhood creamed Mazzini, 9-2; the Hogsters-2 McNamara Moondogs-0; Sigma Phi Epsilon bounced the Bad Hops by a score of 10-6, and the Jokers from Johnson house slipped by Phi Mu Delta, 1-0. No scores as yet in the games between the Dodos-Hogmen, or the Buckeyes-Spiders (this one just in: Thatcher Redwoods-11 Cowsows-4).

The key to winning seems to be a good tight defense, instead of a slugfest. That is, out of the remaining clubs, the Hogsters have an earned run average of .60, having shutout the opposition in three of their five games. Brotherhood has a 1.4 ERA; BKP a 1.7; and the Jokers have an ERA of 2.0 a game. Sigma Phi is the exception to the rule with a 6.0 earned run average, having only played two games, and winning two by forfeit.

The quarter final matchups are today, with the semis on Monday. The championship game is Tuesday.

Scoreboard:... It's strange that I once went out for the UMass baseball team (sort of a joke) and the coach said I wasn't good enough and should try I.M. softball. Now, I'm starting to wonder if some of the present players ought to play softball instead too... Sylvan area, in view that its teams have been eliminated, started their own double-elimination playoff last week to determine the champ of the Elite section of campus... RUSS SMALL got credit for my last story on intramurals, but that's alright because I didn't like it either.

Softball team seeks to end jinx

A good club can't be kept down forever and today, at Springfield College, UMass is out to prove it. It's been four years since the task has been accomplished but Coach, Carole Oglesby is confident that today is the day, that mighty Springfield College falls on their proud face.

It's the second time this season that the arch-rivals have clashed. Springfield humiliated UMass on opening day by a score of 11-1. But even with the discouraging start, UMass rebounded and hustled their way to five consecutive victorys in preparation for the return match-up.

Micki Locke (3-0 on the season) will hurl for UMass today in the most important outing of her career. A team load of hopes rest on her shoulders. For even a winning season can not be a complete success without a victory over Springfield.

Today's contest is one between two enormously proud teams. And as a result, the outcome might not be decided on team strength or ability, for both clubs are talented and potent. The real test could lie with each club's desire. And since UMass was laughed off their own field by this club onApril 22, they are sorely hungry for revenge.

Only the seniors on the team can recall the feeling that is present when Springfield is beaten. They were all freshmen at that time. The wait has been a long one for the women's softball team and a trying one. Today is their last chance to get even.

Stick notes

By BEN CASWELL

When it was all over yesterday it was kind of like just finishing all your finals for the semester, and knowing that even though you did all your work in the last minute it was still cool because it was done. It was even cooler for Garber's Gorillas because they already knew the outcome of their work and it was to say the least a pleasant one.

What Jeff Spooner did to Brown University yesterday afternoon I would not wish on my worst enemy. A goal with eight seconds left to play in the game is what won this one for the Gorillas and isn't that a switch from the recent routes of the past few games.

This one had all the elements of fine lacrosse that you would ever want to see. What was needed for a win was strong performances from everyone and that is what happened. Early in the game people behind me were lamenting about what the Gorillas plight was going to be as things looked grim with a 3-0 Brown lead. But that was before Hollywood Harry McVey went to work. He almost single-handedly brought UMass back into the game with 2 goals and an assist. After that the game took on the old "nip and tuck" proportions until Spooner's fabulous fastbreak finish at the end.

A runaway with track awards

Now that the track season is coming to an end, it's time to look back at some of the outstanding performances that set new school records. Remember Randy Thomas in the two-mile and three-mile runs, Bill Gillin in the steeplechase and Paul Segersten in the six-mile?

But there were a number of records that went unnoticed and didn't receive the publicity usually given to standard-setting efforts. Here are some of the less familiar records that every track fan (and every sports fan for that matter) should know about.

MOST GRINDERS EATEN AT ONE MEET-----Chris "Munchy" Farmer downed seven ham and cheese grinders (with everything on them) and five cokes, setting a new UMass mark. Farmer broke the nine year-old record held by "Meatball" Mike Jones, who mastered six meatball grinders and a glass of Alka-Seltzer during the 1965 season. Amazingly, Farmer set a world record by eating the grinders in 29:47. Farmer probably thought he was running the six-mile and had to finish in under 30 minutes.

FASTEST 220 TO THE BUS-----Bob Bocash ran a blazing 21.4 from the shotput area to the bus when he heard there was free steak for the first five team members to get there.

LONGEST JUMP ACROSS THE LOCKER ROOM FLOOR-----When John Osborne realized that Coach O'Brien had been listening to his discussion about "booze" and women, "Ozzie" leaped 19-8 from a standing start to the other side of the locker room.

MOST HOURS SPENT STUDYING BEFORE A BIG MEET-----John McGrail performed the spectacular feat of studying for six consecutive hours during the drive to Philadelphia for the Penn Relays. In fact, McGrail has been known to read entire novels while running a thirteen-mile course. Now that's relaxed running!

QUICKEST 120-YARD HIGH HURDLES-----Mel Cobb gave it all he had and lowered the school record in the high hurdles to 13.0. Of course, "Skip" was aided by the fact that Coach O'Brien moved the javelin throwing area next to the spot where the hurdlers practice. Cobb had little choice in becoming a record breaker, for fear of flying spears. Had Cobb run a split-second slower, he might have been designated official javelin-catcher.

And finally, the award that the trackmen have been waiting for all season long. The award, given annually is known as "The Fourth Call Award", and is presented to the team member who comes up with the exceptional effort of the season. This year's prize goes to Conrad Gees for his attempts to get to the BC Relays before the high jump started. Gees missed the 7:30 a.m. van that would have enabled him to get to BC by the 10:30 starting time. Conrad made the team bus, however, and although he was too late to compete, he arrived in time for the "fourth call."

Spooner shot sinks Brown, 10-9

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Whew!!! Garber's Gorillas won the big game, yesterday, defeating Brown University, 10-9, before an enthusiastic crowd of at least 3500.

This game is best described by the word "close". It was nip and tuck all the way - a real seat squirmer. The game was tied six times during the sixty minutes. UMass pulled it out with only EIGHT seconds left in the fourth quarter. The game was won by way of some good hustle by the UMass team. Hirsch Seidman, midfielder and tri-captain, picked up a loose pass near his team's bench as the seconds were ticking away on the clock, and breaking toward the middle of the field, hit teammate Jeff Spooner with a perfect pass. Spooner gathered in the pass and, with only the Brown goaltender between him and victory, made a super move and scored.

Spooner's goal capped a superb effort by the Gorillas and also relieved a lot of pressure. The entire crowd was hanging on to their seats, tense and anxious, awaiting the overtime periods; but there were none. As soon as the ball hit the net both the crowd and the entire UMass team erupted in jubilation over the victory - a victory which was only the fourth against Brown in 14 years and a victory which brought UMass one of its first New England Championships.

The immense crowd was expecting to see a good lacrosse game and also perhaps to see the Gorillas prove that they were the top lacrosse team in New England. Indeed, both of these wishes were fulfilled. Both teams played a rough and tough game. There was plenty of solid bodychecking by both sides. The hitting was clean and there were only 15 penalties assessed in the game, 7 for UMass and 8 for Brown.

The game was also characterized by some good hustle by the UMass team. They hustled after loose balls and they hurried to get back on defense.

Brown took control of the game in the first ten minutes of the opening period. They opened the scoring after only 1:12 had elapsed in the contest. Brown's Bob Mueller netted the first one and within eight minutes his team scored two more goals to take a 3-0 lead. The crowd was silent. However, UMass tightened up. Attackman Harry McVey took things into his own hands and scored two unassisted goals within a span of 37 seconds. Both scores were picture plays. On the first one Harry got the ball behind the net and started dancing and dodging in his Hollywood style, causing the Brown defenseman to trip over his own two left feet. With the defenseman out of the way, the goalie was easy prey and Harry beat him easily to the right side. The second goal was almost identical as McVey again beat the defenseman, this time on the left side.

Freshman Jeff Spooner finished what McVey started. He made some terriffic moves in beating his man. Spooner scored the third, seventh, eighth and tenth UMass goals. Both Spooner and McVey played a big part in the UMass win. They worked the ball around as UMass controlled the ball for the greater part of the final 3 periods. Other UMass goal scorers were: Steve Pappas (2 goals on booming shots), Hirsch Seidman (1 goal which was a solid thirty foot shot), and Billy Arnold (1 goal scored after he picked up a rebound of a teammate's shot).

UMass head coach Dick Garber was impressed by his team's win and called it a "super effort."

Minutemen manage mild milestone; split twinbill

By MIKE BROPHY

John Olson and Craig Allegerezza combined their pitching efforts to seal a 6-4 victory for the Minutemen in the first half of a twinbill with Dartmouth College before dropping the second contest, 4-3, on a late rally by the visitors.

Home runs by Ron Beaurivage, with Mike Koperniak aboard, and Pete Backstrom, with Rick Hansen on first, provided all the fire power UMass would need to carry out their mission against the Ivy powerhouse.

John Olson made his first pitching start in a while and looked to be somewhat improved although he surrendered two HR's early in the game. He managed to keep the Big Green hitters at bay with some help from his fielders, before giving way to Craig Allegrezza in the seventh.

During his stint he registered two strikeouts but, more importantly, walked only three. Allegrezza came in and fired smoke, getting the first batter to ground out to short and striking out the last batter of the game.

It was the best game that UMass has played in quite some time. They performed like a seasoned ball team in posting their sixth victory.

In the second encounter, the Minutemen dropped a heartbreaker after coming back to tie it all up at 2-2 in the fourth. Joe Marzilli's clutch single to center was the key hit that scored the second run after Backstrom had singled.

John McManus pitched one of his best ballgames of the year in striking out six and walking only three. "I got tired at the end there and they got a couple of cheap hits off me," is all he could say after the final out had been called.

Jeff Reardon came on in relief and retired the side in giving up a sacrifice fly to catcher Jim Vojcsik who went one for three on the day.

Kevin Kelley, a junior righty, came in to relieve starter Bob Piela in the fourth to pick up the win for Dartmouth.

What would normally be the Conference deciding series is coming up this weekend as UMass and UConn will play a home-and-home series. However, both teams are out of the running for any Conference honors.

Track team substitutes respond; Edge out Rhode Island, 80-74

By SCOTT HAYES

A "token" track squad traveled to Kingston Tuesday afternoon with hopes of avenging an indoor season loss to URI and came home with an 80-74 victory to end the dual meet portion of the season with an impressive 7-2 record.

The meet was expected to be a replay of the indoor season contest, which the Rams took 64-54. The circumstances surrounding the two meets were similar, but the final score this time showed UMass on top. In December, a few top runners were rested in favor of the important tri-meet with UConn and Manhattan. Tuesday, the best distance men were left behind to prepare for the Yankee Conference Championships to be held in Orono on Saturday.

The key to victory in the first meet was the number of first place finishers. URI outscored UMass in firsts nine to five and the trackmen were unable to make up the difference. Two days ago, the Rams had nine first place finishers while UMass managed seven firsts.

Once again, it was the ability to capture the seconds and thirds that decided the outcome of the meet. The Minutemen took ten seconds and ten thirds out of a possible 16 events, as well as winning the 440-yard relay.

Probably the biggest surprise of the meet was the sweep of the shot put by Tom Lonergan, Bob Bocash and Steve Mason. Lonergan, a freshman, led the trio of weightmen with a throw of 47-3 for the first sweep of the season by the heavyweights.

There was another sweep by UMass, but this one came as little surprise. Bob Adamson, Mike Geraghty and Ken Adamson combined to take the top three places in the triple jump. The older of the two Adamsons, Bob, won the event in 46-3½.

Ken Adamson won the long jump with a 22-10-three quarter showing. Veteran hurdler Jim Hennessey finished first in the 120-yard high hurdles with a time of 15.3 and Tommy Beland captured the number one spot in the 100 in 10.6.

The third and final sweep for the tracksters came in the 220. Tom and Larry Beland and Ed McLellan finished 1-2-3 with Tom taking first in 22.3.

Celtics: glad to be back in home town

MILWAUKEE [AP] — Home court advantage or not, the Boston Celtics are taking nothing for granted.

The Celtics, with Dave Cowens and John Havlicek each scoring 28 points, beat the Milwaukee Bucks 96-87 here Tuesday night for a 3-2 lead in the National Basketball Association championship playoffs. They can clinch their first title since 1969 by winning in Boston Friday night.

"It's a strange, strange series," said Boston guard Jo Jo White. "There's just no such thing as a home court advantage. But make no mistake. We're glad to be going back to Boston."

Visiting teams have won three of five games in the series so far, a fact of some consolation to Bucks' Coach Larry Costello.

"I like to think in my own mind that we will be back in Milwaukee to play on Sunday," Costello said. "I hope it's in the players' minds, too. You can't expect to have two performances as bad back-to-back in playoff competition."

A Bucks' victory Friday would return the series here for the deciding game Sunday.

"We have to be ready. They can come back to Boston and beat us bad," the Celtics' Paul Silas said.

The Bucks appeared to have shifted momentum their way with an 97-89 victory last Sunday in Boston. In that game, they neutralized Boston's pressure defense by starting 6-foot-7 backup forward Mickey Davis at guard, creating a height mis-match in the backcourt. Davis frequently took the 6-3 White to the baseline and shot over him for 15 points.

There had been speculation the Celtics would adjust by switching the 6-5 Havlicek from forward to play Davis at guard. But White again was matched with Davis Tuesday night and held him to seven points.

"Jo Jo didn't have any extra help," Boston Coach Tom Heinsohn said. "He just played Davis man-to-man."

"They didn't do anything different," Bucks' guard Jon McGlocklin said. "They just killed us."

The Bucks fell behind in the early minutes, missing their first five shots, and shot only 25 per cent from the field in the first period. Forward Bob Dandridge, who had averaged nearly 19 points a game during the regular season, missed his first 10 attempts, finished with four baskets in 17 shots.

BROMOLOGY

by Barbara Voorhees

Big, Bad Bromery! Sitting up there in that ivory tower called Whitmore quietly ruling over all of UMass-Amherst land.

His predecessor, Oswald Tippo, worked from the grand, plush office overlooking Haigis Mall from the left-hand corner of the top level of the Philip F. Whitmore administration building. Everything in the room is of shiny, smooth, rich-looking wood; the tables, the chairs, the desk, the panelling on the walls. There are several paintings and a tree-like, potted plant.

Says Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, "That room is just not my style."

Bromery works from the small, plain, square, box-like office next door.

"In my office I can make a mess," he says waving his arm over the letters, memoranda and newspapers strewn over his desk. "And if someone comes to meet with me we can use the other office."

In the meeting room Bromery has hung a cuckoo clock which chimes every half hour.

"If I am meeting with someone for an hour, then when the clock chimes a second time I can look up at it and the person will know that it's time to close up," says Bromery.

Bromery's theory on administration is that, "if an administrator is doing a good job and running things smoothly, people forget that he's there."

Bromery says that, as chancellor, he holds the ultimate responsibility for management of the Amherst campus.

He believes in delegating that responsibility to "lower levels of the administrative structure" but feels that "ultimately the chancellor is held responsible for everything that goes on."

"There are some decisions made without sufficient faculty and student input, but when you get into day-by-day operational decisions — these have to be made by an administrator," says Bromery. "And there are some areas in which the law will not permit me to delegate responsibilities."

Citing residence hall and dining commons fees as examples, Bromery says, "I know students would like to be making decisions about those services which effect them on a daily basis, but there is one thing I always have to keep in mind.

"There are certain debts on residence halls and other buildings that we must meet and if we don't pay them I am the one who will be held legally responsible; I am the man who will go to jail.

"There is a great difference in making a decision when you hold the ultimate responsibility for it and when you hold no responsibility for it," says Bromery.

Bromery's main undertaking at present is the restructuring of his administration. In discussing his plans for this, Bromery "the administrator" stands out. It is only one side of the man; for now the most prominent, but certainly the least likeable, for it is here that he slips into the vague lingo of "administrationese."

"I wish that just one day I could let down my guard and be myself."

He speaks of "focusing definitively on certain functional areas" and the "development of justifiable input at lower organizational levels."

"There will be some new people coming into the administrative structure, and there will be some internal movement of people from one position to another. We must keep costs at a minimum," says Bromery.

Asked if this means someone might get fired, Bromery says, "Well, I like to think of it as internal movement within the administrative structure. Of course if I can't justify a person being in a position I can't keep him on."

Besides managing the Amherst campus, Bromery says that he must also act as its representative.

Forty per cent of this part of his job is to represent the Amherst campus to the President of the University and to the Board of Trustees.

The other 60 per cent of the job is the external part in which he seeks national visibility for the university. He feels that this visibility is important in three ways:

1.) It helps in the development of federal and private funding.

2.) It helps in recruiting top-notch students and faculty.

3.) It helps to establish relations with other institutions of higher education.

As chancellor, Bromery receives $40,000 per year.

Bromery says that his job is loaded with frustrations and hassles.

"If I knew I had a contract to stay here for a certain number of years I wouldn't be able to stand it.

"Without a contract I know that when the time comes to leave, I can leave. I hope I recognize that time," says Bromery.

Bromery believes that he will stay no longer than ten years and probably considerably less time. He wants to see his plan for reorganization implemented and working by the time he leaves.

Bromery says that at times he would like to just take off for a few days.

"I'm not the type to take a two-week vacation and just go sit on the beach. That would drive me straight out of my mind. Some people know how to relax, I guess, but I don't. If I were to take off I'd probably go do something concerning geophysics," says Bromery.

And here another side of the man stands out: Bromery, the geophysicist, who brings ore samples to his office and keeps his bookshelves stacked with books on geology and geography.

Bromery starts each day at 7:00 a.m. when he gets up to have breakfast with his 13-year-old son, David, and drive him to school. Then he returns home for breakfast with his eight-year-old son, Chrissy, the youngest of his five children.

"Over breakfast Chrissy gives me advice on how to run the University," says Bromery.

"Chrissy's favorite place on campus is the library. He'd like to tell the people who work in the library how to run it. He thinks you ought to be able to go in there and have the librarians read books to you rather than having to read them yourself," Bromery says.

Each weekday morning Bromery's secretary types up a three by five card with his schedule for the day. His days are usually filled with meetings.

He does not take a regular lunch hour, but meets with people over that meal.

From 5-6:30 p.m. Bromery goes through the mail that has accumulated on his desk and then goes home to supper.

"At 8:00, if all the streakers have passed, I go to work in my office at home, answering mail and reading newspapers," says Bromery.

If he has time, Bromery likes to listen to jazz or read from the works of W.E.B. DuBois.

He calls DuBois, "a perfect master of the English language whose basic philosophies are in agreement with my own.

"DuBois wrote in 1908, but it sounds as if it were written in 1980. He worked on every single word of every single sentence to make his work perfect. I admire that."

Bromery says that he never goes to bed with a problem on his mind, but always makes decisions before retiring.

"I'm not going to take my work to sleep with me," he says.

During the academic year he says that he very seldom has a complete weekend free. Friday nights and Saturdays are sometimes taken up by Board of Trustees meetings (he is a trustee at Hampshire College, Fairfield University and Mark Hopkins College), and by meetings with President Robert Wood.

He says that he reluctantly deals with business on Sunday afternoons. For the Bromery family, Sundays are usually days to sleep late and to attend noon mass at the Newman Center.

In the fall of each year Bromery teaches a geophysics class.

Randolph W. Bromery was born 48 years ago in Cumberland, Maryland. He has three brothers and a sister. His grandparents lived in the same house with his immediate family and his great-grandparents lived across the street. He says that his family was "very close."

Bromery's father worked off and on as a jazz musician, a waiter, a janitor and a chauffeur.

From his father, Bromery says he learned to approach each situation in his life in terms of his long-term goals. He also learned a love of music, especially jazz, and played the alto saxophone for a time.

He says that he remembers being envious of his brothers and sister because they had dreams. He has never had a dream that he can remember.

Feedback on the Ground

Sticc, short for Brendon Stechini, rode his bicycle over five wooden ramps and through five flaming barriers, last Tuesday night at Southwest tunnel.

Brendon Stechini is a first year graduate sculpture student whose high energy performances equal his high energy personality. Sticc set up a situation where he felt he could channel the audience's responses in a certain direction. He created a caricature, "Sticc", the fabulous man with his fantastical bicycles. And yet the caricature exists within him.

Stechin played a type cast role. As he said: "An artist has to be a type-cast out of realizing one's own self, whereas an actor that type casts is looked upon negatively." The artist's self is integrated into his work.

The audience could have been at a football game, or an automobile stunt show. They seemed, as Sticc said, infatuated with the act, but only superfically and their shouts and screams were their own perceptions of how their behavior should be.

Sticc spoke of two levels within the audience, the artistically informed, and the passersby. This, then created a situation where the audience looked at the audience.

Sticc raced up and down teasing a dog with a bone and the audience yelled for the five flaming barriers and for Sticc to fall. Brendon felt the audience's expectations and described the audience as "teasing him with a bone as he was partially dependent on their responses. He also carried the audience's bone as they anxiously awaited his performance.

Stechini was dealing with a self that everyone could relate to on some level. Each person experienced the performance at a level with their own past or present experiences. However, the only real, rather than "staged envolvement" as that of those who knew the Brendon Stechini playing "Sticc."

COME CRAWLING TO TRUTH

The Raven and the Hummingbird
(from Kanas Songs)
by Marc Berman

on a certain morning in the midst of blossomtime last; when the sun had ascended perhaps a quarter to midday, there perched a raven atop the bottom branch of his favorite birch tree. this raven was a bird of the lazier persuasions, and for a sporting time, he was content to simply rub his blackfeathers against the whitedust covered bark, caw the few melodies he knew, and watch the spring morn bustle beneath him on the forest floor. he loved to preside over the passion, purpose, and industry below, and was in fact, an excellent judge of creature character.

to a squadron of bees, hurrying in precise cheverons from the honeysuckle to their hive, the raven gave his cautious greetings. he offered prophesies of good health to the opossom hanging with her fifteen newborn young from the oak just across from him. a fieldmouse who had devoured hers at birth moaned softly and he added his grief to cushion her woe. the forest was tender that morning. blooms of hyacinth, magnolia, honeysuckle, and blackcherry sweetened breath with a swirling, lusty essence. all his stationary activities were making the raven more than a tidbit hungry, so he prepared for a quick sojourn to the nearby homestead for a luncheon on-the-run of fresh sprinkled corn seed. he stretched and yawned and scratched his beak, sneezing not once, but twice when the whitedust on his wing's tip irritated his nose. "sneezes always come in twos," the raven announced to himself. "in twos, in twos, in twos."

preferring to liftoff with a hopping start, the raven plunged off his branch and eased to earth with wings fanning. about eleven hops in front of him stood a low honeysuckle bush. seven, perhaps eight hops were needed, and a few sniffs of the flowers would be a treat as he rose above the bush. "to munch my lunch; seeds to crunch," he rhymned (he could be ridiculously poetic at times), and commenced his hopping.

five hopes he took and stopped flat in his crowfeet tracks. before his black raindrop eyes, a lone hummingbird was suspended beside a honeysuckle, gently poking the blossom, and hastily sipping the nectar. the raven had never seen a creature quite so graceful and lovely as this hummingbird. and never had he heard as sweet and pure a song as she sang. "you hum as if the nectar you drink lines your rubythroat with silk," the raven called after the hummingbird as she sped to the nearby blackcherry tree beside the swollen creek.

oh, how the hummingbird swayed, floated, and danced before the raven; she would rise and fall and hover and sail like an emerald feather in the wind. and she would never neglect or overlook a single pool of nectar in the heart of any single bloom. "how wonderful and kind it would be if i could drain the blackcherry, and never suffer the flight for seed again; how it would be if i could share the blossoms with this tiny new love of mine. a blackbird in blackcherry," he sighed. "and the nectar will let me sing."

"i am falling in love with you," confessed the raven to the hummingbird, who fluttered less than a bluebird's wingspan away. "will you lunch with me this day?"

"lunch with you," whispered the hummingbird, "how could that be? while i sip nectar, you must steal seed." she gazed at his beak, his feathers and feet. "how reckless, tortured, and clever you seem. you must mock the farmer's rifle to feed. and though i would come i would be afraid. to swallow, my mouth is too small; to crunch, my beak too weak. i am forced to take nectar, and the blackcherry awaits."

scratching his brow, the raven spoke; "little hummingbird, you do not understand. i wish to taste the purple fragrance of blackcherry, and never again a seed. teach me to hold myself beside the tree. i will learn if you would lead."

"then watch me close and repeat what you see. and remember if you fall, you may drown in the creek," warned the hummingbird. she rose like a mapletree whirlybird in reverse.

her wings flayed at the air nearly as fast as a dragonfly's, and she nestled her head into the blackcherry blossom's face to suck the sweet from the flower's well. then backing away, she turned around, "it is simple, my hungered love. more simple than it seems."

"one more question, answer please. when i sip nectar, thereby changing my fate, will you then be my mate?"

the hummingbird came to rest upon the raven's wing, and caressing his feathers, softly hummed, "there would be no eggs or new hatched peep; yet if you do sip, our love will keep."

the raven flew to the branch above the flower he chose, so that he could lower himself to the mouth of the bloom. he slipped off the branch carefully, struggling for a flash instant to dip his beak into the nectar before falling into the gonerushing water. the blossom touched, tore from the tree, and followed the raven into the creek.

"dear raven, my raven; you must see ... all that has been, always will be. the nectar you know will be salt of the sea." the hummingbird sneezed once and flew to magnolias in the nest forest.

Come and see the Ego Freaks

WHY IS STUDENT GOVERNMENT A JOKE?

Government is there to serve the people, at least that is what it was created for. People in government were put there to make sure that the people were served. Now then, armed with these two facts, ask a Student Governor some dumb questions like "What are you doing for the students?", "What do the students want you to do?", "What are you doing on your own?" Believe it or not, what people in student government think are the big issues aren't those same big issues that the students are concerned about. Why? There are two explanations. One is that we are blessed with U. Mass's finest Ego Freaks and Power Trippers in Student Government. The other is that our politicians are right when they say that we are too apathetic to tell them in plain English what we want done.

An awful lot goes on in student government that we don't know about. There is a lot of information tucked away in the student government offices that could make grown men cry. It's pretty depressing to read some of these documents that tell about how we students get the short end of the stick, but student government accepts this as part of the normal state of affairs. Student Government doesn't really go out of its way to tell us what is going on except for an occasional hyped up P.R. statement. On the other end, we don't give them too many orders from the ranks. The way it is now, we don't know what they are doing, and they don't know what we want. The result is that they do what they want. Since the politicians do whatever they feel like doing and seldom get any flack from us, Student Government is a joke.

Now then, read the U.S. Constitution and remember that it was written after a period of intense civil disobedience called the Revolutionary War. Back then, people were so concerned about the doings of government that the problem was not finding out what the people wanted, but getting them to shut up. However, this brings up a flaw in our government (national, state, and student). Unfortunately, the designers of the Constitution figured that people would always be interested in their government and never just take it for granted. On this assumption, the designers gave us only one tool for defending our rights and to force change in the system. It was the same tool that the British gave the colonists, allowing our own glorious war for independence.

Freedom of Speech guarantees that we can say whatever we want at any time, even question whether we want the government or not. It also guarantees that I can listen to whomever I want. However, if no one uses this freedom, if no speaks, there is no one defending us from our own apathy, or our own government. What I am saying is that speech is not just a far out right or privilege, but a necessity, because once a society ceases to speak, its members cease to exist in the eyes of the government. When people cease to exist in the eyes of the government when it makes decisions, then that government will become a totalitarian government. Need I say more? If free speech is to be effective, it requires speakers.

If you think Student Government is going in the wrong direction, then tell it so. Write articles, sign petitions. There are lots of offices in the Student Union just full of student government people who pay themselves to listen to you and do what you want them to do. If they ignore you, they don't belong there. If you ignore them, then you deserve a "fucked up" student government. Don't forget, the "Silent Majority" allowed Viet Nam, Watergate, and Nixon to exist.

Speech is the only weapon that we have to make the government deal with us on our terms. Speech is the only way to make the government serve us, instead of today's method of the government using the people to serve it. If you don't take on your responsibilities to talk and direct your government, then sit back silently and welcome Big Brother.

Sam's Legacy A Fine Vision

by Jay Neugeboren

Reviewed by Ed Smith

Jay Neugeboren's newest novel, Sam's Legacy, is a synthesis of many aspects of contemporary life. Set in New York City, it examines the problems of inter-personal relationships among parents and children, lifelong friends, and lovers. The author sees relationships in respect to larger matters; religion, history and ethics are threaded through a compelling, personal story.

The city is portrayed graphically in this novel. This is due, to some degree, to the way in which the writer has painstakingly laid out the details of the streets, the buildings and, in general, the physical characteristics of the surroundings. But the city is engaging for another reason. It assumes the dimensions of a character. At one point Sam, the main character, reflects, "Why live in a place like New York... if you didn't like having sound around you." In its way, the city talks to Sam and consoles him. It is a large, cold, impersonal place, but at the same time it can be a home and a place of reassurance.

Neugeboren, who teaches here at UMass, grew up in the city and admits to a "love-hate" feeling about it. In the course of talking to him about the novel, he said that he has a measure of hope for the American city. "Maybe when it finally hits bottom," he said, "it'll bounce back up, I hope so." This optimism is reflected to some extent in Sam's Legacy, but the decay and corruption of the city is also recognized. This decay is a metaphor, not in a strictly symbolic sense, for the decay of values in the contemporary society. Possibly the same hope can be held for values as Neugeboren holds out for the city.

Sam's legacy, his inheritance, is composed of many things. Sam's father Ben, and his friend Dutch both hold out religion to him, but Sam's faith runs in a different direction. An old time friend of Ben's, Mason Tidewater, also becomes a part of the legacy and develops a relationship with Sam which proves formidable in Sam's life.

Jay Neugeborn

The city also is involved. The people Sam grew up with, his father and his friends, have left the city. Ben leaves in the course of the novel to join his ailing brother in a condiminium in California. Sam's boyhood friends have moved to Long Island and only return to the city to make money. In the end even Mason has disappeared. Consequently, Sam is left alone to contend with his "neighborhood in transition."

Within Sam's Legacy there is another story. It is Mason's autobiographical account of his playing days in the black baseball league. Entitled My Life and Death In the Negro American Baseball League — A Slave Narrative, Mason's tale is proof of Neugeboren's skill as a storyteller. The problems a writer faces in the book-within-a-book format are many. The major one though, is that of sustaining the reader's interest. The switch from one story to another and the change of writing style often proves to be too abrupt for the reader to follow. Herman Wouk in The Winds of War uses this device to provide facual information, but fails to bring the reader through the transition. Neugeboren's success in using the device proves refreshing.

When dealing with sports, the writing in Sam's Legacy assumes an almost lyrical quality. The gentleness of Mason's personality is developed by the tone which is sustained in his narrative. Next to Sam, I found Mason the most interesting and colorful character in the book. Neugeboren, commenting on Tidewater, said, "Mason has a lack of control of certain desires and dreams." He is a pitiable man, one who is obsessed with perfection, yet would self-destruct in an attempt to reach it.

The Mason who appears in the novel proper is a different individual. He has changed with age, experience and the peculiarity of his baseball playing days. For this writer, Mason, in his complexity, is the most lasting character of the novel.

What is missing in Sam's Legacy is not so much a sense of completeness, as a sense of fullness. There are many characters, Ben's brother, Dutch, Sam's suburban friends and others of whom too little is seen. This is a criticism in the sense that the novel lacks certain dimensions, but a compliment in the sense that Neugeboren stimulates the reader's interest to the point that he wants more. Nevertheless, the writer drops hints and suggestions that should be followed up. These are minor points though, in a book which is overall a fine piece of fiction.

Sam's Legacy deals with people. It deals with faith, imagination, love and the changes which occur in life. It also deals with city and all its faces. And, above all, it deals with a personal vision of the importance of continuity from generation to generation.

The Responsive Chord

by Tony Shwartz

Doubleday Books 1973

One teacher in New Jersey applied the principle (that the student will learn to read material that relates to his life) and achieved remarkable success in teaching high school dropouts to read. Instead of using elementary reading textbooks, he employed pornographic literature as source material. He was fired.

—The Responsive Chord

The passage above is called a "grabber". It is intended to capture your attention in hopes that you will read the remainder of this review. It is also one of the many situations Tony Schwartz relates in explaining his concepts of our electronic media. You see, Tony is one of those people who feels that understanding the process of communication is 95 per cent of the ball game. He believes that the medium is the message (not massage).

In my use of a "grabber", I utilized one method of improving the communication process by hopefully lengthening your attention span and thereby, hopefully once again, increasing your comprehension of its content. This process is examined and evaluated, as well as hundreds of other more subliminal techniques, throughout the book.

Schwartz says he is an ear man, and his favorite media are those that he feels communicate best to that organ as opposed to the eye, nose or any other part of the body. As a child he couldn't read, work or do homework without the radio on. Years later, in 1946, he developed one of the first portable tape recorders in order that he be able to explore and study the beauty and intelligence behind the sounds of the streets of New York City. However, instead of taking the path of street musician (ala Moondog) or technician, leading from his innovative recording machine, he went in to advertising.

His first book, however, is a compact (160 pages) handbook of the media theory and practice that sustains the readers attention as well as any of the 5000-odd advertisements that he produced.

Schwartz is a contemporary of Marshall McLuhan, though his writing style is not constrained by the latters need to impress the reader with the legitimacy and scholarliness of his research. McLuhan draws from Chaucer, Dickens or the traditional communications academé to explain his theories. Schwartz borrows from Johnny Carson, Janis Joplin or a N.Y.C. liquor store owner to color his writings. And his conclusions are as fresh as his examples. In the tribal society formed by the communications systems of this University, McLuhan reads like the B.C. Comic strip (witty, but socially detached from the University life style) in the Collegian, while The Responsive Chord reads like McGilvray's Umies.

For example, he speaks of the social zone of television — the fact that the television viewer is detached spatially from the personality on television. That television personality is unable to stand three inches in front of the viewer and whisper intimately into his ear. Schwartz points out that there are different ways of communicating this action available to the television personality, but they can only be found in correct use of the media tools. In this way, Johnny Carson's success as a host is based, in part, on the fact that he is always closer to a microphone than any of his guests. He is thus closer to the home listener and can more easily regulate interaction between his guests and the home audience. Carson's voice, you may have noticed, is picked up by a microphone in front of him but his guests voice is picked up by an overhead microphone not visable on camera.

Media enthusiasts like me find silly things like what I just described as incredibly interesting. Even if your interests don't go entirely in this direction, this book is good reading for you. Honestly.

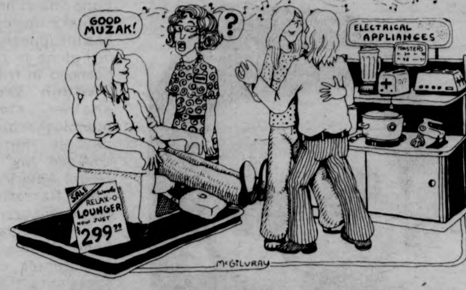
Demythologizing Muzak

Walk into any department store, grocery store or any middle-class coast-to-coast haven of Mr. Modern Shopper and Mrs. Your Name Here, and it hits you. Only for a moment, then you forget about it and pick up the ketchup or plastic raincoat you came to buy, plus a couple of other things you didn't plan on. (They're on sale, so you can save money.) It's Muzak! Remember? A derogatory term among musicians — see Lennon's "How Do You Sleep?" — but it's actually a brand name for at least a large percentage of the piped-in music, that awful bland stuff, which so many businesses seem to get off on. Well, you say, of course it's pretty awful, but I usually just turn it off in my head when I hear it. And if you have to play something in a store, it might as well be that. And anyway, it's not something I can control, right? Wrong.

Muzak is a myth, which is to say it's something which has entered our social consciousness and with which most of us associate certain things automatically — in this case, a turning off, a specific environment and a lack of control. Muzak is also intended as an element of social manipulation; "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast" and also to increase productivity, to keep moods under control and to make you buy more. Different Muzak is written specifically for different places (Factory, Office), different times of the day, etc. Combine Muzak's purpose of manipulation with the general public's passive acceptance of Muzak's mythology and you've got a pretty grim scene, friends. The time has come to demythologize Muzak...

The way to break down any myth is to play around with it, to expose and manipulate the assumptions and conditions which keep it going and to work against the effects it is intended to produce. It can be a lot of fun. The trial of the Chicago 7 did a lot to break down the American Justice myth; the events surrounding Watergate have demolished the Nixon Administration's Law and Order myth; revelations concerning the treatment of Native Americans during the last century have badly damaged the Golden Wild West myth; and so on. Demythologizing Muzak means declaring war on its specific, unexamined elements.



The first of these is that you can't control the Muzak you hear. You can. Muzak records (from the Muzak Corp.) are available and can be given as gifts, pirated, and otherwise distributed informally among those people desiring to own them. Of course, you probably won't want to play the stuff very much, but you can have it, and you can control when it is played, at least to a degree.

Even this relatively small amount of control is more powerful than it might appear at at first glance. Secondly, when Muzak is forced on you, there is no need to passively tune it out. Listen to it on purpose — it's funny anyway. Get crowds of people in the stores to block up the aisles listening, and applaud loudly after each selection. Ask the clerks if the arrangement is a bastardization of Tommy Dorsey or Glenn Miller. Who's the clarinettist on that cut, and isn't that solo a cop from Newport 1956? Contact the store manager and ask to have it turned up louder 'cause you can hardly hear it. Write letters to Muzak telling them how much you dig their arrangements of "When I'm 64" and how whenever you hear their stuff you just stop buying or working or whatever and just listen. Reverse everyone's expectations!

Are you going to control your technology or is your technology going to control you? Muzak can only work through your passive acceptance of its mythology. It's somewhere to start.

EARLY FLIGHT — JEFFERSON AIRPLANE
(Grunt CYL1-0437)
time 32:17

What will perhaps be the last Jefferson Airplane album, outside of the inevitable double record "Greatest Of" package sure to come later, stands as a curious makeshift record that moves in bits and spurts, but does, most importantly, manage to move.

I'VE SEEN THE SAUCERS!
Kosmic Visions
McGILVRAY

Information inside the cover says six of the nine songs here were recorded in 1965 or '66, so most of the album is Takes Off! and Surrealistic Pillow style. Thought you'd like to know. So while this old material is competent and all that bit, it's not very exciting or beautiful.

What this older stuff does is set you up well for the flash updating that the last three songs on side two provide. "Up Or Down" is extended mediocrity dribbling off aimlessly just like 1972-3-4 Airplane. Howsomever. Shoring up the entire record are slightly altered versions of the band's classic 'underground' single, "Mexico" and "Have You Seen The Saucers?". The brilliance of these two short songs is stunning. This is the Airplane at its finest, with Grace singing up a soar, the queer Balin-Kantner harmonies coming in fittingly and not just to be there (a malady that practically ruined the 70's Airplane), buffeting guitar from Jorma, bullish bass from Cassady and thrupping good drums from Spencer Dryden. Crackers. A thankful for another 'okay' Airplane album B-.

PRETZEL LOGIC — STEELY DAN (ABC)

(ABCD-808) time 33:04

Clean, very clean. This and Eagles must be the cleanest rock made in L.A., the clean capitol.

Funny how similar both groups are. Both are faceless, polite Popsters whose songs are marked by catchy melodies, almost superfluous lyrics whose content goes along narrowly with the simple content of the song's 'idea'. Both groups sing quite well (too well — almost unexpressively in their pristineness) and play only adequately. Both had smash first albums laden with bit hit singles, solid second albums with only one hit on them, followed by single-laden third albums.

In my weak moments, this is easy stuff to deal with, but someday when I'm feeling good and indignant about MUSIC, I'm sure I'll stomp this record to smitheroons, just like those stupid Eagles albums. An undisciplined C+.

SEVEN — POCO (Epic KE 32895) time 35:29

After side one has unfolded some expected Poco-posturizings (bouncy, massed-vocals, light ...) that waver on the verge of being comparable to Crazy Eyes' excellence in its emotional spirit, we turn the record over. But where side two of Crazy Eyes took us into new (for Poco) realms of heartfelt country-rock through Jack Ezrin's eyes, side two of Seven sounds like the most faceless, antiseptic, nameless muzik this side of America (the group and the country). A disappointing C-.

PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE — AL STEWART (Janus JLS 3063)
Total playing time: 42:38

A most lyrical album of 'folk' styled rock (or rock styled 'folk'), Past Present and Future is something of a musical history of the 1900's. Al Stewart's original idea was to write a song for each decade in this century, and though this isn't quite what happened, the end product is a most credible record, accompanied by a set of lyrics as long as your arm.

Let's put this in relevant terms. In places I'm reminded a bit of the good Donovan, Don McLean, and Ralph McTell, but Stewart's writing and vocal styles are really unlike any of these. There's a song on here, "Post World War Two Blues", which with the proper hype and exposure could enjoy "American Pie" or "Crocodile Rock" type popularity, and a couple of others (notably "Old Admirals" and "Roads to Moskow") with real AM and FM airplay potential.

Both Dave Swarbrick (the "mad fiddler", here on mandolin) and Rick Wakeman are among the many musicians who offered their talents to this venture.

Besides being a solid recording, Past, Present and Future offers the chance to brush up on some recent history as Stewart has quite a knack for name dropping. (Let us not forget that guitarist-turned-writer-turned-mandolinist Michael Bloom's "Nostradamus" predated Stewart's by some four years.) B+

ON THE BORDER — EAGLES (Asylum 7E-1004)
Total playing time: 40:25

Lacking most of the gusto which typified Eagles' first two albums, On the Border can be faulted for its repetitious ballads, twang, and general lackluster. A couple of the songs deviate from this sorry norm: "My Man", a fine soft rocker, and the country funk title track, which was written by drummer Don ("Witchy Woman") Hendley and sounds like a cross between "Witchy" and Steve Stills.

"James Dean" is the worst version of a Jackson Browne song on record, and the single "Already Gone" is a downright bore. The worst material makes the worst record, so although the harmonies and playing are as tight as ever, there's just too much familiar country-rock (i.e. Tom Waits' "Ol' '55 — done much better by Waits himself) and not enough of the infectiosity which marked and sparked vintage Eagles.

The record improves somewhat with additional listenings (which will be necessary to get the $6.98 (list) worth) but still winds up way short. Out of the neft. C

CRYSTAL SILENCE — CHICK COREA & GARY BURTON (Polydor)

Among the many musical peaks being scaled in jazz today, the most heralded and Popular conquests have for the most part been the expeditions up Mount Jazz-Rock, the leaders of which currently include musicians such as Larry Coryell, Billy Cobham, and to an extent Herbie Hancock, the paths having been, if not broken, then at least made comfortable by the late great Mahavishnu Orchestra. (This partial list includes of course only those conquerors of the Jazz face. Musicians having ascended the much less difficult but somewhat greener Rock face include the likes of Yes, Jethro Tull, Focus, Genesis, and Gentle Giant.) yet probably the most masterful and exciting of these musical frontiersmen is none of these, but rather Chick Corea, the writer-pianist extraordinaire whose amplified intricacies with Return to Forever have blown the minds and raised the consciousness of music lovers throughout both musical kingdoms. But amid the high-decibel electronic roar and the dozen-notes-a-second musical gymnastics, Corea fans are likely to miss out on his more acoustic side. Indeed, you, dear reader, may find yourself in just such a predicament. Fortunately, there is still hope: Buy Corea's lastest. an import called Crystal Silence, featuring him and Gary Burton (the latter on vibes). Guaranteed to alter your musical state of consciousness.

Clearly Corea, not Burton, is in charge here. Five of the nine numbers are his, and it is obvious so are all the arrangements. So who's complaining? Certainly not this writer. Nonetheless, Burton, in his primary capacity as soloist, is, as could be expected, consistently incredible. Although absolutely unfettered expression seems to be at a minimum here, due to the highly demanding complexities of Corea's typically formidable arrangements, neither artist experiences any difficulty in proving that he could well be without equal at his particular instrument.

To be sure, the music is anything but revolutionary. In fact, it is frequently downright pretty. Moreover, two of the non-Corea numbers (those written by S. Swallow, it says here) bear a striking resemblance to early Ramsey Lewis, among other people, complete with trills, glissandos, and keyboard-length acrobatics. Stuff my father listens to.

Okay, so it's not an album to which you can wiggle your hips, nor one whose melodies easily lend themselves to humming or whistling. Neither does it explore particularly fresh musical turf. But there's nothing wrong with portraits and landscapes, either. And it's not like the album could have been put out ten years ago. Furthermore, it's probably the most beautiful album you'll hear this year, and in fact perhaps the most insistent testimony yet to the obvious geniuses of both artists. In other words, if you're like me and you tire quickly of albums you merely enjoy, and would like one about which you can feel justifiably overwhelmed and awe-inspired, buy Crystal Silence. Or better yet, call 5-2867 and ask for "Senor Mouse". If you have any musical taste at all, you won't be disappointed.

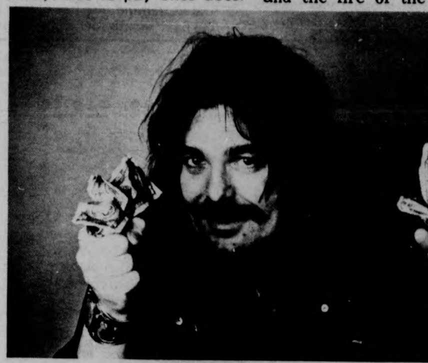
In Concert:
Captain Beefheart And A Magic Band
Starr Smith
The Performance Center, Cambridge
May 3

At first glance she looks like Maria Muldaur. She has the now typical frizzy hair, pulled away from her face on one side by an orchid. Then she starts to sing. She's no Muldaur. The only musical similarity is the folky-blues-nookie rock style. She's so good that Michael fell asleep two or three songs into the set. I wish I could have. The only one in the group who could sing was the drummer, and they turned his mike down. The bassist (and leader of the group) was too involved in emoting to hit the right notes or chords. I seriously doubt that the guitarist could count to four. No one could hear the horn section, but they didn't look like they were doing much anyway. Every once in a while the pianist would get really good, but not nearly enough times to retain interest. Starr sang one song about the togetherness of women that was supposed to be the climax of the set. It would have made the strongest woman's libber give up and be a housewife. It was murder sitting through the same set twice, but I guess one always has to pay ones dues.



Although it was an artistically subdued Beefheart that trod the boards at The Performance Center, this one did fine. The Captain chased after little in the way of Art, but kept things in the spritz-rock level everyone could enjoy (the concert ended with fifty or so of the audience howling in the streets of Cambridge. Howling for life, seeing how tickled they were with the Captain). Now I was as disappointed as some of you were at the Captain's 'coming out' (or down), but the spirit and the fire of the man fill anything he does. And that's enough.

It wasn't The Magic Band backing him up (they stayed home to family and surf), but it was A Magic Band, and with the lead guitarist shooting off little lightning bolt notes at regular intervals, the band kept up enough with Beefheart. "Blessed be his heart-Blessed be his name".

Special Honors for Del Simmons on T. Sax, flute, good nature and licorice stick (clarinet), for his runaway version of "Sweet Georgia Brown".

The Songs: "Mirror Man" — redone, refunked "Upon The My-O-My"; "Crazy Little Thing"; "Sugar Bowl"; "Abba Zaba"; new instrumental; "Sweet Georgia Brown" — instrumental; "This Is The Day"; "I Been Your Dog"; "Peaches"; "Blessed Be Your Heart.

Captain Beefheart
Cool blue eyes endless in their depth sparkle musically from the face on the stage my eyes sever to them his voice creeps up my back and with a final twist in each phrase he lifts my protective skull to let his music flow freely in i am not ready for so much new music, new ideas but because he has opened my mind this night i am full of knowledge and not the pain i expect if there were words to mirror the music i heard then language would be music and music an art beyond all arts fingers flash in tones — cords mesh tightly and eyebrows play with each other my mind is raped but i do not regret a moment and now i am full of lust for more i can't be satisfied with the music in elevators or a.m. radios i will not prostitute my ears to that which has been done before.
constantly reminding me of my musical rebirth is the picture of the Captain burnt into the retina of my mind those cool blue eyes on fire with life organize not only his Magic Band but my very unmagic thoughts.

Lules of Thumb in the Lablitory

Actually, I'm really spacedout.....

GET YOUR WINGS — AEROSMITH (Columbia)

There are many bands whose technical skill and versatility of performance far exceed their ability to write and-or find good material to execute (no pun intended). I would put J. Geils and Ten Years After in this category, but taste is so subjective that you can draw your own analogies (thus, don't be too insulted if you're an avid fan of either of the groups I just mentioned). Most of Aerosmith's material is fine, with the exception of some of Steve Tyler's often banal lyrics. So Aerosmith's problem is just opposite that of a lack of material; especially on their recordings, the lack of decent delivery is scandalous.

Aerosmith is a rock 'n roll band, and a rock 'n roll band without punch is like one of Anita Bryants' "days without sunshine." Tyler's delivery, along with that of both his guitarists is at least sufficient, and the leads ripped off in "The Train Kept A Rollin'," the album's only non-original and one of rock's finest tunes, are really exceptional on this recording. But, god, the rhythm section, especially the bass, records such unimaginative and downright undistinguished 'backdrops' that it detracts from the material and generally makes what could be exciting music BORING. Despite occasional flashes of excellence, songs that, with less stiltified delivery would be excellent, and all the promotional clout that Columbia Records can muster, this album is still deadly dull. I'll deliver no diatribe on how a rhythm section can make or break a band and on the bass guitar, the most versatile, creative and important instrument in rock (yes, synthesizer freaks, mellotron freaks and guitar freaks, you heard right) but will instead merely shake my head 'cuz it's a shame. I like Aerosmith. If you liked the first album, chances are that this one will agree with your musical taste buds also, but, without that rock 'n roll punch, the whole Aerosmith trip is, as they so aptly put it in the first song on this, their second, album, "The Same Old Song and Dance."

UNBORN CHILD—SEALS & CROFTS (Warner Bros.)

Unborn Child is a little stronger on instrumentals than past attempts by S. & C., but unfortunately it could still pass as any other of their albums at almost any given point.

The too harmonious harmonies quickly wear thin and almost unbearable after as little as two songs. Even on the vaguely refreshing tunes, and refreshing is the only word for they sound as if they are just extensions of "Summer Breeze." "Desert People", "29 Years From Texas" and "Dance By the Light Of the Moon," are worth listening to, the rest is average, common, Seals and Crofts.

—Lorien Yeslow

THE HOOPLE — MOTT THE HOOPLE (Columbia PC 32871)
Tot$l playing time: 38:42

By now, most people who would be reading this are probably pretty much polarized over the English rock assemblage known as Mott The Hoople. The group's musical direction has crystalized since the David Bowie days of Dudes and Crocus, and even more since the earlier Atlantic period, making their current sound most unmistakable, and one which either pleases immensely or irritates, depending upon the life view or Weltanschauung of the listender.

Ian Hunter's talk-sing vocals are most typical of his earlier work, marked by David Bowie or Lou Reed intonations but lacking the emotional intensity of either. The lyrics are interesting though basically unimportant, and the musicianship and material are too often repetitious (same beat-structure, same piano sound, same background vocals, familiar basic chord progression sound) to make The Hoople a great record (or Mott The Hoople a great group), but nonetheless, there is something here, something which appeals to the gut reactions, which makes the record listenable, often enjoyable, and sometimes quite good. Note that this isn't to say important or really significant, though.

There's a lot of Hoople hype and hoopla going on and it's understandable. Mott has got it in them to make it big in America (with the same kind of mystique and style which has worked for David Bowie) and The Hoople is their most convincing effort to date. "Roll Away the Stone" (Hunter called this their most commercial song) and "The Golden Age of Rock and Roll", the group's latest singles, are included, as well as the more complex "Alice" and "Marionette". Mott has also got it in them to become less trendy and to step out and experiment more, but at least for now they're more comfortable doing what they are most familiar with and here, they're doing it better than ever. I wonder if they wonder if we wonder if you wonder ... B

sically unimportant

QUEEN OF THE NIGHT — MAGGIE BELL (Atlantic SD 7293)
Total playing time: 41:36

Every time I enter my ginkdom to give Maggie Bell a spin, I'm surprised by the similarities between this record and Aretha's latest, Let Me in Your Life. Like most of the Franklin recording, Queen of the Night was done at Atlantic Recording Studios in New York under the auspices of Jerry Wexler, and subsequently, both have a similar overall quality. Like Aretha, Maggie Bell has recorded some fairly familiar tunes, and again like Aretha, has stylized them beautifully.

Maggie Bell's claim to fame up until now has been her wailing vocals for Europe's moderately successful Stone the Crows (What the Hell). On Queen of the Night, her vocals are as powerful or as sensitive as ever, but now she has an even stronger band behind her, which combined with the more popular material gives her a much more calculated chance for success in these parts.

Among the musicians giving Maggie the boost are guitarists Cornell Dupree and Hugh McCracken, pianist Richard Tee (all three played on Let Me in Your Life), drummer Steve Gadd, Reggie Young, and the Sweet Inspirations. The material varies from a tribute to Janis Joplin (and to whom, no doubt, comparisons will be made). "A Woman Left Lonely", to John Prine's "Souvenirs" to J.J. Cale's "After Midnight" to a bang up version of Ringo's "Oh My My". All mighty mighty.

So next time someone asks you what a Preacher's Daughter and a Scottish Lass have in common, you'll have some idea.

HOME, HOME ON THE ROAD — THE NEW RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE (Columbia)

Well, i aint no great critic or nothing, but i do know what i like, and i like NRPS so i'm sitting here about to make a wild stab at rewiewing their latest piece ~~of work~~, "Home, Home on the road."

It's ok really. Typical New Riders which means bouncin' country rock (i put it on and want to bounce around the room with it) "Henry, one of the NR's most "popular" tunes ~~an infamous New riders tune~~, 's back again with some nice instrumental breaks. The whole album is accented with breaks letting these fine musicians show us they can actually play their instruments (nice to know)

I was surprised to see "Dead Flowers" a Jagger and Richard's tune on here, but NRPS didn't blow it. It comes accross pretty convincingly. They sing it like it was writen for them.

The album was taped here ; there along the road and mixed in Ca, but the screaming & yelling (usually making me hate a semi-live album) come off ok ~~it's not overpowering, and the New Riders~~ It's a pretty good album well... i Like IT.

TOWER OF POWER — IN CONCERT
Julia Sanderson Theatre, Springfield
May 3

From a promoter's standpoint, the May 3, Tower of Power concert was a disaster. From a spectator's stance, the concert atmosphere was ideal.

Originally, the event was to be held in the Julia Sanderson Theatre, but due to a lack of facilities there it was moved to the Civic Center where a tiny crowd (I've seen more people in the Blue Wall) was treated to the tasteful funk of L.A.'s Maxayn and the pride of Oakland.

The eleven-piece Tower opened with the "Oakland Stroke" and whipped through a tight ninety minute set, including an encore. Considering the thousands of empty seats (just about everyone stood up front) the band played with considerable energy.

The five-piece brass section was tremendous, belting out their arranged rhythm parts and solos with great feeling. Drummer David Garibaldi set back and effortlessly held the rhythm together throughout the performance. The Tower's lead vocalist put on the show, however, moving the audience with his soulful voice. The entire band must be praised for displaying an exciting combination of musicianship and showmanship.

After playing the more popular excerpts from their albums, the Tower obliged the crowd by playing "What is Hip" for an encore.

Hopefully, the pitiful turnout was the fault of promoters and not a reflection of local music tastes (in this case a lack of it). If not, Springfield will never see this fine group again.

In Perspective:
Orleans

One of the most promising musical talents to arise lately, Orleans is four versatile musicians based in Woodstock, N.Y. Performing as a group about two years, the band has a gem in their debut album and has a second album pending release.

Their first album features all original material (co-written by guitarist John Hall and Johanna Hall) of which the songs "Tongue Tied" and "It All Comes Back Again" stand out. The vocal harmony and musicianship are excellent, but what really distinguishes the band is that the music can be played over and over without becoming tedious. This album represents the efforts of some very experienced professionals. Orleans has a clean unique rock sound which should become very popular.

At the Performance Center, April 11, Orleans played a very smooth set of music in a relaxed concert atmosphere. A small but responsive audience was delighted with the crisp guitar work of John Hall, the fine keyboards of Larry Hoppen, the funky Fender bass of Lance Hoppen and the excellent drumming of Wells Kelly.

It was a pleasure to see a band perform without exaggerated showmanship. Orleans proved convincingly that years of studio work matures and grooms musicians. It was difficult to tell who had the better time at the Harvard Garage, the band or the audience. Both groups rated an encore.

'Our Panama Canal'

OUR PANAMA CANAL — PART II

by Bob Estelle

For those of you with long memories (about a month), you'll remember that I wrote a column titled "Our Panama Canal" last April 5. You'll also remember that it caused some controversy during the following week. Since this was of a rather serious nature, I decided to do a little more research on the Panama Canal.

In doing this research, I came across a book written by a journalist — Earl Harding. Harding spent many years in Panama and wrote an excellent primary source: "The Untold Story of Panama". Unfortunately, the book is now out of print, but I can make a few copies available in the library if there is the demand. No problem.

I'll start off by quoting Articles II and III of the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty: Article II reads, "The Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation and control of a zone of land and land under water for the construction, operation, sanitation and protection of said Canal of the width of ten miles extending to the distance of five miles on each side of the center line of the route of the Canal to be constructed ... with the proviso that the cities of Panama and Colon and the harbors adjacent to said cities ... shall not be included within this grant."

Article III reads, "The Republic of panama grants to the United States all the rights, power and authority within the zone mentioned and described in Article II of this agreement ... which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign ... to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power or authority."

These articles show that the U.S. owned the canal. As for the money, the United States started off by giving the stockholders of the French company a sum totalling $40,000,000 for their digging equipment, the Panama Railroad, their concession from Colombia and the records (which were never delivered). The Republic of Panama got an initial payment of $10,000,000 and has been receiving annuities since the Canal opened. From 1914 to 1933 it was $250,000 per year. Franklin D. Roosevelt raised the amount to $430,000 in 1934 and Panama got that sum yearly until 1955 when the yearly payment was raised to $1,930,000, which Panama receives yearly.

About the treaty and the revolution. The revolution did take place on November 3, 1903. Yes, certain forces within the United States and Panama were responsible and it was hush-hush. In fact, it caused quite a scandal for Theodore Roosevelt in the years following treaty ratification. It's all spelled out in the book previously mentioned. (Hmmm, I ought to donate a copy to the library.)

The treaty was composed almost immediately after the revolution. Philippe Bunau-Varilla had forced the leader of the revolution, Dr. Manuel Amador-Guerrero, to give him the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States. It was under this title that Bunau-Varilla entered into negotiations with U.S. Secretary of State Hay. As negotiations got under way, Amador, the first Panamanian President, told Bunau-Varilla that his powers were those of a "Confidential Agent". Amador and Federico Boyd then went to the United States to look over the treaty before approving it. They arrived two hours too late — the treaty had been signed by Bunau-Varilla. Nevertheless, the two Panamanian leaders sent the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty home where the Provisional Government ratified it by Decree No. 24 on December 2, 1903. It was signed by each member of the Cabinet.

Amador and Boyd stayed in the United States in order to lobby for the ratification of this treaty. It was submitted to our Senate on December 7, 1903 and ratified on February 23, 1904. Ratifications between the two countries were exchanged on February 25.

Since then, Panama has accepted all the money that we have given them. They did ratify the treaty. It does give the U.S. complete sovereignty over Panama in perpetuity. It still is legal and binding.

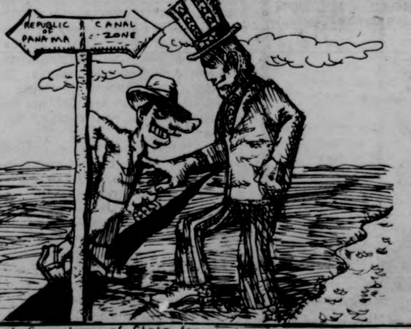
Three other treaties must also be considered. The first was passed in 1922, giving Colombia $25,000,000 for the land that is known as the Canal Zone.

The second is the Alfaro-Hull Treaty of 1936 (ratified by U.S. Senate in 1939) in which the United States gave up the right granted to them in the 1903 Treaty that had given them the power of eminent domain over surrounding areas for defense purposes. The United States also gave up the right to interfere in case of civil turmoil. Thus, two of the wrongs imposed by the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty were corrected.

At the same time this Treaty of 1936 restricted residence in the Canal Zone to American civilian and military personnel, established corridors for the conveniences of the Panamanians and prohibited new private enterprises within the Canal Zone, all of which were beneficial to Panama.

The third treaty is the 1955 Treaty. This treaty gave Panama the increased annuity, properties worth $24,300,000 located in the Canal Zone and a newly-built bridge across the Canal Zone worth $27,000,000. One of the demands from Panama rejected by the U.S. State Department was the termination of the United States' rights in the Canal Zone after 99 years. There is no 99 year lease. We still own the canal outright. We're even giving Panana $1,930,000 per year for it. Those provisions of the Hay-Bunau-Varilla Treaty of 1903 are still binding.

The fight to internationalize the Canal started when Alger Hiss, later convicted for perjury in connection with his spying for the Soviets and his Communist activities in the State Department, listed the Canal Zone as an "occupied territory." He tried to place the Canal in the hands of the pro-communist United Nations, but was stopped by Spruille Braden, Assistant Secretary of State for Latin America.



Below The Salt cartoon by Dick Garrett

Radicals in Panama have been trying for an International Canal Zone since that time. In the April 1974 issue of American Opinion, Latin American correspondent Harold Lord Varney gives a brief description of the movements to do so since 1960. This magazine is in the library. I suggest you have a look at it.

Thus, my position on who should have sovereignty over the Panama Canal remains the same. In fact, I'm even going a little further. The Panama Canal is outdated. Costs to renovate it would be sky-high. I would suggest looking into building another canal in Nicaragua, if that cheaper than renovating the Panama Canal. It would also remove the monopoly of a canal away from Panama. And such a canal is needed.

And something else has come up in the past month. Senators Strom Thurmond (R-South Carolina) and John McClellan (D-Arkansas) have sponsored Senate Resolution 301. If passed by the Senate, they would not even consider any treaty made by Kissinger regarding the Panama Canal.

Since the Panama Canal is owned outright by the United States, it would take an Act of Congress to give it up. Passage of Senate Resolution 301, which as 34 co-sponsors, would stop this, so it appears that the Americans have won this one.

Open House; Open Mind

At first the 15 persons dancing in creative patterns appeared like any other youthful social gathering. But there was something different going on in the incense-filled room that vibrated with the emphatic pulsations created by a bass guitar, an organ, a set of conga drums, a flute and assorted other percussion instruments.

The scene was at Arica (A-ri-ca) House, one Cook Place in Amherst. The Arica Institute is a non-profit-corporation with centers in 19 cities.

"Arica is a process", said Peggy Arent, 22, "a system of exercises that cleans the body out. It's not a belief or a dogma and there is no guru."

Arent, originally from Denver, Colorado is enrolled at Hampshire College as a part-time student majoring in Dance Therapy and Philosophy. She is an Arica teacher who, like all teachers, qualified for the position by taking a 40-day intensive training session. The sessions are open to all at a cost of $400.

"The fee is to pay for the teachers and Arica expenses," she said. "But you can't get rich being an Arica teacher — at least not monetarily rich."

To date, 2,000 persons have taken 40 day training sessions across the country.

According to a pamphlet printed by the Arica Institute, the teachings began in 1969.

"A group of people living on the west coast of the United States made contact with Oscar Ichazo, then a resident of the city of Arica, Chile."

"Ichazo is like a coach," said Rubin Aaronson.

Aaronson, also a black belt in Karate, came to the Arica House on April 30. He is a former media instructor from Berkeley, California interested in producing a film about Arica House.

"These teachings really can't be sold," he said. "You can't sell truth, clearly no one is making money on it."

Aaronson said he doesn't agree with the expense involved in learning Arica teachings but noted: "There are 24 Arica Houses and I don't think any are making money."

"I see Arica as a raise in the level of consciousness," said Aaronson. "And I see consciousness as a measure of awakenness."

After the 25 minute dance session the participants formed a circle. Peggy Arent began shouting chants combined with what she called "an eight count body movement."

First, the legs were thrown from side to side, then the hips, then the arms, the neck, then the shoulders, then a swim-like movement toward the center of the circle, a ceiling reaching thrust and finally a jumping session. Quickly all the 15 persons were involved.

Arent shouted:

"Sango Nini."

The participants responded:

"Sango Day."

The loud chanting was repeated five times, each time slightly softer.

Arent's cuffed green corduroy jeans flopped from side to side as she led the group in a moving circle while continually chanting. There were shouts of "yes" and "no" as the chanting changed.

"One of the aspects of Arica is group energy," Arent said. "You have your own energy plus that of the group."

Eliot Cowan, 27, is an Arica teacher and a former photographer for the Boston Globe.

"My uncle is the Editor of the Globe," he said. Cowan, originally from San Francisco is one of the older workers in the House.

According to a paper published by the Arica Institute: "No one in the Arica movement is lining his or her coffers. Oscar Ichazo is paid a salary of $2,000 a month. Seven headquarters staff members receive $1,000 a month. Members of the teaching houses draw salaries ranging from $200 to $700 a month — providing their house is self-supporting."

The Amherst Arica House holds a free "open house" every Wednesday evening.

"There's usually about 10 new persons at the open houses," said Arent.

"It becomes a life style," said Anne Worrell an Arica teacher formerly from Providence, Rhode Island.

Dan Abbott, a social worker from Northampton, was experiencing his first night in Arica House. "I feel basically good," he said.

Below The Salt photo by Kevin Mack

One first-time participant named Richard said: "I was just going to visit some friends and just stopped over." Another said "I came to see what it's all about."

"Arica is eclectic," said Arent.

The methods of Arica use a synthesis of techniques of many cultures, form ancient Eastern religions to modern scientific procedures. Meditations using mantras (internal chants), mentations (relaxing techniques) and psychological sensitivity sessions are all used in Arica training.

In 1973 Arica conducted a study to determine the effects of Arica teaching. A consulting firm of psychologists, Behaviordyne, of Palo Alto, California, was commissioned. According to Behaviordyne, the study revealed "significant gains in decreasing some 27 negative states."

"Some of these states were: anxiety, resentment, hostility, discouragement, worry and obsession," according to the study.

The "Mosaic" – A Renaissance on Campus

"A Recital of Renaissance and Baroque Music" was given May 2 in Memorial Hall before an audience of about 250 persons who were treated to an evening of beautiful music by two BDIC students.

Dressed in formal attire, Jed David Watson (tenor and recorders) and Vincent Mitchell (guitar) performed several songs from the English Renaissance including "Greensleeves" which prompted the greatest reaction because of its popularity with 20th Century music lovers. Each selection, however, was played with considerable skill and feeling.

Jed Watson projected a rich voice consistently throughout the pieces, which involved difficult phrasing and different vocal styles. He displayed his skill on the recorder as well, ably assisted on the harpsichord by Gilles Herbert, music director at the Newman Center.

On his Martin N-10 classical guitar, Vincent Mitchell was equal to the task of providing the sole musical accompaniment to the vocals. Showing fine technique and picking the individual notes and quick changing chords cleanly, Vin played the "Six Pavanas" by Luis Milan in an excellent solo effort. The audience, leaning forward attentively to catch each fragile note, responded warmly to the pieces although most of the music was unfamiliar to them.

Following the "Pavanas", a recorder group comprised of seven students from the East Meadow School, Granby performed "Sonata No. 1 in D minor for recorder and guitar" by Georg Phillip Telemann. Directed by Jed Watson, their performance concluded the recital which was followed by a wine and cheese reception.

The recital was the final event in a Spring festival of the arts by students in the BDIC program. The week long festival entitled "Mosaic" included an art and photograph display, a Jazz concert, a presentation of original films and a dance presentation.

Hopefully, these events will be attended by a larger segment of the University population in the future. They offer proof that the educational experience can involve learning, creativity, and aesthetic pleasure. There are some very talented and dedicated artists in the BDIC program who deserve our recognition. The evening of Renaissance and Baroque music was certainly a unique cultural experience for all who attended and benefited from it.

A MAN WITH A LOADED JOB

"My sister used to be able to continue her dreams from night to night. Those dreams always sounded so good and so real. Oh, how I wished I could have one," says Bromery.

Bromery did well in school but college was out of the question because his family was too poor.

After a two-year stint in the U.S. Air Force during World War II, however, he had the money provided by the G.I. Bill to pay his way.

In 1947 Bromery began work with the U.S. Geological Survey, not because of any particular interest in the field, but because he had just married (the former Cecile Trescott) and needed a job. He continued his education in night school and received his Bachelor of Science degree from Howard University in 1956.

In 1962 Bromery began work on his Ph.D. in geology-oceanography which he would receive from John Hopkins University six years later. Out of 35,000 practicing earth scientists in this country, Bromery is the only black geophysicist with a doctorate.

Bromery says that while working for the federal government, he and his white co-workers traveled around the country together. On occasion they would go out to a bar for a few drinks.

"Ultimately the chancellor is held responsible for everything that goes on."

"The other guys would get drunk or feeling good but I never did. No matter where we were I had to remain completely aware because the owners usually didn't want a black in the place.

"It would happen all of a sudden. They would either ask us to leave or I'd know that they were about to throw me out. I had to keep my eyes open all of the time," says Bromery.

"Yeah, I'm tired of it, real tired of always having to watch myself. I wish that just one day I could let down my guard and be myself," he says.

He says that he'd also like to spend a day or two in Utopia. Reminded that he would have to come back to things as they are he says, "Oh, that's right. I wouldn't like it too much then."

Bromery continued working for the Federal Government as an exploration geophysicist and a consultant in geophysics through 1970

In 1967 Bromery was hired as associate professor of geophysics at UMass and was appointed professor of geophysics and chairman of the Geology and Geography Department in 1969.

Bromery has contributed to 148 papers and maps dealing..with geophysics, and is considered to be an expert in aeromagnetometry, a technique for detecting mineral deposits from the air.

In 1970 he was appointed special assistant to Chancellor Oswald Tippo in the area of student affairs. This position was redefined as Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs that same year.

In October, 1971, when Tippo announced his resignation Bromery was appointed Acting Chancellor. He turned down a position as State Secretary of Education to accept the post.

As chancellor, Bromery has been quite active in programs designed to recruit women students and students from minority groups. He was formerly active in founding the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS).

After nearly two years on the job, Bromery says that what worries him most is the impact the job has on his family.

"We live in a glass house. I don't enjoy having no privacy, and I know my wife had to adjust to it," he says.

"We are really a city family. Washington was home to us. The last thing I'd ever want to do is live on a farm in Vermont," says Bromery.

Bromery does not like his children growing up in his home on campus because there is no real neighborhood.

"Our neighborhood is the university. There are no children here for my children to be friends with," he says.

"Chrissy goes up to Orchard Hill and just listens. I can imagine what he hears.

He gets distressed if I don't have time to fly his toy airplane with him. When I do have time we go down to the field in front of Boyden. He feels that field belongs to him. It's part of his yard.

"But he keeps on asking, 'Gee, when are we ever going to go home?'"

When he ends his term as chancellor, Bromery hopes to go back to working for the Federal Government or for private industry in the field of mining petroleum and mineral deposits.

Says Bromery, "I think this will be a very important field in the next decade or so. When the President says that America will be self-sufficient in fuel production by 1980, he must know something I don't know. We can't be self-sufficient unless we own all of the Arab countries."

Bromery says that he will leave Amherst when he leaves his job and "go home to Washington."

Look: Lucia Loosed

LUCIA: THREE WOMEN, THREE HISTORIES

by Zoe Best

Ever since the U.S. premiere at the New York Festival of Cuban Films in March, 1972 when "Lucia" was confiscated by the Treasury Department along with other films on opening night because of suspected violations of the "Trading With The Enemy Act", reviews, mostly from an "enemy" consciousness, have assailed or in exceptional cases, have acclaimed this epic trilogy. Outside of the United States the film is known and noted. Awards include The International Film Critics Prize, the Society of Italian Producers' "Golden Globe" award, the Grand Prize of the Moscow Film Festival while commendation from critics came from John Russell of The London Times, Marcel Marin in Les Lettres Francaises, Louis Marcorlles in Le Monde and Giovanni Grazzini of the Corriere della Sera.

According to the director, Humberto Solas, (born in Havana in 1942), "In the most general sense, "Lucia" is a film about people searching for certain things." These three stories of three Lucias in search and struggle cover nearly seventy years of Cuban history, starting with the struggle for Cuban indepandence from Spain in 1895. The first Lucia, aristocratic, is betrayed by her love in that struggle, is alienated, inhibited (even the music conveys tightness) and Solas says of this story. "What concerns me most in the first story is the use of love as something very ulilitarian: the perspective of love .in terms of vested interests, needs, and strategies foreign to love itself. The exploitation, the perversion of love — its utilization as an instrument... The other theme I was interested in was alienation: an individual is the product of a whole set of circumstances — the deformations, inhibitions and repressions of society "X" and morality "X"."

The second Lucia of the period during resistence against the Machado dictatorship of 1932, leaves her petite bourgoise family and forms a relationship with a progressive and joins the anti-dictatorship rebellion. The middle class clique that replaces the Machado regime reinstates corruption and thus because of opportunism, the second Lucia is betrayed and like the first, faces a personai tragedy at the end.

The third Lucia enlists her friends to insure her participation in field work and to protect her from the new husband's jealousy when she accepts tutoring from a member of the literacy brigade. (In April, 1961, over 100,000 volunteers set out to reduce illiteracy and according to UNESCO, the rate dropped from 24 percent to 3 percent of the population in a year's time.) Nora Sayre wrote in a review for the New York Times (3-1-74), "I wish that Lucia 196. might be seen by all the sexes: it's the best discussion of equality (and inequality) I've seen on the screen and the clases are clarified by comedy." The story of the third Lucia is purposely filmed without a conclusion to signify the newest phase of the people's search for an oppression-free life.

Blacks and women (see "Three Sisters: Cuban Style by Molly Haskell in The Village Voice) of this country may criticize "Lucia" from the vantage point of their particular contexts and definitions of liberation, which may not be applicable to the Cuban context. Nevertheless, anyone who is concerned with personal and social liberation should see this film as the contradictions, love and betrayal, alienation and participation, rebellion and revolution, women's and men's roles involve each Lucia as individuals and as members of a larger society.

It is interesting that the film is finally allowed to be screened in this country, corresponding to the time when the State Department authorizes Ford's subsidiaries in Argentina to sell cars to Cuba (there is presently a slump in domestic car sales) and when the National Association of Manufacturers on April 25th revealed the results of a confidential poll taken among their membership. They reported that 70 percent of those responding favored normal trade relations with Cuba. If the State Department was to end the U.S. trade and diplomatic embargo against Cuba, then we could see Solas's 1972 film, One Day In November before 1977 or without having to fly to Europe to see it.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Watergate Committee, declaring that President Nixon has no authority to forbid aides to testify about possible official wrongdoing, subpoenaed White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig Jr. a second time, for questioning about a $100,000 donation to Nixon from Howard Hughes.

"I hope the White House eventually will come to the conclusion the President is not the final arbiter of what the committee has a right to seek," committee Chairman Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., told reporters after a day-long closed session.

"The committee voted unanimously that the President and the President's counsel

The Illinois Republican gave his views to newsmen shortly after House Republican leader John Rhodes of Arizona said Nixon "ought to consider resignation as a possible option" if erosion of public confidence bars him from effectively carrying out his duties.

Pregnancy drug cause of cancer

By ROBERTA MARTONE
MDC Staff

Women in the UMass area should be alerted to the findings on an anti-miscarriage drug, dierhylstilbestrol, DES, believed to cause cancerous conditions in female offspring of mothers who took this drug during their pregnancy, said Beate Riesterer, a teaching associate in the Sociology department at UMass.

According to medical research, it is not known why DES causes these pre-cancerous conditions. A possibility is that the introduction of a synthetic estrogen, contained in DES, during the fetal stage causes changes in the epidermal cells, resulting in pre-cancerous conditions, known as Adenosis.

Offspring of the DES mothers should be tested every six months for vaginal cancer for the remainder of their lives.

According to Kay Weiss, medical researcher and founder of Advocates for Medical Inforamtion, the pap test is not sufficient for the detection of adenosis. (Adenosis is a lesion or rash which can be precancerous.)

Ms. Riesterer stressed the need for availability of DES testing procedures on campus or in the surrounding area. A Colposcopy test can detect the presence of adenosis by use of a special light mounted on a microscope.

Ms. Riesterer said another test known as the Shiller test should be available. This test is an iodine stain that is coated on the vaginal walls. The cancer cells, if present, don't stain.

Ms. Riesterer emphasized the relative simplicity of these tests, saying, "If the adenosis is detected, something can be done about it." She also said adenosis had been detected in a few males.

DES is also present in the morning-after pill, (a pill which, if taken 72 hours after intercourse, is 60 percent effective in preventing pregnancy.)

Ms. Riesterer said that a DES offspring can "never take estrogen or birth control pills, as it will only add to the disease."

In 1971, the FDA was asked to alert women of the drug findings. But, said Ms. Riesterer, they felt it would casue women to panic.

"I would rather have a woman panic and insist that her physician give these two tests, than have her remain ignorant of the fact that she may have cancer.", she continued.

In 1972, the FDA banned DES from cattle feed, but did not ban the 250 milligram dose of DES for women in the morning after pill.

After complaints from a women's group, Advocates for Medical Information, the FDA lifted the ban

12,000 gymnast boosters petition for high priority

By BEN CASWELL
MDC Staff

Yesterday afternoon the "gymnastics committee", consisting of gymnasts and gymnastics supporters, presented 12,000 petition signatures to David Bischoff Associate Provost and Dean of the School of Physical Education.

Also somewhat unexpectedly the committee got to present other copies of the signatures to Chancellor Randolph Bromery and President Robert Wood.

In a quite formal ceremony in the board chambers room in Whitmore Hall about 30 supporters looked on as Jay Aronstein and Steve Scuderi, unofficial heads of the "gym committee" presented Dean Bischoff with the petitions.

Scuderi said "Our objective is too make our priority a higher one than it is on the list of positions available in the Athletic department.

There are positions available but to what program or programs they will be offered to is still uncertain."

In discussion after the presentation Scuderi also stressed the time factor involved in the decision process.

"IF this thing is not resolved by the end of the summer at the very latest", he said two things will happen that will be quite detrimental to the team. One, any freshmen that we were going to get we will not get, we will have no freshmen and two, Gone Whelan will transfer."

Aronstein read a formal statement telling Bischoff what the petitions were about and included in that statement was the fact that, "the decision was one that was made in a long range type of policy plan without student consideration."

Dean Bischoff sat through the presentation fairly expressionless and the somewhat somber tone of the presentation had been set not only be the emotional involvement of those concerned but also by the fact that Bischoff had set a time limit on the activities.

"No debate" he told Aronstein before the presentation but he did field questions for about a half hour although with an eye on the clock.

Bischoff said that he felt that the petition presentation was "indicative of a great deal of sentiment on the part of some genuinely concerned students and faculty."

"It was hard to say whether or not the petitions will have any affect on the present decision," he added, "because that is up to the Athletic department."

When asked by Aronstein if there were two faculty positions available in the Athletic Department Bischoff responded, there is one position that will be available to the athletic department that is still uncommitted. We have decided not to make a decision about what that position will be until we are able to make a more intelligent and comprehensive study of how to use the position."

Discussion continued and most of it centered around the fact that in putting off the decision as far as the quality of the program was concerned committee members felt that that was the same as keeping the decision as its exists.

Two persons that will be greatly affected by the decisions were freshmen gymnasts Peter Lusk and David White. Both said that if things do, in fact, turn out as they seem to be headed they will both transfer from UMass to another school with the gymnastics caliber that UMass once held.

Pres. Wood:

'Strike contact hours provision'

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

"We hope the whole contact hours provision will be stricken from the University budget by the joint legislative committee," stated President Robert C. Wood before yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

In the discussion that followed, Wood and David Linton, Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs at UMass, answered the faculty's questions regarding the budget and merit pay.

Other Fac-Sen business included a second reading of by-law revisions and the approval of an interdisciplinary major in Arts and Sciences.

In prefacing his remarks, Wood thanked the faculty for their support in budgetary matters.

"At present, the University budget has passed the House and Senate and comes informally before the joint comittee today," said Wood.

As passed by the Senate, the budget was trimmed to $64 million and certain provisions were attached, among these a stipulation that professors spend 12 hours per week in direct contact with students.

"We did not believe that this language could be allowed to stand," the President stated. "Finally we concluded in a compromise (9 contact hours per week) but livable situation," he continued.

Eleven to receive honorary degrees June 1

Eleven distinguished men and women will receive honorary degrees at the 104th Commencement Saturday, June 1, in Alumni Stadium.

They are the photographer Ansel Adams, former UMass Trustee Dennis M. Crowley, Harvard East Asian Studies Professor John K. Fairbank, Springfield Daily News Editor Richard C. Garvey, Texas Instruments Co. director Cecil H. Green, President Dorothy I. Height of the National Council of Negro Women, former UMass President Jean Paul Mather, UMass Catholic Chaplain Msgr. David J. Power, Congressman Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr., Former U.S. Attorney General Elliott Richardson and agricultural scientist Cecil H. Wadleigh.

Richardson, as previously announced, will be the main commencement speaker. A former Massachusetts lieutenant governor and attorney general, he resigned as U.S. attorney general last October after the firing of Watergate Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox. He will receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Ansel Adams, now in his 70s, has been winning awards and national recognition for his photographs since 1912. He has exhibited in his native San Francisco and all over the country, is the author of 15 books and is world famous for his nature photos. His awards include a Guggenheim Fellowship, a Muir Award from the Sierra Club, a Conservation Service Award from the U.S. Department of the Interior, and many others. He will receive an honorary Doctor of Fine Arts degree.

Quad to house students who wanted quiet dorm

By AVIS YUNI
MDC Staff

Steve Dimock, the Northeast Area Director, has offered to place students in dorms in the Quad, a reputedly quiet residential area since the plans to establish a quiet dorm in the fall were not completed prior to room choosing.

Ann Marie Plaziak, co-ordinator of the "quiet dorm" project told the Collegian yesterday that there had been a lack of time and interest preventing the establishment of a "quiet dorm" this fall.

She said that the project to establish this had begun half-way through the semester, not allowing enough time for publicity.

Dimock explained that the Quad (Northeast) is considered one of the quieter areas, so he has offered to place the 25-30 people who wished to live in a "quiet dorm" in the Quad.

Three dorms there still have space for upperclassmen (each dorm reserves a certain amount of space for incoming Freshmen) — Mary Lyon, Hamlin, and Thatcher. All three are single sex (non-co-ed) dorms.

"We would like to feel that we offer a diversity of life styles," Dimock said. He said that a "quiet dorm" would offer students more of a choice if it could be developed.

Dimock said that the difficulty is that they don't have any one dorm in the Quad commited to being a "quiet dorm" but there is an interest in developing one.

He said that he couldn't guarantee the establishment of a "quiet dorm", but if they could get all the students who wish one into the Quad there would be a base to work from in the Fall semester to try to develop this.

New proposed dorm system to meet students' needs

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
MDC Staff

A special Whitmore committee has come up with a new proposal for reorganizing the residence hall system.

The proposal is intended to set up a structure "capable of better meeting the needs of resident students," according to its written transcript.

It has three main objectives:

1. To combine the business and student affairs functions of the residence hall system.
2. To localize the decision making process so that the students can have their demands met more readily.
3. To combine food services and residential services into one enterprise.

This proposal was made after an earlier proposal made by several top administrators, including Ken Dean and Dr. Gage, was rejected by area governments and staff.

Charles Adams, director of Project 10, said the response to the new proposal has been "negative." He believes it will be pushed through anyway, because Dr. Gage, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, wants it very badly.

Adams described the proposal as "just a managerial structure imposed on the present situation that doesn't deal with the real problems of people in the residence hall system."

The committee writing up the new proposal is headed by Dan Fitzpatrick, Associate Dean of Students, and includes 12 people, two of whom are students.

Dean Fitzpatrick said there is no set date for implementing the proposal. He claims it will be arrived at "through an evolutionary process."

Dr. Gage and Fitzpatrick both want the proposal implemented as soon as possible.

The proposal recommends the establishment of a "Director of Kill contact hours in budget

After a letter from Secretary of Education Cronin was received by the Ways and Means Committee of the Senate, the committee lowered their proposal from 12 to 9 contact hours.

Linton said, "Regardless of the details of this bill, it is an unwarranted intrusion by the legislature into academic affairs."

"We must make clear that the educational 'house' is one that is already in order," he added.

In response to a question by Senator Joseph Larson, asking if all components of the University were tightening their belts, President Wood replied, "There is no doubt we are in the 'belt tightening' stage."

"This University is special in that it has continued to grow in all past years, but on the administrative line we have stayed at the same level for some time," Wood remarked.

Senator Walter Denny asked, "Would you suggest that the faculty might reconsider collective bargaining, in view of possible cuts in merit pay and the dictating of teaching hours?"

"As far as collective bargaining, the disposition of the legislature would probably not be affected by an organized effort by the faculty to move for collective bargaining," Wood answered.

Under old business, Senator George Sulzner, chairman of the Rules Committee, reread the new by-law revisions to the Fac-Sen.

Further by-law changes will be discussed at the Fac-Sen meeting next Thursday.

In a motion from the Academic Affairs Committee, an interdisciplinary major in Arts and Sciences received approval.

New area studies which fall under this college will not have to be separately approved by the Board of Trustees.

Carnival features calypso

By RUDOLPH JONES
Black News Service

I met a tourist dame
The night she came;
curiously, asking about my country.
She said, "I heard about carnival;
It's a Trinidad bachanal.
Will you show me how it is done.

It's morning; but already the sun is high in the sky. Pulsating sheets of heat engulf the crowds below. The people mull around the streets stiffling what little breeze there is in the air. An occasional fan flutter in the thick of the crowd, but no one leaves. Everywhere there is the feeling of excitement. The small number of the crowd magnified into a huge din. Steel drums can be heard approaching; as they draw nearer one can see thousands of costumed bodies jumping to the beat of the music. The dancing is contagious, and it spreads to the on looking crowd. It's j'ouvert morning---the first day of carnival.

Go in town j'ouvert morning
Find yourself with a band
See the way the natives dancing
Hug up tight with a man

Carnival is a three day long affair; and the medium of carnival is the calypso. However, calypso is not a three day affair it's a year long expression of the people of the Caribbean. No subject is sacred to the calypsonian and any topic from politics to sex. And the greatest calypsonian is the Mighty Sparrow.

Mighty Sparrow

Sparrow has appeared not only in performances in the Caribbean, but also in the U.S. and Canada. And anywhere he has gone the reception has always been a series of spontaneous ovations.

As a calypsonian, Sparrow can be serious:

Martin Luther King is dead and gone
There is no one else to lead us on...
It's going to be a long hot summer
Discrimination can't go on

He can be sloshy:

Why do I keep fooling myself over a love already gone
Only a fool breaks his own heart.

He can be wry: (in reference to rumors of his death)

Extra! Extra!
Read all about it!
Sparrow Dead
Who kill de Sparrow
nobody knows
I heard he had yellow fever
and a double dose of lukemia

But mostly his form of calypso is ribald humor

Tell you sister to come down quick
I have something here fer she
Tell she it's Mr. Bentwood
Dick, the man from Sandy Grandy
She know me well
Ah gi' she already
Go on go on tell she Mr.
Bentwood called

Taken in totality, the songs of Sparrow represents the life styles of the people of the Caribbean. It focuses on their joys, their sorrows, their humor and their sentiments. The name Sparrow conjours up a mirade of images to the Caribbeans. And, it is with fondness that we think of him for he so well understands us as a people.

This Friday, Sparrow will be performing at the Student Union Ballroom tonight at 8:00 and we would like to extend an open invitation to all those that are interested in the life style of the people of the Caribbean, or even those folks who are just mildly curious to come and join in the fun as the West Indian students bring carnival to Amherst.

The West Indian carnival, which will begin at 8:00, is the final event in the Fine Arts Council's 1973-74 program and also the last event in its Third World Cultural Series. Tickets are $2 for UMass students and $4 for others and are on sale now at the Fine Arts Council Box Office at Herter Hall.

40 dieters lose lbs., gain money

By KRIS FLETCHER
MDC Staff

Yesterday marked the last day of dieting for some forty contestants participating in the annual Diet Marathon. Contestants "weighed in" on April 18. After finding as many friends, organizations, and businesses as they could to sponsor them for each pound lost, participants dieted for three weeks. The money collected from these sponsors will be placed into a trust fund for the elimination of architectural barriers on campus.

The fund will be used to make the campus more accessible to handicapped people.

A request for a 4&1 Federal grant is presently being compiled by students and administrators through the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs. If granted the Federal government will match four times, the money collected in this trust fund to make the campus accessible to all persons. $75,000 is the goal of this trust fund, to which other sources have already contributed.

A few contestants were embarrassed to even show up for the "weigh out". (Possible weight gain??) Two brave souls showed up at the "weigh out" only to discover no pounds had been lost. But most were happy participants who had lost an average of seven pounds each. There were several people who lost an incrediably large amount of weight for a three week period.

One contestant, Bob Rossman, did exceptionally well. His smile told his whole story (and so did his waistline!) To his delight and to everyone else's amazement, Bob had lost twenty-eight pounds. His approximately eighty sponsors were all very proud of their dieter; although none of his sponsors had exactly planned on such a large contribution!

A special thanks goes out to all those generous people who supported the dieters in this marathon. Top money sponsors included the commuter assembly, Stop and Shop, Woolco, and Friendly's Ice Cream. While Friendly's manager was eager to be a sponsor, his dieter found it impossible to resist those banana splits which were strangly enough on the house.

NIXON CRISIS DEEPENS . . .

Haig . . .

have no right under the Constitution and the laws of the United States to instruct Gen. Haig not to answer questions," Ervin said.

On orders of Nixon, Haig refused in an appearance under subpoena last week to answer any questions about the Hughes money.

Earlier Thursday, Nixon's close friend and occasional business partner, Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo, was questioned about the money by the committee.

Rebozo has sworn that he received the funds in Nixon's behalf but held them untouched for some two years before returning them in order to spare Nixon any embarrassment. He also swore Nixon was not aware of the donation until after it was returned.

In court Thursday Rebozo's lawyers argued in a complaint that the committee and its staff were harassing Rebozo in their investigation, but the matter was smoothed out between the parties later in the day.

"The President has now power to order Gen. Haig to withhold information about political activity, political contributions or criminal wrongdoing," Ervin added. And he said Haig, as "a military man accustomed to taking orders," was entitled to a second chance to testify.

It was on Nixon's express orders, in a letter presented to the committee by Haig, that the presidential aide refused to answer questions on the gift in his previous appearance last week.

Ervin declined to say whether the committee would vote Haig in contempt if he again fails to answer questions.

Charles G. "Bebe" Rebozo, Nixon's close friend who handled the $100,000 on the President's behalf, went before the committee earlier Thursday.

Rebozo has said he received the $100,000 from Hughes in 1969 and 1970 but insists he held it untouched in a safe deposit box for three years before returning it to Hughes.

Both Ervin and Rebozo told reporters in separate news conferences that the committee and Rebozo had worked out an agreement. Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., committee vice chairman, said the committee had agreed to narrow the scope of its subpoena of Rebozo's financial data.

Transcripts sell

By United Press International

The transciptions of President Nixon's Watergate conversations have turned into the hottest property in U.S. publishing in years, with sales already pushing the million mark.

Republican . .

said they have decided to wait until after a House vote on impeachment.

Rhodes, when asked if the GOP leaders might personally press upon Nixon a suggestion that he quit, seemed to choose his words carefully as he replied "I know of no definite plan at this time."

At the White House, deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said Nixon "is determined to remain in office despite the comments by some and the attacks by others."

Calls for the President's resignation or impeachment also came from the Chicago Tribune, the Omaha World-Herald, and William Randolph Hearst, editor-in-chief of the Hearst newspapers. All have supported the President in the past.

In an editorial in its Thursday editions, the Tribune said: "We urge the House to act quickly on a bill of impeachment."

Much of the latest flood of anti-Nixon reaction seemed touched off by the release last week of edited transcripts of conversations about Watergate the President had with his aides between Sept. 15, 1972 and April 27, 1973.

Thr Tribune said the transcripts, released by the White House in response to a Judiciary Committee subpoena demanding tapes of 42 presidential conversations, depicted Nixon as "humorless to the point of being inhumane. He is devious. He is vacillating. He is profane. He is willing to be led. He displays dismaying gaps in knowledge. His loyalty is minimal."

Military high; president low

ANN ARBOR, Mich. [UPI] — The military was ranked the highest and the presidency the lowest in a public opinion poll conducted last fall on the question of how good a job each of 15 institutions was doing for the country, it was announced yesterday.

The survey was held by the University of Michigan Institution for Social Research. A total of 1,435 persons were questioned across the nation.

The study revealed that on a nine-point scale, the military had a rating of 5.50, just barely above the 5.48 rating for colleges and universities. The presidency and the administration received a rating of 3.3.

Rep. Peter Rodino (D-N.J.) reads statement opening House Judiciary Committee inquiry into impeachment of President Nixon yesterday before TV cameras. Session went behind closed doors a few minutes later.

Judiciary hearings begin. . .

containing an index of all the material collected by the impeachment inquiry stall.

Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., wielding a big gavel, opened the hearing eight minutes late with a pledge to proceed with "wisdom, decency and principle."

Then the committee voted 31 to 6 to close the session to television and press coverage and for the next three hours it listened to John M. Doar, special impeachment counsel, summarize what the 154-man staff had concluded about Watergate and the question of Nixon's involvement in the scandal.

Nixon's chief Watergate lawyer, was allowed to sit in on the hearing and was the first participant to arrive at the committee room.

Accompanied by two other White House lawyers, St. Clair said he planned to opening statement and "neither have I been asked to make one."

Asked if he considered the Judiciary Committee's role equivalent to that of a grand jury, St. Clair replied, "Clearly not."

The 150 seats in the committee room filled early, 90 of them with reporters and most of the others with relatives or friends of committee members.

A long line had formed outside the hearing room with people hoping to attend the historic session. Only 10 got in.

Dominated by Democrats the membership of the committee numbers 38 and includes two women, three blacks and a Catholic priest, all of them lawyers.

A few congressmen said after the presentation that they would like to subpoena the tapes of conversations which Nixon held with his former chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman, before March 26, 1972, to determine whether Nixon had prior knowledge of the break-in or the original installation of bugging devices at the Watergate Democratic headquarters.

One committee member said Doar began the hearing with 30 minutes of details about the organizational structure within the White House. It was so tight, the congressman said, that it raised doubts about whether Nixon could have been ignorant of the pre-Watergate planning.

Rodino said the phase dealing with the Watergate break-in and cover-up "is one of six areas of our inquiry. We expect to continue our inquiry until each area has been thoroughly examined," he said.

After the committee doors closed to the public, members of the panel were expected to examine, among other evidence, a secret grand jury report on the President's Watergate role, turned over to the inquiry by U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica.

Only Rodino and Hutchinson, along with chief counsel John Doar and minority counsel Albert Jenner, had an advance look at the grand jury report.

Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., who said Tuesday he had found evidence that the President had committed an impeachable offense in the 1,300 pages of Watergate transcripts Nixon has released, fought to keep the hearing open.

He said the Watergate scandal came into being because the government operated behind closed doors. When he was outvoted, Rodino ordered the room cleared. Even the bulky television cameras had to be wheeled out.

Rodino squints; cameras roll

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., squinting into the hot television lights, slammed his gavel three times at 1:00 p.m. yesterday and formally opened House Judiciary Committee hearings on the impeachment of President Nixon.

Only a half hour after the historic proceeding began in Room 2141 of the Rayburn House Office Building, television cameras and newsmen were banished and the hearings went into executive session.

To many the scene was a replay of the Senate Watergate hearings last summer. About half the 200 seats in the Judiciary Committee hearing room were reserved for newsmen. Most of the remaining seats were reserved for the staff of the committee members, leaving only 11 for the general public.

Police said hundreds of would-be spectators were turned away.

The first person on the line for the few public seats was Charleen Treffinger, 25, of Joplin, Md. She arrived four hours before the start of the session.

She was no stranger to Watergate-related proceedings. Miss Treffinger attended all but one of the Watergate committee hearings last summer and has been at many of the U.S. District Court proceedings related to the scandal.

Rodino had hoped for a short orderly opening. He expected to go immediately into executive session after he and the committee's ranking Republican, Edward Hutchinson of Michigan, made brief statements.

But as soon as the motion to close the meeting was made, Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., interrupted.

"Mr. Chairman, point of order, point of order," Conyers said, using a phrase reminiscent of Sen. Joseph McCarthy at the Army-McCarthy hearings 20 years ago.

But in contrast, Conyers, who favored a public session, made his point in calm, measured tones. After a brief hassle, the committee voted to close the session with only six members in opposition.

Before the session, Nixon's chief Watergate lawyer, James D. St. Clair, and two assistants entered the room and were immediately surrounded by reporters.

"I didn't have anything to do this afternoon so I thought I'd come over here," Nixon's lawyer said. As he continued to joke with newsmen, custodians hastily dusted off a small table in the front of the committee where the White House lawyers will be seated during the procedure.

U.S. may halt Turkish aid to protest opium

WASHINGTON [UPI[— Two senators and three House members joined yesterday in introducing a resolution to deny all military and economic aid to Turkey if the Turks resume opium production.

"There are some prices that are just too high to pay for friendship," said one of the sponors, Sen. James L. Buckley, R-N.Y.

Turkey decided in March to plant a "seed crop" of opium poppies after a two-year total ban on the crop. Turkish officials said they wanted to retain the option of going back to full scale poppy farming and could not store the old seeds any longer.

Buckley and Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D-Minn., cited what they said was a massive drop in heroin supplies in the United States during the Turkish ban. They expressed fear this trend will be reversed if Turkey decides, as expected, to resume full poppy production this fall.

The aid cutoff proposal was sponsored in the House by Reps. Lester Wolff, Charles B. Rangel and Joseph P. Addabbo, all New York Democrats.

"Before the Turkish ban, an estimated 80 per cent of the illegal heroin in this country came from Turkey," Mondale said. "Since the Turkish government imposed a ban on opium production opium production, the number of estimated heroin addicts in the United States has dropped, according to some sources, more than 60 per cent."

Mondale said "even the administration can be proud of its record" in pressuring the Turks to stop poppy growing, but that the White House position appears to be changing.

"The drug companies are putting on the pressure and claim a shortage in the availability of opium" for legitimate uses, Mondale said. As a result, he said, "the administration is considering starting up opijm production in the United States for legitimate purposes."

He said if U.S. pressure is not brought to bear, the Turks will resume production, "the price of heroin in our streets will to down again, and thousands of our children are going to be hooked all over again."

Buckley said he does not want U.S.-Turkish relations to continue "at the expense of even one human life that might be ruined if the opium begins once more to make its poisonous way from Turkey to the veins of a young New Yorker or any other American. There are some prices that are just too high to pay for friendship."

Iceland government falls

REYKJAVIK, Iceland [UPI] — Prime Minister Olafur Johannesson resigned yesterday, forced out by strikes, inflation and a controversy over a U.S. military base. He set new elections for June 30.

The resignation last week of a key cabinet member, Bjoern Jonsson, a union leader as well as the minister for communications and social affairs, cost Johannesson's coalition government its majority in the 60-member Althing Parliament. That compelled him to call new general elections after three years in office.

In a 2 a.m. speech to the Althing, Johannesson announced that he had informed President Kristjan Eldfarn he was unable to form a new majority government and that Eldjarn had accepted his resignation and dissolved parliament.

Cabinet minister Jonsson said he had resigned because he could not support a government proposal designed to curb the inflation spiral. Government sources said the proposal included a ban on wage increases over 20 per cent and a general price freeze.

With Jonsson, president of the Federal Union of Workers, went three other parliamentary members of the Liberal Left party. That cost the government its majority.

A central issue in the coming election campaign will be the U.S.-manned North Atlantic Treaty Organization base at Keflavik. The government has proposed that the 3,300 American troops there be withdrawn in stages over the next two years.

One controversial function of the base is that it serves as a keystone of American surveillance of Soviet vessels in the Atlantic.

The Communist party, with two cabinet ministers in the current government, wants Iceland to get out of NATO. Conservative political groups want the small island nation to stay within the alliance.

Iceland also has been plagued recently by strikes.

Kissinger briefs Saudi King on disengagement progress

CAIRO [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger flew to Saudi Arabia and back to Cairo yesterday, campaigning to win influential Arab support for his drive to separate the warring armies of Israel and Syria.

Kissinger interrupted his Middle East peace shuttle to give the governments in Jerusalem and Damascus time to study each other's latest proposals for disengaging troops on the volatile Golan Heights.

He ended two complete round trips between Israel and Syria Wednesday, reporting "some progress" but still no agreement on a troop pullback pact.

Kissinger spent six hours yesterday in Riyadh, the desert capital of oil-rich Saudi Arabia, holding talks with conservative King Ffisal and other Saudi officials.

He arrived back in Cairo last night for a new round of talks with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, who has emerged as a strong backer of Kissinger's latest peace drive.

Kissinger discussed with Saudi leaders his struggle to win an Israeli-Syrian compromise for troop disengagement and new plans for American-Saudi cooperation.

At a Riyadh airport news conference, Kissinger announced that he had invited King Faisal's brother to come to Washington May 24 to discuss the ambitious cooperation plans.

"Both sides have a desire to strengthen bilateral relations in various fields, particularly in the economic, technological and scientific fields, as well as the Saudi Kingdom's defese requirements," Kissinger said.

Prince Fahd is head of the Saudi Economic and investment policy committee which is in charge of plans to use the oil revenues of Arab world's largest oil producer to industrialalize Saudi Arabia.

Fighting reported in Mozambique

LISBON [UPI] — Fresh fighting was reported yesterday in Portugal's vast African empire. In Lisbon, a general was accused of refusing to obey a court order to release a Cuban officer convicted of training African guerrillas.

The Lisbon case marked the first clash to be reported between the military and civilian authorities since a military junta overthrew a half-century of dictatorship April 25.

In Portuguese Africa, eyewitnesses said African guerrillas of the Front for the Liberation of Mozambique (FRELIMO) are fighting the Portuguese army again for the first time since the coup in Lisbon two weeks ago.

According to reports reaching neighboring Salisbury, Rhodesia, at least eight civilians in Mozambique have died in guerrilla attacks in two days. The reports were attributed to officials in Beira, Mozambique.

Gen. Antonio de Spinola's military junta in Portugal has promised the insurgents they can play a political role if they put down their guns. But guerrilla organizations in Mozambique and Angola have indicated they will go right on fighting while they talk.

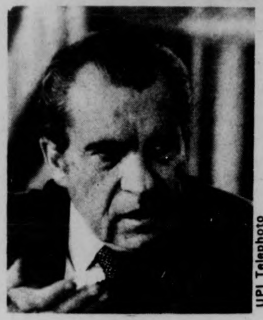
Sees erosion of confidence

Ford: Nixon still not guilty



President Nixon

CHICAGO [UPI] – Vice President Gerald R. Ford said yesterday he saw overwhelming evidence in the White House Watergate transcripts that President Nixon is not guilty of an impeachable offense. He predicted the President would regain the American people's trust if he is "exonorated in the constitutional process."

But Ford, in a one-day speaking swing through Illinois, voiced some of his strongest criticism yet of the Nixon administration, striking out at White House editing of the transcripts and what he called the "sorry mess" of Watergate.

He warned that elected officials won't stay in office long if they fail to listen to the voters.

The vice president told a news conference on the University of Chicago campus that he had read the transcripts released to the public last week.

"To me, I see overwhelming evidence – and this includes what I consider to be the truth from other sources – that the President is not guilty of any impeachable offense," Ford said.

Ford tended to discount statements by Rep. John Anderson, R-Ill., that he would welcome Nixon's resignation and by House Republican Leader John Rhodes that a presidential resignation would help the GOP.

Ford said of Rhodes: "I haven't seen where he has left the President as far as impeachment is concerned." And he said of Anerson: "I understand he is not voting for impeachment."

Ford said he still stood on an assessment he voiced last Saturday at the University of Michigan that "the transcripts conferred no sainthood on anyone." He said, "Americans are very distrubed by developments in Watergate and the transcripts."

But he said if Nixon is exonerated in the constitutional process – an apparent reference to impeachment proceedings now under way in the House Judiciary Committee – "that, in itself, will restore the confidence of the American people."

Coupons are problem

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Federal Energy Administration acknowledged yesterday that the 4.8 billion standby gasoline rationing coupons printed by the government can be used to activate machines that give change for $1 bills.

But a spokesman said the FFA believes "it would not be advantageous to use the coupons in the dollar bill machines" should they be put on the market under rationing, since their probable value "would be in excess of $1 on the open market."

The FEA, formerly the Federal Energy Office, confirmed the coupons could be used in changers following a complaint from Rep. Bill Gunter, D-Fla., who called the printing a "colossal blunder."

Gunter said the coupons, reportedly being kept under armed guard at five secret locations around the country, may have to be destroyed. They were printed at a cost of $12.5 million.

Hearst stumps FBI

WASHINGTON [AP] – FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley said yesterday the agency is stumped by the Patricia Hearst case but so far has no proof that she willingly participated in a bank robbery.

"We are stumped," Kelley told a news conference three months after the daughter of newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst was carried screaming from her Berkeley, Calif., apartment.

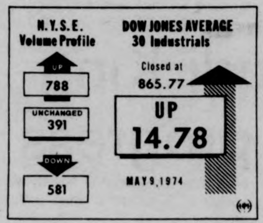
"You have a very closely knit group . . . dedicated to a cause. They're very tight in their security," he said, referring to the Symbionese Liberation Army members who claim to have captured her and won her loyalty.

Mail rates delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] – The Senate voted 71 to 11 yesterday to ease the impact of increasing postal rates on magazines and newspapers.

One of the dissenters, Sen. Hiram R. Fong, R-Hawaii, protested: "This is a simple raid – a ripoff – on the U.S. Treasury."

The bill, sent to the House, would stretch out the period over which the publications have to pay in full the higher rates set by the Postal Rate Commission. The rates themselves would not be affected.



Prices rise 0.5%; food costs drop

WASHINGTON [UPI] – Easing food and fuel prices restrained the Wholesale Price Index to a 0.5 per cent rise in April, the lowest in six months, the Labor Department reported yesterday.

Despite the softer increases last month, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said wholesale prices have soared 18.8 per cent in the past year.

And underlying April's slower increase – the lowest since a 0.5 per cent decline last October – was the prospect of continued inflation in the form of sharply higher prices for industrial commodities.

In the last month of federal economic controls, BLS said iron and steel scrap quotations were up 14.7 per cent and steel mill products up 2.7 per cent. Since May 1, price increases have already been announced for cars, copper, chemicals, kerosene and diesel oil.

These raw materials for cars, household appliances, farm and industrial machinery are considered reliable indicators of future costs to consumers.

Of the 15 commodities measured by BLS for the Wholeasale Price Index, the two food categories showed the only declines. Frm products were down 4.3 per cent and processed foods and feeds were 1.9 per cent lower than in March.

Contributing to lower wholesale food prices last month, BLS said, were declines of 19 per cent for grains, 12.1 per cent four poultry, 6.7 per cent for livestock and 5.4 per cent for eggs. Fresh fruit and vegetable prices rose 7.7 per cent.

Although farmers received less money for their products last month, it is not certain the reductions will all be passed on to consumers. Food store executives said they had absorbed increases in the past year as a result of price controls and that retail prices might remain steady in order to improve profits.

Maine casters push 1,200 mile fish limit

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] – More than a dozen New England fishermen are expected to testify here today at a congressional hearing on a proposed 200-mile offshore fishing limit.

Rep. Peter N. Kyros, D-Maine, will serve as chairman of the 10 a.m. hearing in City Hall before the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee's fish and wildlife subcommittee.

A spokesman for Kyros said Reps. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, and Robert Tieranan, D-R.I., will also be at the hearing. The subcommittee chairman, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., is not expected to attend.

Testimony will focus on a bill extending the nation's offshore fishing boundaries from 12 miles to 200 miles.

The measure, sponsored by Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., and Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., is supported by New England fishermen, but opposed by Gulf Coast shrimp and West Coast tuna interests, as well as the Nixon administration.

New Englanders have complained that the extended boundaries are needed to check the depletion of the North Atlantic fisheries resulting from overfishing by foreign fleets.

Opponents have warned that a 200-mile limit would provoke retaliation by other countries.

Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis and representatives from the Maine Department of Marine Resources are expected to join fishermen in speaking in favor of the proposal.

The hearing was to have been held here May 2, but was rescheduled. A second day of testimony, originally scheduled for May 3 in New Bedford, Mass., has been canceled.

Harvard Lampoon tags "Gatsby" worst picture

CAMBRIDGE [AP] – "The Great Gatsby" took top honors in the Harvard Lampoon's 34th annual Movie Worsts Awards and was cited for "making the Jazz Age look like the Muzak Era."

Editors of the Lampoon, described as the nation's oldest humor magazine, said the film won for "cynically strip-mining another vein in the nostalgia market and having the acquisitive gall to market lines of Gatsby products, of which 'Gatsby power tools' and 'gatsby-burgers' can't be far off."

Leading lady Mia Farrow was honored with "The OK Doc, Break the Arm Again Award" for miscasting in her portrayal of Daisy Buchanan, "reducing Gatsby to a Jazz Age Sinatra."

Other movies cited by the Lampoon in its worsts awards were "Day of the Dolphin," "Jonathan Livingston Seagull," "A Touch of Class," "Blume in Love," "The Way we Were," "Save the Tiger," "The Exorcist," "American Grafitti" and "The Seven-Ups."

Critic Penelope Gilliatt of "The New Yorker" was awarded "The Bosley," given annually to the movie critic "whose writing consistently explores the farthest limits of bad taste."

Welfare department still miscalculates 50% of cases

BOSTON [UPI] – A crash program announced by the Massachusetts Welfare Department six months ago to reduce the high error rate in its Aid to Families With Dependent Children (AFDC) program is a flop.

Figures being compiled by the department for release within the next few weeks will show that the department is continuing to make incorrect determinations of elegibility and payment level in about 50 per cent of its AFDC cases.

The figures, which are for the first three months of 1974, will show that the state made overpayments to recipients in about 29 per cent of the cases. Underpayments were made in about 12 per cent of the cases. Another 8 per cent of the recipients were found to be ineligible for benefits, according to reliable sources in the department.

The data is collected by the department as part of a quality control audit required by the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare HEW.

The state is required to reduce its error rate to 3 per cent within two and a half years or face loss of 50 per cent federal funding for the $330 million-a-year AFDC program.

A portion of the federal funding may be withheld from Massachusetts by HEW this July if substantial improvement in the error rate is not made by then.

The 50 per cent error rate to be announced by the department shortly will compare to a 52.2 per cent mistake rate announced by the department last October for the 1973 fiscal year.

In unveiling the 52.2 per cent figure in October, Welfare Commissioner Steven A. Minter announced that the department was starting an all-out program to reduce AFDC mistakes.

"We have a rather severe problem," Minter said. "We are determined to take action to restore credibility to the system."

The commissioner said errors in the AFDC program in fiscal 1973 totalled $31.8 million. Half of this was state money, half federal.

The department's plan to reduce AFDC errors included elimination of the so-called initial needs program which provides such items as funiture and appliances to new residents of the state who are indigent. Minter said the program was being eliminated because of the high rate of error in special needs calculations.

After public hearings, the department decided to retain the initial needs payments on the grounds that its elimination would severely hurt a large number of poor families.

In addition, the commissioner said the department would totally restructure its AFDC budget setup by establishing a new single standard budget. To date, this hasn't been done.

The new budget structure was to eliminate so-called "special circumstance" grants for hardship cases. These grants were used to pay for special diets, rent, insurance, telephone service and similar items.

The drop in AFDC mistakes from 52.2 to 50 per cent indicates that the department's quality control program has not worked.

And, ironically, the small 2.2 per cent improvement was accomplished largely by reducing number of mistakes the department made in underpayments.

MONTAGUE, [AP] – Northeast Utilities has agreed to fund a fulltime town official whose responsibility would be to serve as a coordinator between the town and the Connecticut-based utility. Northeast plans to build a twin nuclear power plant here.

Northeast had proposed creation of the town position but funding for the post has been unresolved.

Northeast also said at a Wednesday meeting between utility and town officials that it has revised its cost estimate of the project upward from $1.35 billion to $1.52 billion.

Eastern expo

WEST SPRINGFIELD [AP] – The state of Connecticut will again assume financial responsibility for its building at the Eastern States Exposition here.

Connecticut deputy Commerce Commissioner Lewis B. Anthony said a commitment to resume state operation of the buildinn was included in legislation that created the Commerce Department last year. Gov. Thomas J. Meskill withdrew financial support for maintenance of the building in 1972 when funding for Connecticut participation in the exposition was withdrawn.

Connecticut expects to spend about $8,000 annually on maintenance and $60,000 for renovations of the building this summer.

Support poor

HOLYOKE [AP] – "Adequate support . . . not just subsistence" for the poor, was called for yesterday in a statement issued on behalf of New England's Roman Catholic bishops following a week-long meeting here.

"Welfare and relief assistance . . . are our Christian duty. We must insure for all our poor not just subsistence but an adequate support," the statement said.

Hit Dickey-Lincoln

AUGUSTA, Maine UPI – A coalition of New England conservation groups opposing the Dickey - Lincoln hydroelectric project on the St. John River in northern Maine said yesterday the proposed dam was not necessary to prevent floods such as the recent one at Fort Kent.

After floods ravaged the town last week, state and local officials said construction on the long-planned Dickey - Lincoln dam would prevent future flooding.

In a statement yesterday, "The Friends of the St. John" said Fort Kent could be protected from flooding by a dike that would cost only $1 million.

"Student rip-off days"

To The Editor:

Well folks, it's that time of year again. University Health Services has announced a fee increase of $7.50 to be implemented over the next two years with a "guarantee" that it will not increase further in that time [M.D.C. 8 Mar. 74]. State Rep. James A. O'Brien Jr. [D.-Fall River] has introduced a bill in the legislature to raise tuition at state-supported schools to $2000.00 plus per year. Rep. Charles W. Long of Dover is sponsoring a similar bill [M.D.C 1 Apr. 74]. And, rents for student housing at Lincoln and University apartments is going up $40.00 to $50.00 [M.D.C. 2 Apr. 74]. It can be expected that room, board, and parking fees, not to mention off-campus rents and other expenses, will also rise again next year.

Will the increased fee improve Health Services? I seriously doubt it. I have known of people who shared the same experiences of doctors being late or not showing for appointments [N. Haridasan M.D.C. 15 Mar. 74] and situations encountered by Ms. White [Get Sick On Time M.D.C. 5 Mar. 74]. I have a relative who sustained a serious cut at work and was told to see the family doctor or another, rather than go to the Infirmary. It's a good thing the man's office is here in downtown Amherst. As for the "guarantee", this is not legally binding on their part, and can easily dispenced with at any time.

As for Rep. O'Brien, I wonder how he feels that he is helping poor students with his bill?? As brought out by the Collegian article on 1 Apr., 75 percent of this money goes to private schools as scholarship funds. The remaining 25 percent would eventually reach the public schools. This in itself is grossly unfair to the poorer student especially since financial aid is almost extinct today. [Incidently, I am not eligible for financial aid because I receive a pitifully small subsistance allowance from the government]. It was reported that both bills were expected to be given unfavorable Committee reports, something which usually kills them, but such may not always be the case. The bills just could be enacted!

Rents at the University owned and operated housing projects were supposed to be low enough to allow the student to both go to school and survive. Back when North Village was first opened, rents were about $145.00 for a two bedroom place. Today they are probably closer to $200.00 for the same place. Add to this the Federal and State cutbacks in student grants, loan guarantee backing, and scholarship monies, plus spiraling costs of everything and one can see what poorer and married students are up against.

So what to do??? Apparently, we the students are as powerless to halt these increases as we were in the infamous parking fees scandal of last year. Perhaps, though, we can get the Student Senate to declare the months March through August as "Student Rip-Off Days" and annually award a trophy to that group who takes away the most money in a given year. This year's award should rightfully go to Reps. O'Brien and Long for their efforts.

Footnote to 'a night in jail'

To The Editor:

I feel that Frits Geurtsen's "A Night in Jail" in Tuesday's Collegian was written with a disturbing lightness. Nothing beyond the first sentence conveys what it's like to pass a night in jail, and without an understanding of what jail means, no sociological experiment of this sort can have much meaning.

I've passed a night in jail without the reassurance that the next day I would be free and one's reactions are significantly different when freedom isn't just around the corner. By the same token, I realize that a night in jail isn't the same as a week or a month or a year, but I would like to add to Mr. Geurtsen's impressions on the basis of my personal experience.

First, in order to get in jail you have to be arrested. You undergo tremendous anxiety when they've nabbed you, particularly when you know they've got the evidence in their hot little hands. In my case, the evidence was a quarter ounce of grass we five people "smuggled" across the Canadian border. We, none of us had ever been arrested before. We were just naive, unsuspecting college kids with no idea of what they could do to us, sitting in a stark white room blazing with lights while "they" conferred mysteriously in the next room. At this point, one begins to understand what it means not to be free. The most fundamental condition is not being free is ignorance. They never let you in on what they're thinking; knowledge is power. As the case developes against you, your isolation is more complete. You are separated from your friends, subject to repeated demearing searches, tricky inquistions, and baited harassment.

You are not allowed to call your friends back home to explain why you've disappeared off the face of the earth and won't be back as expected. You're shuttled off here and there [in my case in the middle of the night] and eventually some six or seven hours later, they take you to jail. Being booked is not just filling out a form or two. It's another round of tight, hard questioning, more searches, papers to sign — "list the people from whom you wish to receive mail, phone calls, what belongings do you wish to keep with you? Anthing not on the list you can't have. Fingerprints, mug shots and finally the key turning in the lock.

The next morning, I awoke to find that it hadn't been a dream, or only some sort of existential argument with the other side. The bars were still there, the lock still on, my block ominously bare. Being the only woman in the correctional center entitled me to a block all my own with the ensuing privilege of not being locked in my cell at night, which would have seem torture to a claustrophobic such as me. The cell itself was minute, just large enough for a plank bed to come down from the wall, with a hole passing for a toilet at the far end of the cubicle. Three walls of metal and one of bars. Two aspirins and a nap won't dispel them. I still didn't know what had happened to the others. I no longer needed the straw broom analogy to explain, "United we stand, divided we fall." So I sang to myself to fight the loneliness and the uneasiness, and as I was singing, a piece of white paper nosed its way through a hole in the wall. Count of Monte Cristo revisited! It was from John, oh my God, oh my God, just right next door. Such excitement! Communication was strictly forbidden. We couldn't shout at each other through our bars, so we passed notes all day through this phenomenal hole in our wall. John wasn't isolated. He'd been shut in with the others — they were certainly allowed to talk among themselves. He told me that Will, a deserter, had been taken off in handcuffs no one knew where, but that we were getting out that afternoon.

We got out that afternoon on bail, with a lesson learned, that jail is for real, for many others not the fairy tale it was for us. Those unfortunate enough to be sent to a high security prison do indeed have to fear vasoline, and knives, and mental anguish unknown to correctional centers where the inmates have a fair amount of contact with the outside. It's heartening to know that jail can mean an opportunity for education, or that a certain comraderie can develope among inmates but it's vital to keep in mind that these people are not free, that the price they're paying is extreme. A night in jail should teach one the seriousness of taking away another persons's liberty, regardless of the crime committed.

An obligation to remember

To The Editor:

I was less than overjoyed when I read those parts of Tuesday's column comparing the persecution of the Jewish People with the persecution Blacks have suffered in America, especially as that comparison was made to make the point that "Everyone has been persecuted. The time has come to forget the accusations..." etc. National histories of human misery and degradation do not cancel each other out. It is neither relevant nor in particularly good taste to compare them.

America is a society still reeling from centuries of white supremacy, a society where Blacks and Whites live in the same cities but in different worlds. How can you expect Blacks to forget the past when they still experience the consequences of that past, consequences manifested by the economic and educational divisions built into American life. Rather than get hung up in the bullshit of denying or accepting guilt for this situation, realize that the situation itself is unacceptable; that if we choose to live in America society we must also choose to change it.

And Fred, I don't find it particularly inspiring that you were able to "hang out" with the children of men who murdered your people. I am also Jewish; my family was also decimated by the Holocaust. I do not claim that these things give us a moral license to hate the German people — such hatreds have been turned on our people too often — but it does place upon us an obligation to remember for the world what happened to our people. The world repeats what the world forgets.

Significance of Drum

To The Editor

Since I have been on this campus I have had the opportunity to see the Drum magazine move from a four page mimeograph sheet to a first rate literary publication. The magazine has been a source of inspiration to me in that it has allowed students to expose their talents and also gain valuable skills on how to put a magazine together. The magazine has also informed the white community of the interests and ideals that are important to understanding the Black experience. There have been many progressive forces on campus that have supported the idea of the need for a journal like the Drum magazine. Not only do they support Drum, but they also attend Third World events to get a better perspective on the concerns of a group of people of which there is much to be known. The Drum collects the experiences of Third World peoples and reflects that image to the university community so that people can have information in order to make decisions on what they can and will do as it relates to Third World people's experiences impinging on their own lives. Coming from an urban area thinga appear in stark reality, whereas in a somewhat quiet setting like the University of Massachusetts your judgement can sometimes be deluded. When the Student Senate voted to fund Drum magazine at its proposed level it was clear that the senate knew the significance of having the information that the magazine brings to the university community is so badly needed.

It is regretable that the signers of the May 7, 1974 letter to the editors "Senate Only Realistic in Drum Budget Slash" chose to be so highly reactionary. But their position is understandable. They see themselves as the guardians of the funds that flows into the Third World community and they try to control it in the same way the federal gov't does with social welfare programs or university financial aid. Yes, their kind is very familiar to us. The real tradegy is that they rob themselves in the end in that valuable information is kept away from the public. Even though the money that the Black Mass Communications Project and Drum receives is only adequate, the main purpose that they have in mind is raising the level of consciousness of all people, even if they have only a small budget with which to do it.

'Professional' therapist

To The Editor:

Seymour Cabin is my therapist and has been since this fall. I was one of those "crisis calls" that Cabin supposedly doesn't respond to. Not only did he make room for me in his very busy schedule, but he has also continued to see me, refusing to follow "departmental policy" by letting me sink back into this mad-house University before I can fend for myself. Sure, I've gone over the fifteen session limit. But I am also alive, no mean feat, and beginning to get myself together. Cabin is a humanist who insists on really helping his patients, not just patching them up temporarily so that they can fall apart later, preferably not on University property. If there are more patients than Mental Health can handle humanely, then why not hire more therapists instead of firing one of the best? Long-term patients might be able to pay for their therapy on a sliding scale, if money is the problem. But what good does it do to start a bunch of people along the way to understanding and them leave them stranded, without the means to help themselves? Does the infirmary refuse to see patients after a certain number of visits? Far from being "questionable" or "unsatisfactory", Cabin's professional performance seems to me to be way above Mental Health's standards. Maybe that's why he was fired.

Friend of Cabin: write to the Collegian, to Barry Averill, to Leighton Whitaker, to Randolph Bromery, and anyone else you can think of, to let them know why you think Cabin's firing is a mistake.

Dancing, a performing art

To The Editor:

I am a member of the class of '74 and though I am very busy with personal concerns, I cannot turn my back and walk away from the University of Massachusetts, a respected center of learning, ignoring the lack of concern on the higher levels of administration for the artistic education of students.

On Friday and Saturday, 19 and 20 April 1974 I witnessed performances by the University Dancers. These programs were without a doubt some of the finest I have seen anywhere. Every member of the audience must have felt as proud of them as I felt. The fine level of proficiency exhibited has come from long hours of grueling repetitive practice under the restraints of the tutelage of the Physical Education Department. But the University Dancers have learned their craft well-in spite of the system. I can't help wondering what would happen if the students and faculty of the dance were allowed to form their own department, freed of the restraints of the Physical Education Department which is concerned with the training of athletes and rightly so. But why must our dancers learn in spite of the system?

The dancers are fortunate enough to have a dedicated and personable faculty with whom to work. As I've looked at their course offerings and the individual classes--they are oriented toward training the student, helping each to develop his abilities so that he can find his place in the world of dance. That is a great deal more than can be said for others of our artistic departments. Is UMass behind the times? According to Don McDonagh in his book "The Rise and Fall and Rise of Modern Dance" this field of study" had expanded by the late 1940's into accredited courses in the fine arts departments of universities and colleges." I think it is high time our dancers have their own department in the College of Arts and Sciences. In a performing art, apprentices must perform and without restraint. Our dancers could do that in their own department.

The UMass disease

Sooner or later it happens. It doesn't occur the same in any two people and it doesn't come at any set time or age. But sooner or later it happens. It can strike at any time between the first week of Freshman year or can hold out until 3 a.m. as you study for your last exam here as a senior. Sometime in the duration here you are going to encounter umassphyllis, a dread disease which can only be gotten through intimate relations with some branch of this University. There are different types of umassyphillis with different symptoms and cures and some with no cure at all. Here is a list of the types and what to watch for so that you can pursue the proper treatment and hopefully continue on to lead a normal life in the real world when you leave here.

Car towalosis — is another variation of the disease in which the victim suffers from acute paranioa because he or she feels that little men in khaki suits are following him and waiting for him to park his car, at which time the little men steal the cars and charge them money for repossession. The Student Senate has been employing scientists lately to come up with a cure for this and they finally think they have it. Instaed of having mysterious men in khaki suits they plan to subvert ordinary students like you or me and have them steal the cars. This will lead to a definite effective cure, namely bribing the traitor students with money.

Finalis — is common about this time of the year because it is brought about by the coming of exams. The sign of finalis is a severe case of depression to the point of frequent crying. There is no cure for this but some people take large doses of various amphetimines to ease the conscience during finalis.

Whitmoius paradoxim — this is caused by the small bacteria know as snottilia secretaria. It can overtake your mind by excessive attacks on your eardrums and leave you standing in wild teamper and utter confusion in front of the CASIAC office. You will know you have it when you break into a cold sweat at the sight of pre-registration forms or you find yourself wanting to cry when someone says "Can I heip you please?". The only known cure for this is running around madly across campus looking for as many meaningless signatures as possible in the half hour so that you won't get fined five dollars.

Bluewallis hangoverum — is also a serious type of umassyphillis which attacks people in their sleeping hours when they suffer from a sudden brewerii deficiency in their brain. This disease can lead to severe head pains which leave one lying helplessly in bed unable to go to classes, keep appointments or function with any dexterity. Different people have different cures for this malady including coco-cola and milk, half a dozen asprins, cold showers and commonly — more sleep. However the only real effective cure (if you have the stomach for it) is more brewerii.

Other variations of this illness include diplomia worth lessness, hatchcoffeeitis, and southwesteria. These diseases can also be the death of a UMire if steps aren't taken to offest the symptoms.

Umassyphillis cannot be directly fought. It is my contention that the best thing to do when this roteen disease strikes is to go to your room, pack some clothes, get some money, make a big sign that says CAPE COD and take to the highway.

A crash is coming

Look at America. Look at all its prosperity and its wealth. And look hard and remember because it won't be around in a few years.

The bottom will come out of the American dollar because of the increased inflation that has been going on since Nixon took office. This inflation is due to two main factors: the first is defecit spending by government and the second is giving the Federal Reserve total control over our money.

I'm not going into details about that here because I would have to write a book in order to do so. Obviously, I don't have the time or space to do so.

My real concern is what will happen when this crash does come. There are many reasons to feel that it will be the worse one America has ever faced.

When the crash comes, anarchy and mob rule will be in force. In all major urban areas, the food supply will quickly dwindle down to nothing. Railroads and trucks will be shut down and food will not be able to be shipped.

The revolutionaries in this country will be out in full force and will do their best to destory power lines, sewer lines and businesses that may still be in operation.

The amount of death due to bullets and disease will be tremendous. If gun controls are put into effect, honest citizens, no longer able to protect themselves, will be at the mercy of the revolutionaries. With water lines contaminated, disease will prevail among the aged, young and weak. Many will die.

The Army and National Guard will be mobilized but will be powerless. Local police forces will also be powerless. Anarchy will prevail. Then, one of two things may happen: 1) The Federal Government will have a National Police Force march in, martial law will be declared and "big brother" will become a reality.

OR

2) The United Nations will step in with a peacekeeping force headed by the Undersecretary General for Political and Security Council Affairs (who has always been a communist) and they will take us over and, again, "big brother" would be reality.

There is a way to stop all of this. The first is to stop inflation by forcing Congress to stop its defecit spending and make paying off the national debt a top priority.

The second is to control the Federal Reserve. Since it has been created, it has done what it pleases and has, at times, ignored the laws governing it. They, and not the Congress, control the printing of paper money which is what the Federal Government "borrows" to cover defecit spending. A full audit of the Federal Reserve is in order and Congressman John Rousselot (R-California) is sponsoring a bill calling for it. Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur Burns is trying to stop it. There must be something he's trying to hide. In fact, if one would find it more shocking than Watergate.

This won't stop the crash. But it will make the effects of it less severe and maybe the revolutionaries will be unable to muster enough force that would put this country into anarchy.

A question of accountability?

Howland yesterday created a tremendous void in an essential student service that should be filled as soon as possible. There are 17,000 undergraduates on campus, and although they have not yet gotten jobs, houses, or other responsibilities of the straight world they still occasionally run afoul of the straight world's rules.

The office of student attorney was created four years ago to provide students with legal assistance free of charge. Funded by Student Senate money, the position largely deals with tenant-landlord rights, petty larceny or assault raps and a host of minor drug and alcohol arrests.

When Atty. Howland took the post four years ago the idea of a lawyer to serve as a free advocate for students was new. Now universities across the country have adopted the idea and provide free legal services in one form or another to students. Howland now served on an advisory board of the American Bar Association to develop the concept of prepaid legal services for any community, not just universities.

Atty. Howland's resignation is the result of a misunderstanding between himself and his student employers on the Legal Affairs Office Advisory Board.

The previous student advisory board chairman, David Booker, told Howland in an informal memo last December that he would be rehired for fiscal year 1974-1975. Now the Executive Committee of the Student Senate, including Booker's successor as Student Senate speaker, Cynthia McGrath, have told Howland they would recommend to the full Senate that he not be rehired.

I seems unfortunate that, for the second year in a row, Howland's position has become the subject of political infighting between two bureaucracies within the Student Senate. Furthermore, it appears that no Senate group has a clear mandate for hiring and firing the Student Attorney or for seeing that he carries out the duties of the job.

It is important to fill the position quickly. Howland is gone, whatever the quality of the job he was doing. But before anyone is subjected to the vagaries of being employed by students once again as campus attorney, the senate should clearly decide who the lawyer is working for and what his job is.

Because right now, the appearance is that Howland was forced to resign because of infighting and innuendo by the Senate bureaucrats.

SOP for students

To The Editor:

I would like to express my appreciation for the article on the Student Organizing Project that appeared in the May 3 Collegian. However, two points merit expansion.

First of all, one might misunderstand the structure of the Project when reading the article. The Student Organizing Project exists to serve the Students of the University of Massachusetts. Under the plan passed by the Student Senate on May 1, it is directed by the Student Organizing Committee, now a standing committee of the Student Senate. Thus, the staff, which will ultimately consist of both students and nonstudent consultants, is the agent for carrying out the wishes of the students. In the line with this, I am not the coordinator for the Project. I am one of the coordinators, each of whom is responsible for carrying forward some particular portion of the Project's goals. The important point is that the leadership of the Project rests in the hands of the students.

Second, while the article makes the quite valid point that the goal of the Project is to create an entity which serves a purpose different from student government, that should not be taken to mean that we feel that student government serves no purpose. The opposite is true. Student government and student unionization are different concepts, but both are necessary ones.

Nail rude

To the Editor:

This letter is to mainly serve as a warning and information to area bands and patrons who frequent the Rusty Nail in Sunderland.

We made a verbal contract [Nail policy] about eight weeks ago to play a gig on Monday night, April 29. When we arrived, we were told we could not perform because the floor had just been re-varnished for the Chubby Checker performance the next night. The bartender relayed a message from Jack, the manager that he tried to get in touch with us for more than week before to tell us of the cancellation. We feel that Jack did not make sufficiently reasonable effort to contact us since we never received any such message, nor had any of our roommates heard of such a thing. Of course, he may have called at mid-day, when we were all in classes. But, that is much less than reasonable.

We make the following suggestion to fellow area musicians: obtain a written contract from the Nail from now on, even if it contains a no-salary clause, because there will obviously be no other recourse for reimbursement for incurred hardships. We the undersigned are terminating our patronage of the Nail for the remainder of the semester, and if you have gone through this or know of someone who has, we urge you to visit some of the other fine clubs in the area before deciding to patronize the Nail.

Dorms rude

To The Editor:

They're right - these Dorms do Suck. Joe even looked unturned-on by the prospect of living in them next year, as were Joel, Ruthy, and Jean, who all turned their thumbs down at the prospect of coming back to them next year. Walls suck. Even the limitations of limited brains go beyond the confinement of these walls. Personalities, since I am going to be taking Psychology 270 next semester, need room to expand. Walls don't let a brain be a brain. They turn it into a vegetable. It can't grow. It is strange that studying even goes on here, what with these walls bursting in on us. It's really strange. They expect us to study, yet they don't give us adequate facilities for studying. Not surprising then that some of us are happy even to pass an exam. Kids act like cannibals. Sure, they live in cages. They act like beasts. Must be why they call UMass a Zoo. I don't blame them. The architect who designed these dorms should be crucified, and I'm not kidding. I call it an ironic game. The student isn't a slave, he's an outright animal. The situation is depressing ! won't like to see it go on much longer.

Cabin is sensitive...

To The Editor:

Since I interviewed Dr. Cabin and some of the people who work with him for the article about the firing of Seymour Cabin, I would like to share some of my observations which were not adequately covered in yesterday's article. I had never met Dr. Cabin before my interview with him, but had heard a lot about him during this past year. Several of my friends and acquaintances who had either trained with him or been in therapy with him greatly admired him. I was grateful that such an apparently competent person was on the staff of the Mental Health Services. Based on my experience, I felt that mental health services at universities were usually very inadequate in dealing with the needs of students. The most competent therapist seemed to stay away from such positions. When I was informed by a friend that he was fired, I felt that it was crucial to investigate and make public the circumstances of his being fired.

While doing the interviews for the article, I was amazed by the respect that people who have worked with him had, and the influence that he had had upon them. Not only did he seem to be a competent therapist, but also a fine teacher. One quality continually mentioned by both the secretaries at the Mental Health Service and a representative group of people whom he supervises is that Cabin makes you feel equal, that he is not at all caught up in the professional role. Also, they seem to feel that he is exceptionally sensitive to women, blacks and "freaks." In these days when it is in vogue to be sensitive to minority issues and appear down to earth, these statements did not fully affect my somewhat critical sensibilities. It was only in thinking about my interview with Seymour Cabin many hours afterwards that I fully appreciated the shared sentiments of these people.

I do not think that most people realize how very difficult it is to be so knowledgeable about human behavior and yet remain so unassuming and so very human. This seemed to me to be the reasons why those people who had previously stayed away from the Mental Health Services could relate so well to him. Dr. Averill has said that he realized that Cabin relates to a large group of students that others cannot reach, and he plans to find a replacement who will do the same. But I wonder if Dr. Averill realizes that the qualities which enable Cabin to relate to minority groups are very, very rare. Perhaps those very same qualities are responsible for the dissention between Cabin and some of the other staff members. For example, Cabin has expressed his anger at certain staff members in a way that can be seen by his more diplomatic colleagues as crude. I wonder whether his more diplomatic colleagues view the emotional expression of frustration in women as hysteria, and the rage of blacks as immature aggression. The issues which have infuriated Cabin include the sexism against female staff members, the lack of communication among staff members, the lack of community consciousness, and the bullying by a certain staff member towards people in vulnerable positions.

One issue still baffles me. Cabin has been told that his interests are not the same as those of the Mental Health Service. During my interview with him, his interests were clearly spelled out. The clarity of his goals, and the actions which he has taken to achieve them are noteworthy. His major interest is in seeing that nonprofessional people who counsel a large number of students get adequate training. Let us all think about our own counseling experiences to fully comprehend the significance of this. Cabin teaches a course for those people who run groups on campus. He also supervises the people who work at Room-To-Move, and contrary to averill's accusation, has seen emergency cases there. Moreover, he has been a resource person to which dorm counselors and staff members of Upward Bound could feel comfortable enough with to seek advice. Cabin, likewise, is concerned about the training of those who will be future therapists. Several clinical psychology students are in therapy with him. He refuses to limit their therapy to 15 sessions if additional help is needed as he feels the extra time is a worthwile investment. His ability to effectively teach others clinical skills is reflected by the fact that every student who has interned at the Mental Health Service has requested that he be their supervisor. He has also tried to make internships available to people other than clinical psychology students and students at the Smith School of Social Work. He fought hard to have Sara Wolff, a counselor at The Everywomen's Center, intern at the Mental Health Service for next year.

Because of his achievements and obvious value to the profession, I think his colleagues might have learned to live with him. And I think that one lesson that we can learn from history is that people who could not fit in were often ahead of their time.

Sargent on NUKES

As debate over location of twin nuclear power plants in Montague by Northeast Utilities by 1981 intensifies, politicians get involved in hopes of formulating reasonable public policy. On Wednesday May 1, Governor Francis W. Sargent came to the Campus Center after a New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution board meeting and spoke to several hundred students, urging a close look at nuclear power.

The text of Sargent's speech is reprinted below. Yesterday, The Collegian received a letter from Sargent, praising UMass students for their concern with nuclear power. The letter is reproduced on this page as well.

THE SPEECH:

Two months ago this nation was deep in the throws of an energy crisis. With the arrival of Spring, the impact of the immediate shortages has eased. Nonetheless, the hard reality of the energy equation remains: Demand continues to exceed supply.

A decade ago the nation consumed twelve mission barrels of fuel a day. Now we consume seventeen million barrels. At this rate our domestic supplies will be nearly exhausted by the year two thousand.

America, therefore faces some critical questions. We must decide where our future energy is to come from...and what price we are willing to pay for it.

As a nation we are now engaged in a massive search for this energy. We are examining alternatives that range from the hear of the sun to the power of the atom. But by far the most advanced alternative source is nuclear power. Nuclear generating facilities are beginning to spring up across the nation. The momentum toward nuclear power is tremendous. Its supporters are many and their arguments strong.

Nuclear plants operate with relatively little damage to the envirmnment. Such facilities lessen our dependence on scarce fossil fuels. The power that is produced is the cheapest form of energy available. Nuclear fuel is easy to transport and will be available for tens, of not hundreds, of years to come.

These are the arguments of the advocates. But recently, they have met increasing opposition. Many of you here today have led in that fight.

And again, the arguments you have presented are strong.

You have questioned the safety of nuclear power plants. You have pointed out that a single accident could kill thousands and destroy an area the size of Pennsylvania.

You have questioned the effectiveness of the equipment and challenged the safeguards against the theft of nuclear materials.

It is time to bring the debate out into the open...to examine coolly and clearly what is involved in nuclear power...and to fully assess the pros and cons of this vital issue.

First, we must insure that no new plant is built unless it meets rigorous economic, environmental and safety tests.

Second, we must insure that existing facilities are totally safe.

To accomplish the first goal, I shall ask the Legislature to amend the Electric Power Plant Siting Act. This law establishes a Council which will examine every aspect of any new facility...from its necessity to its potential radiation dangers.

I shall ask that the starting date for the Council be moved up to July first... and that the three plants now in the planning stage be subject to Council Review.

These steps will help us answer questions about future facilities. But what of those plants already in operation?

I wish I could say that starting tomorrow the state will begin to close monitor the facilities at Rowe and Plymouth. But I cannot. The state is simply not equipped to.

Therefore, I will appoint a Special Commission of scientists and law enforcement officials to examine the transportation and theft of nuclear materials, the sabotage of nuclear facilities and the disposal of atomic wastes.

The Commission will report in three months and its recommendations will serve as the basis for future state policy.

These are some basic actions we can take at the state level. We must have the power to protect the lives and welfare of our citizens. If a nuclear plant raises serious problems of safety, a state must have the capacity to find solutions.

Therefore, I shall ask Congress to enact legislation which legally guarantees the right of states to become involved in nuclear safety. And I shall ask Congress to provide the funding for a comprehensive state inspection program.

Beyond this, on its own, the federal government must make some basic changes in this way it supervises nuclear power.

§ § The Atomic Energy Commission must be reorganized. Currently, the AEC is caught between two conflicting roles. On one hamd it is the advocates of greater atomic energy use. And on the other, it is the protector of the public safety. This conflict must end. The AEC can continue to advocate and develop nuclear power. But a new agency must be created — an agency whose only focus is the safety and licensing of nuclear plants.

The federal government must also streamline the procedure for nuclear hearings. They should do away with the numerous and time-consuming hearings that are now required hand hold one comprehensive hearing with technical and legal assistance provided to citizen advocates.

In addition, the federal government must insure that the public's right to information is guaranteed. Decisions and judgments about nuclear power must be made in the most open environment. Projects should live or die on their merits — not because one side has better lawyers or because information has been withheld.

These then are the measures that I believe are necessary at the state and federal levels to insure protection for our citizens.

I have spoken today only of process. I have not offered any final answers, because today there are none.

But, I believe, it is time we got those answers. We can no longer afford to move forward with nuclear power with our eyes shut.

Perhaps nuclear energy is the answer to many of our problems. If it is, it must be able to pass a close and open evaluation. And perhaps nuclear energy cannot be produced with the fullest assurance of safety. In that case, we must look elsewhere — to other fuel sources and to conservation.

THE LETTER:

Dean Tucker
Executive Editor
Student Union Building
University of Massachusetts
Amherst Massachusetts 01002

Dear Mr. Tucker:

I would like to thank all the University of Massachusetts students who were present to hear my speech about nuclear safety on May 1, and I regret that I could not stay to answer questions and listen to your comments.

Many of you are actively involved in bringing the potential dangers of nuclear power plants to the public's attention. Your efforts to provide information and to create forums for discussion on this issue are particularly important at this time. It has been predicted that a major portion of our future power needs will be supplied by nuclear plants. Citizens of the Commonwealth must be fully aware of the facts, as well as the serious unanswered safety questions, before a major commitment to nuclear power is made.

No nuclear plant should be allowed to operate in Massachusetts unless its safety is assured. I believe that the program which I announced to you will enable Massachusetts to play a larger role in providing this assurance.

The legislation I proposed will make the state's three planned nuclear plants subject to comprehensive review by the Electric Power Plant Siting Council. This Council may prohibit construction of any plant which lacks adequate safeguards.

I have created a Special Commission on Nuclear Safety to advise me of any additional staff and equipment this state would need to monitor our existing nuclear plants. This team of nuclear scientists and law enforcement officials will report to me by July 1: implementation of their report will lessen the state's dependence on the inadquate federal inspection program.

Reform of the Atomic Energy Commission is absolutely necessary. I have called for the establishment of an independent agency which would rigorously and openly regulate nuclear power plants. Citizens provided with legal and technical assistance would be able to participate more effectively in the mandatory licensing hearing. Fair and prompt decisions could then be made on the granting of each license.

When I spoke at the Amherst campus, I was encouraged by the students' interest in the nuclear safety issue. I will carefully examine all the facts and oppose the further development of nuclear power in Massachusetts unless we are certain of the safety of this energy resource.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,
Francis W. Sargent

MassPIRG report

The bottle ban push

This is the second half of an evaluation that was started last week. It is also the last MassPIRG report of the semester. DeLancey, a UMass student, has interned at the group this semester, writing a weekly column for The Collegian.

By STEVE DELANCEY
MassPIRG Intern

Last year the state legislature returned a number of bills that would have required a deposit on all bottles and cans to the Committee on Commerce and Labor for further study. A number of similar bills were introduced this year in that committee and also in the Committee on Natural Resources. Several environmental groups began to organize support for these bills.

When the Committee on Natural Resources heard their bills last month, media coverage of the hearings was good, public interest was high, and the testimony lasted for over eight hours. The Governors of Oregon and Vermont (two states that currently have 'bottle-ban' laws) appeared at the hearing and presented testimony in support of the bills. MassPIRG, the League of Women Voters, and the Mass. Forest and Park Association were among the public interest groups who also presented testimony at the hearing in response to negative lobbying done by a number of national bottling and canning companies.

Following testimony by both sides, the committee had no time for an Executive Session and therefore made no decision as to what to do with the bills. More than a month passed--plenty of time for the issue to cool down--and the committee continued to stall. During this time the research director of the committee assured me that some decision would be made and that the bills would not die in committee.

What finally happened was that the committee decided to set up a commission to further study the bills and make a report before next year's legislative session. In other words, after all of the interest generated by the bills, no action was taken besides a decision to procrastinate for another year.

This decisioon came after I had spent a good deal of time getting information together, writing up testimony for the hearing, and making a lot of phone calls to organize support and to let the sponsors of the bills know of MassPIRG's interest in and support of their bills.

(Incidently, in the course of my work on the 'bottle-ban' project, I attempted to get in contact with a number of senators and representatives time and time again. Although I've heard these people claim they want to hear from their constituents and that they are responsive to the people, I was not able to get through to them even once.)

To see all of the work that I did have such little effect was, indeed, frustrating. All of my research will remain on file, however, and will be used again next year to push for the passage of the bills. This is the way in which MassPIRG gives a degree of continuity to the efforts of students.

While I have concentrated here on perhaps the least responsive of the channels through which the PIRG works, it's important to note that the group often works for change through the court system--which tends to make the people involved more apt to listen when the threat of legal action is used. The PIRG is also involved in a number of advising and counseling projects which will hopefully make interested citizens more aware of alternatives open to them.

Throughout the semester, I have seen the ways in which the system limits the effectiveness of a public interest group. What I would recommend MassPIRG do in the future is to get together a group of interested students to do a critical, in-depth study of the channels through which the PIRG works--particularly the Mass. legislature. The students could follow the progress of some important pieces of legislation, find out why only limited action is taken, who the legislators are that are failing to represent the interests of the people, and then notify the public of the inactivity and-or unresponsiveness of their representatives.

The purpose of this weekly column was to keep the UMass community aware of just what MassPIRG is doing. Last semester 65 per cent of the students at UMass supported the PIRG. While this is a good show of support, it is only 15 per cent above the minimum amount of support needed from a school to continue to be affiliated with the PIRG. If support fell to below 50 per cent, all UMass monies would be returned to the students. It's my belief that this situation could only occur if students do not really know what the PIRG does. Hopefully this column has been informative (at least) and has shown you that the two-dollar charge on your semester bill is an important item.

In closing, I'd like to encourage anyone who feels that they'd like to get involved in protected the environment and the consumer to speak with the people at MassPIRG and work with them in the future.

There are any number of ways to get credits through the University for this kind of practical work and anything that you might do will be of some value.

The PIRG office in Amherst has files of information and other resources that may be used by students that are involved in projects, and each of the staff members is more than willing to work with concerned students. And if anyone would be interested in getting together and doing a study of the inactivity and unresponsiveness of the legislature, I think it would be a valuable and interesting project that really needs to be done.

A final word: This column has been a one-way conversation all semester. I would really appreciate any comments or feedback that anyone would like to make through either the MassPIRG office on campus or in Amherst.

The law and you

Mass. liquor laws tipsy

By RICHARD HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

On July 1, 1973, Massachusetts absolished the ancient crime of being drunk although all the laws having to do with driving under the influence remain unchanged.

As of July 1, the Alcoholism Treatment and Rehabilitation Act (General Laws chapter 111B) will govern drunks and drunkeness. As with any new procedural law, we may expect some confusion in the application of the provisions by police, citizens and courts at the start.

Section 3 of the statute describes a person as "Incapacitated" if he is intoxicated "by reason of the consumption of intoxicating liquor" who "is (1) unconscious, (2) in need of medical attention, (3) likely to suffer or cause physical harm or damage to property, or (4) disorderly."

Section 8 of the statute provides that any person who is "incapacitated" in a public place "may be assisted by a police officer with or without his consent to his residence, to 'a (detoxification) facility, or to a police station." The police officer may request the person to take a test for alcohol, including a breath test, but it is not required. By a recent amendment any person under this statute may request and receive a reasonable test to determine whether or not he is intoxicated. He must also be given the right to make one phone call. The results of any such test are not admissable against the person tested for any purpose.

When an "incapacitated" person is taken to a police station the nearest detoxification facility is notified. If treatment is available the person shall be transported to the facility where he may be held against his will up to forty-eight hours or until he is no longer "incapacitated", whichever is shorter.

If the facility indicates that treatment is not available, the incapacitated person may be held at the police station in "protective custody" until he is no longer incapacitated or twelve hours, whichever is shorter. The statute is somewhat vague, but as I understand its intent, it provides tht no person may be held in "protective custody" against his will unless he is "incapacitated" as defined in Section three. A person in "protective custody" is not under arrest nor is he charged with a crime. Consequently, there is no arrest or criminal record although an entry is made in the police log of the date, time and place of custody.

The statute is a progressive change in an area of considerable dilemma. For the most part police have used the arrest for drunkeness as a protective device for inebriated persons. The statute does not end this procedure, it merely ends the criminal connotations of it. It wisely provides that a person who is drunk and disorderly conduct but shall instead be subject to the statute. If the officer is acting pursuant to the statute he would seem to be immune from false arrest charges. In summary, that would seem to require the following steps:

1. The officer must conclude that a person is (a) unconscious, (b) in need of medical attention, (c) a danger to himself, others or property or (d) disorderly by reason of consumption of alcohol ("incapacitated").

2. The officer may then employ reasonable force to take such person into "protective custody" (which he should probably advise such person, and then may elect to transport the person to his residence, a facility or the police station. In most cases the officer will have to take the incapacitated person to the police station if he has made the first conclusion, on, simply for protective purposes.

3. At the police station the officer in charge or the desk officer will be required to telephone the nearest facility and will probably need to report the apparent condition of the person and the circumstances of the situation. If the facility concludes that treatment is available the person will be transported to it. One may aticipate that this will be a relatively rare occurrence, at least in Amherst.

Stuck in a WBCN elevator

By RON CHAIT
MDC Special

What do you do when you are stuck in an elevator with 16 other people?

This is the problem I was faced with on Friday afternoon in Boston when some friends and I visited a radio station to check on a tape we had sent in. Really, I didn't intend to get stuck in an elevator. I never even liked elevators! That didn't help the situation, though.

WBCN-FM (then located on Stuart Street) was not a large radio station. Two visitors would be reasonabe, while five would still be bearable. Ten visitors would be absolutely ridiculous. So, of course, we brought seventeen.

Due to impatience and the fact that we were on a time schedule, everyone crammed into the elevator (at the same time) for the upward trip. We made it safely — at least one way.

It wasn't long before everyone crowded back into the elevator. The correct button was pushed, and a steel contraption which had not been inspected four four years wended its way once more toward the civilization below (with seventeen people aboard). It didn't quite reach its destination.

The door jammed.

We were stuck in that elevator for over an hour. Until the vent was lifted, we weren't even sure of the air supply. One impoverished soul cried to the outside world, "Is there anything we can do?" There was a voice from beyond the door which enclosed us. It said, "Repeat after me: 'Dear God . . .' "

Another trapped personage leaned against the steel door. He smelled alcohol, he thought. We figured it was someone from the radio station who had partaken of beer with his lunch. We were wrong. It was an honest-to-goodness wino.

"I'm Jesus," he said. Jesus Christ? "No, that's my son!" he bellowed. Unable to pull apart the elevator door with his bare hands, much to his surprise, he eventually gave up and staggered out of the building on his own power. Luckily for us, other people came along, better able to help us in our time of need.

In the meantime, we waited. One character yelled up the elevator shaft for WBCN to lower a micrphone so we could get on the air. His request was not granted. Our only hope was that we would make the 6:00 news.

Needless to say, the elevator man did not arrive as soon as we would have liked him to. At first, we were optimistic. However, when one member of the group begins to write up a Last Will and Testament, what are you supposed to think?

Eventually, the elevator man did come. (Even snails reach their destination if you give them enough time.) He asked how many people were inside. Seventeen, we uttered in unison. He asked again.

I don't think anyone really believed us until the door was opened, and a vast multitude of adolescent human beings swarmed out of the imprisonment, as if from a cattle call, and spilled out into the street, free again.

The ordeal was over.

Time has passed since then. Five survivors of the incident have graduated from high school and proceeded to UMass. All have been seen boarding elevators without a second thought. This seems to prove something . . .

UMies don't learn from their mistakes.

The resurrection renewed

By ELAINE ORPHANOS
MDC Special

"Greeks have Christmas, don't they?", Maureen, a Roman Catholic, asked Elaine, a Greek Orthodox, in December while decorating their corridor.

Later on that same year, in April, Maureen asked Elaine, "Do you believe in the Resurrection?"

Elaine would like to make it perfectly clear that the Holy Bible finds this truth to be self-evident. Christ founded and left only one Church on earth. And east did meet west when the Byzantine Empire and the Roman Empire contributed to the holy Catholic and Apostolic Church.

As written in the Nicean Creed, the words "Catholic" and "Apostolic" respectively mean "universal" and "of the Apostle's teachings." Thus, it was on this "universal" premise that the Church got its name.

In 1054 A.D., the truth was distorted when Christ's church was hacked into two. Reverend E. Papastephanou, Orthodox priest and historian, writes that the Ecumenical Council was composed of four Popes and one Patriarch, at the time of the separation. Popes Nicholas I, Adrian II, John VIII and Leo IX resided in Rome and Patriarch Cerularias lived in Constantinople.

In the beginning, it was clearly understood that the Popes and the Patriarch were territorial representatives who, as disciples of Christ, had no power of Supremacy. The trouble began when Pope Leo IX sent three legates, carrying a bull of excommunication to the Patriarch in Constantinople. It charged the Eastern Church with heresy.

The heresy charged was based on the fact that the East refused to accept the filoque which was inserted into the Nicean Creed. Revised, the Creed read, "I believe in the Holy Spirit the Lord, the giver of life who proceedeth from the Father 'and the Son'.

"It has been said that it (filoque) was originally inserted in order to reinforce the dogma of the divinity of the second person of the Holy Trinity, namely the Son," Reverend Papastephanou said in a recent publication.

At any rate, the act was explicitly condemned in the statuted drawn up by the Ecumenical Councils of 325 and 381 A.D. The East adhered to the orthodox way of thinking and abided by the scripture which read, "No man should be permitted to proffer, write or compose another faith, beside that defined by the Holy Fathers at Nicea, under penalty of anathema or deprivation".

Since Pope Leo IX was essentially at fault for daring to alter the Creed, the Orthodox Eastern Church answered him with a counter excommunication. The tension between Rome and Constantinople increased and the tenuous thread broke at the mention of Papal Primacy.

The idea that all Bishops (Popes and Patriarch) were equal in stature was obliterated. Father Papastephanou said, "It is the notion that, by Divine Right, he (Pope) exercises absolute authority not only in the local church of Rome, but over all Bishops of all local churches wherever they may be in the world".

Reverend Papastephanou further explained that the "alleged proof of the Papal Primacy is the mistaken contention that St. Peter the Apostle was empowered with absolute authority over the other apostles by Christ himself".

He referred to the Gospel of St. Mathew, when Simon Peter confessed, "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God", Christ responded, "Thou art Peter and upon this rock (petra) I will build my Church".

What was meant here is that, " 'petra' (rock) which Christ speaks of is not the person Peter, but rather the confession of Peter", Reverend Papastephanou asserted.

In essence, Christ did not establish his church on one Disciple, but rather the confession and faith that He "is the Son of the Living God".

The Romans also contended that since Peter supposedly became the first Bishop of Rome, his successors can in turn practice supremacy over the other Bishops. The Bible specifies that although St. Peter was the spokesman for the aplostles, he did not organize the Church in Rome.

St. Paul founded the Church, neither Peter nor Paul established themselves as Bishops in any particular city. The reason, according to the Bible, was that the apostles' mission was universal.

It is now 1974 A.D., 890 years have passed isnce the schism between East and West. The West adopted the name 'Roman Catholic'. The East has retained the name 'Orthodox' which literally means "conforming to the usual beliefs or established Doctrines".

During these 890 years, the Roman Catholics have altered the Sacraments of Baptism and Confirmation, established Celibacy of the Clergy, invented Purgatory and in 1870 promulgated the dogma of Infallability of the Pope. The Orthodox faith has made no such changes.

The one Church that Christ left is now divided. Each half recognizes the existence of the other and fervently awaits their reunion, as was expressed by Patriarch Athenagoraa and Pope Paul VI.

In response to Maureen's questions and for future reference, Elaine would simply like to say, "Yes, I do honor Christmas, yes, I do believe in the Resurrection, yes...yes...yes...yes....YES!

PRISON

Away from the outside world exists a cold hard lonesome void.
A people oppressed without individuality,
Not knowing who they are, where they are going...
Their minds are made to become a prison.
How minded they have become,
How minded they have become,
Confusion in the worshipping of many gods that with Drunken jeolousy has turned an oppressed people against itself...
Rough and ready they have become.
Fighting wars for reasons unknown, flowing hearts crying...
Crying in a terrific comic of Late.
Corruption is like magic...
And still away from the outside World
The day will come.
Expel black prison men.

September 13, 1971 - then and now

The following article was written by Dept. of Afro American Studies Acklyn R. Lynch. Prof. Lynch has been working actively in prison reform.

The dramatic events at Attica have compelled us to examine fundamental aspects of social justice in the political matrix of this society. People around the world have expressed alarm at democracy's response to a confrontation, which challenged and perhaps undermined its tentes of justice and equality. There was no resiliency in the decision-making process to encourage a continuation of the dialogue or to prevent a polarization of forces. This allowed reaction to set in and madness to prevail. The anguished cries of those who were murdered, maimed or brutalized have been heard throughout the world. Their voices echo the context of exploitation that thousands (or even millions) of ordinary people, conscious of their oppression, have brought before the var of humanity.

During the weeks following the massacre at Attica, people have written extensively on the collapse of the state and federal apparatus in the decision-making process. Even the appointment of investigating bodies, which will attempt to legitimize and justify the actions of the political leadership, will be compelled to highlight some inconsistencies in the final solution executed by the state. Speeches have been made about the dehumanizing aspects of prison life, the indisputable clarity of the inmates in their expressions of unity and collective struggle, and the history of betrayal in which prisoners have experienced from officials in the legal and penal institutions, thereby compelling prisoners to question the integrity of negotiators and administrators. These issues have been debated hard and long, but in the rhetorical frenzy, we have forgotten to go back precisely to the character of the demands made by the prisoners at Attica.

This essay will deal explicitly with those demands, for it is in their very essence, their very nature, that the challenge to fundamental aspects of our "so-called" democratic tradition projected an incompatible situation. The men at Attica genuinely believed that the society and perhaps Commissioner Russel Oswald were serious about the question of penal reform, even though they night have been aggrieved at the murder of George Jackson at San Quentin. Their Manifesto of Demands tore at the very fabric of the social structure and demanded that democratic rights become a vibrant and living part of the institutional structure so that there could be a radical transformation of their dehumanized reality.

In the preamble to the Manifesto the inmates heightened the facade of the rehabilitative process to which they have been submitted, by comparing it with "the ancient stupidity of pouring water on a drowning man in as much as they are treated for their hostilities by their program administrators with the latter's hostility js medication." The ineffectiveness of this rehabilitative process is not only dramatized by the high percentage of recidivism, but by the compelling story of Haywood Patterson in Scottsboro Boys Trial as he emphasized the neuroses and demoniac tendencies of prison authorities, who have become victims of it in precisely the same sense as the prisoners.

In the preamble, the man at Attica emphasized that they have been denied not only due process of the law and other Constitutional Rights, but more importantly, as they seek to expand intellectually so that they might be in touch with social movements and world trends, they are systematically cut off from the pursuit of knowledge and "remanded to isolation status whenever they insist on their human rights to the wisdom of awareness." It is at this level that prison authorities are terrified by the growing political consciousness, sensitivity and keen perceptions of today's Black prisoners, who have come to understand that they are the most abused victims of an unreighteous social order. The Elliot Barclays, the Herbert X. Blydens, the Richard Clarkes etc, have become the architects, builders and broadcasters of a social ethic that has moved beyond the traditional liberal posture of penal reformist.

The demands were updated expression of the arguments presented by Black prisoners in the decade of the sixties from Malcolm X to George Jackson. The demands were Constitutional, political, economic, social and cultural. They indicate a through grasp not only of the context of exploitation, but the effective conditions for substantive reform in the rehabilitative process.

The Manifesto emphasized the rights of legal representation at parole board hearings and the attendant procedural safeguards at parole revocation hearings. It called for improved and adequate medical attention and public health practices at a time when the society itself is attempting to come to grips with a national health crisis and inadequate facilities. It demanded that economic exploitation be stopped, but at the same time it recommended that opportunities for rehabilitation through preparation for entry into the productive processes of the industrial sector should be programmatically designed "by allowing those industries outside who desire to enter for the purpose of employment placement." They have recognized that working conditions in prisons did not develop working incentives parallel to the many jobs in the outside society, and "a paroled prisoner therefore faced many contradictions of the job that added to his difficulty of adjusting." This is a progressive reformist position, which the penal system should consider seriously, for it will inject a new dynamic in the rehavilitative process. It is certainly interesting that men, whom the reactionary elements consider to be revolutionary activists, provide a reformist alternative that will enhance social progress.

The Manifesto demanded the Constitutional right to peaceful dissent, and "an end to political persecution, racial persecution, and the denial of prisoners' rights to subscribe to political papers, books or any other educational and current media chronicles that are forwarded through the U.S. Mail." These are fundamental rights, which if abridged will only serve to undermine the rehabilitative process, for it is only with the free exchange of ideas in the market-place that men can grow with maturity to understand the precepts of social intercourse, and therby validate democratic definitions.

The Manifesto expressed a high level of social awareness as it demanded an end to the unhealthy conditions of surroundings "reinforced by the escalating practice of physical brutality perpetrated on inmates." It called for "one set of rules governing all prisoners in the state of New York" rather than the totalitarian system which empowered each warden with ultimate authority for running the institution "as he sees fit."

The Manifesto expressed the architect's determination to challenge the present system of dehumanization, brutality and injustice. The men at Attica were prepared to die for the democratic principles not only enunciated in their Manifesto, but experienced in their revolt as they raised their level of consciousness, and dignity to a spiritual plateau where individualism, fear and cowardice did not prevail, but rather the contours of collective integrity, effective unity of purpose and action, and a clear understanding that death is a reflection of a noble life. This was buttressed by their convictions that the human spirit will not yield to corrosive and destructive forces, but it will enscribe the truth of their struggle on the pages of history with blood, sweat and tears. Elliot Barclay, L.D., one of the brothers who was murdered at Attica reminded the negotiators that we should take seriously what has happened at Attica for the inmates' lives have been the fullest expression of the vital sinews of a revolutionary tradition.

Support urged to prevent legal September 13

By RUDOLPH JONES

It is two and one half years since the Attica Massacre of September 13, 1971. The military assault ordered by former Governor Rockefeller left 43 persons dead. Today, the special Rockefeller ordered Grand Jury still sits, threatening both those who have been indicted and those who would help the defense with new indictments. The Special Prosecutor, Robert Fisher, is now a judge for the NY Supreme Court. And the governor has allocated a new 4.7 million dollars now making the finance of the trial totaling close to 8 million dollars. All for the presecution of the 61 Brothers.

42 Indictments charged 61 of the 1281 Brothers who were in the yard at Attica with more than 1300 felony offenses, over half of which carry life sentences upon conviction. Collectively, the Brothers face over 60,000 years imprisonment in possible maximum sentences.

The needs of the Defense are of as great importance as that of the prosecution, yet the courts, the legislature and the governor still refuse to recognize this vital element in any just proceeding. The cost of even the minimal investigation is set at nearly one million dollars.

Only with continued support and solidarity can we prevent a legal version of September 13, 1971. The struggle continues both inside and outside the prison walls and the struggle inside is supplemented by the struggle outside the defense effort. The Attica Brothers say "Attica is all of us." In support of the Brothers, the Amherst Defense Coalition was formed.

In unity with all the brothers of Attica the coalition requested the Amherst community to participate in the "FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS FOR ATTICA" which was held last Saturday from 2 p.m. until midnight at Amherst College Gymnasium. All proceeds from the festival will aid the Attica Brothers Legal Defense. The benefit featured music, theatre and poetry readings. Prof. Max Roach and sister Sonia Sanchez were among the artist that performed.

"The same sickness that caused that wholesale slaughter of unarmed, inmates and guards alike, still prevails."

Mrs. Laverne Barkley, mother of L.D., at Attica Commemoration 9-13-73 3

"Governor Rockefeller is guilty of malfeasance because he sat back and conducted business as usual during the Attica situation. He is obviously more interested in becoming president of the United States... than in the value of human lives."

Attorney Charles Garry

National Guard, State Police, Sheriffs' Departments and Prison Guards fired their arsenal, ranging from the Army M16 rifle to shotguns with double "o" buckshot to hunting rifles loaded with soft-belly bullets (in violation of the Geneva Convention) ...all at unarmed Attica prisoners.

BLOODY MONDAY

September 13: BLOODY MONDAY. Rockefeller orders thousands of National Guardsmen, State Police, and Corrections Officials to attack the Prisoners. Hundreds are shot. The State's forces also shoot and kill nine of the hostages. The Prisoners have no guns. Many of the alleged leaders of the rebellion are marked and assassinated by the State's forces. 43 men die in the retaking of the prison. The Corrections Department says that hostages' throats were slashed by the prisoners. Guards torture and beat inmates.

Encounter with Chadbad

Hear the word Chassid from someone and the picture that comes to mind is a fanatical Jew, with a beard, a long black coat, throwing stones at desacraters of the Sabbath.

There is a Chabad (Lubavitcher) Chassid on campus trying to change that picture. Rabbi Yisroel Deren isn't a fanatic and he doesn't throw stones at anyone; although he does have a beard, and at times wears a long black coat.

How do you describe a Chassid: then-the first thing that strikes you when mmeting them is that they are very tolerant. They enjoy living as fulfilled Jews, and want to give other Jews the opportunity to enjoy with them. But to really describe you have to experience.

Benefit concert coming

A benefit concert will be held Monday night, May 13th, in the Student Union Ballroom.

Appearing will be: James Montgomery with members of his band, Fat, Clean Living, and Mitch Chakour and the Mission Band. All proceeds will go to the Montague Fund of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution to help battle the construction of the proposed nuclear power plant in Montague.

'AJDE!'

On Sunday evening, May 12, at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium, the New Haven Folk Ensemble "AJDE!" will perform a program of authentic folk music and dance. AJDE! is a group of about 25 young men and women from the New Haven area who have gathered together to explore the rich and varied folk music traditions of the Balkans and Eastern Europe.

The Ensemble presents the songs, music and dancing in a manner closely resembling what would be seen in peasant villages. Voice production, dance styling, orchestration, costuming and all the other details of cultural background are carefully integrated to give the Ensemble a realistic folk spirit.

Admission is free, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

John Betch plays Sunday

John Betch Society will play jazz and Vibrations of Blackness will dance at benefit in Mackimmie Dorm in Southwest on Sunday at 4 p.m. to help raise funds for the Third World nursery program, NEW WORLD DAY SCHOOL.

The New World Day School is an early childhood program for Third World three and four year olds. The group was organized in September by students who believe in developing a Third World perspective through early education.

In order to meet the costs of operating the school parents have organized this musical and dance event. Chicken dinners and refreshments will be sold. The school is dependent totally on the support of donations and fund raising events to finance the expanding program.

The school must either raise several thousands dollars by September or close the program to the Third World children in the community, who have also been turned away by other already over enrolled child care programs that although funded by the University are also in financial difficulty.

Since the New World school was not initiated by the University administration it is rumored that they will not fund the program this fall. State assistance for early childhood programs is still several years away, therefore, the New World children depend on the student community for survival.

Early childhood ed. opening

The Early Childhood Education — TPPC Program of the School of Education has openings for September 1974. This is a two year teacher certification program for first semester Juniors. Applicants should have completed some study of child development and have had experience working with children. Interested students may seek an appointment for an interview by contacting any faculty listed below:

Multi-Cultural Thrust — Ernest Washington, David Day, 545-2514. Anisa Model — Linda Blane, Dan Jordan, Don Streets, 545-0875.

We will notify students of their acceptance very soon after they have been interviewed.

Information about the program may be obtained from the Undergraduate Counseling Office 15 Hills South.

Equip. Boss needed

The Outing Club is now recruiting for a manager to run its equipment locker with its newly expanded rental equipment inventory. The duties of this part-time paid position (15 hours a week) include bookkeeping, handling equipment reservations, and inventory.

All applicants should have a basic working knowledge of different types of outdoor equipment and, as a representative of the club, the ability to further general good will public relations for the club.

As the applications close after Monday, May 13 all are urged to come to the locker, S.U. 415 as soon as possible. The Outing Club is an Affirmative Action-Equal Opportunity Employer.

Twelfth Night

A modern day production of Shakespeare's comic "Twelfth Night," modeled after the original court performance for Queen Elizabeth in 1601, will be offered at Amherst College Thursday, May 9 through Sunday, May 12.

Performances will be at 8 p.m. in the Converse Hall Assembly Room. The production is being presented as part of the college's department of dramatic arts Spring Festival of Student Directed Plays. Admission will be by free ticket, which should be obtained in advance because of limited seating. The tickets will be available at the Kirby Theater box office and the Assembly Room until 7:45 p.m. on the evening of each performance. The Kirby Theatre box office is open from 1 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday; telephone 542-2278.

The "Twelfth Night" production has a setting which simulates chamber theater; the chief focus of the performance is on the players, leaving the setting largely to the imagination of the audience. The lighting and costumes will further this effect — in keeping with the Shakespearian tradition. Appearing as members of the cast, the several musicians of the Amherst Renaissance Consort will perform during the show.

UWW prison program: it helps

Seven Norfolk Prison inmates are trying to break out.

But, hold the alarm whistle. They're trying to break out mentally, not physically. And their tool is education in the form of a bachelor's degree from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

A UMass program with the rather ironic name of "University Without Walls" (UWW) brings into those high stone walls of Norfolk a group of faculty members with courses and books and other academic needs. The name refers to the many off-campus ways UWW students may study, outside the walls, or campus limits, of the University.

Steve Bengis, UMass UWW prison program coordinator says the special nature of UWW appeals to the inmates. "UWW allows its students to design their own programs of study, using a variety of learning modes, including independent study, practical experience, and prior learning. In some cases for the inmates, this was the first time that anyone had asked them what they wanted to study, helped them to formulate and articulate those learning interests, and catered to those needs. This helped greatly in forming a mutual respect between the inmates and UWW personnel," he says.

Six of the inmates are serving life sentences, and the seventh is a long-termer. Even so, they ap-

Amherst Afro-Am honors past student

The memory of Gerald Penny, the Amherst College freshman who drowned tragically in the College pool last September, will be honored at the College by its Afro-American Society. The students in the Society have chosen to name their campus facility the Gerald Penny Black Culture Center.

Gerald Penny drowned in Pratt Pool on September 12 while taking a swimming test during his first week of classes. He was a graduate of St. Augustine High School in his native New Orleans, La., where he has achieved a number of academic honors. He was an honor roll member, a Student Council representative, had received the Outstanding American High School Students Award, and was salutatorian of his class at St. Augustine. He was one of three sons and a daughter a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Austin E. Penny.

In a letter to President Ward accepting the honor for his late son, Austin E. Penny, Sr. wrote on behalf of the Penny family:

"He was fiercely proud and extremely dedicated to his race and to the betterment of racial relations. He had always displayed the keenest interest in his identity and in the essential human values. universality and dignity of all mankind.

"He walked proud as a black American and this testimonial, while in his name, is truly a tribute to all young men who have strived — and who will always continue to strive — so valiantly towards the fulfillment of a sincere life, with the interior and exterior peace inherent therein....Since our son cannot be restored to us, it is comforting that his memory will be cherished by those who so briefly knew him and by those many fine students who will attend Amherst in the years ahead."

Quinlan announces

BOSTON [AP] — State Sen. John M. Quinlan of Norwood announced his candidacy yesterday for the Republican nomination for secretary of state.

Quinlan, a 10-year veteran of the Massachusetts Senate, said he would campaign to become "an activist" in the office which is "the public's first line of defense against the corrosive influence of special interests . . ."

He charged incumbent Democrat John F.X. Davoren with "reducing the office of secretary of state to a virtually ceremonial role."

Prison program helps

proach education with a seriousness and dedication not found in many other undergraduates, according to Bengis.

Why would a lifer or long-termer take college courses? "It helps a lot of them really get a grasp on their environment," says Bengis, and they're spending the time in a beneficial way.

The prisoners agree. Greg, inmate program coordinator, says, "We're in the educational program not only because it's for learning, but because it's the only worthwhile thing to do in here." How has education helped him? "Before I got involved in education, I knew a lot of things were wrong, just instinctively — prison systems, government, everything."

Courses are offered, for example, in music, African politics, economics, anthropology, psychology, and the sociology of prisons. The inmates pay no money themselves for UWW. UMass supplies tuition for each student, $40 each for their books, and the salaries or release time for faculty members from UMass. The inmates themselves have raised $1,800 from friends and relatives on the outside. It's money the inmates feel should have been supplied by the State Department of Corrections, but was not. The $1,800 will supplement the University's contribution for one semester, and will provide additional books, miscellaneous supplies, travel expenses for the twice-weekly trips by faculty members to Norfolk, and honorariums for non-UMass teachers participating in the program.

While the UWW program at Norfolk is in its first year, the UMass University Without Walls project itself began in fall, 1971 with 30 students and has grown to about 275 this semester. Thirty-one other colleges and universities across the nation also have UWW programs, which are under the direction of the Union for Experimenting Colleges and Universities.

Students and teacher meet for class inside the walls of the Massachusetts Correctional Institution at Norfolk. Steve Bengis, left, is coordinator of the prison section of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst program called University Without Walls (UWW)..

DES testing

instead of taking it off the market completely.

Although DES was approved for only emergency cases, many physicians continued to supply it to most patients who requested it. DES is also prescribed for acne, thinning hair, premenstrual tension, and as a hormone replacement for aging women.

Statistics from a recent issue of Ms. magazine say that an average of 100,000 pregnant women were administered this drug during the 60's and the 70's. Also, an unknown number of women took this drug during the 40's and 50's.

In an article written for Ms., Ms. Weiss said 90 percent of the DES daughters have undetected adenosis. The National Cancer Institute has set up five sites to test approximately 5,000 women. In her article, Ms. Weiss said there is a great need for more testing sites.

Ms. Riesterer suggested two articles for further information on the subject: "Afterthoughts on the Morning After Pill", in the November 1973 issue of Ms, and an article in the November 1973 issue of Medical World News.

According to Dr. McBride of the University Health Services, the number of women who have actually contracted adenosis is small.

There are about 100 offspring who have contracted the disease.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarius wants to be frank, natural, unencumbered but often works at cross-purposes, creating tangled webs, complications and building castles on pretenes. The Sagittarian self-image can be the exact opposite of what is happening outside, in the real world, in the material areas where people abide by their senses and not by what could be the case. Sagittarians seem always to have the most noble of motives — but there is a but and the moral question of ends justifying the means seems constantly to haunt them. Despite all, Sagittarius can be the most spiritual sign, and here is communication, publishing and the passing on of "the message."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): It is difficult now to be independent without creating obstacles. Know it and apply touch of diplomacy. Don't abandon principles but keep ultimate goal--and how to reach it--in sight. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Go slow with professional superior.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): By making effort to share knowledge, you build bridge of friendship. Know it and keep at it despite caustic remarks. Pace should be steady. Avoid sensationalism. Associate who seems confused is in need of sympathy and affection.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take deep emotional breath. You are going in too many directions simultaneously. Those who care the most are being neglected. Wash away wave of self-pity. What you invested was for a purpose--the puzzle pieces eventually will fall into place.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What previously was taken in stride could now become source of irritation. You are annoyed at one who seems indifferent to your feelings. Speak up--but remember that others have feelings, too. Lie low. Be discreet. You do have to face yourself tomorrow.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Young persons, members of opposite sex seem determined to create problems. You do best now by seeing various points of view. Don't rush to judgment. Keep mind open without being gullible. Deal with Gemini, Virgo persons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Costs could multiply. Be prepared. Refuse to pay through the nose. Balance books. Impulse should be balanced by logic. Those who want to throw caution aside really don't care about your welfare. Know it and keep guard up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What seems settled may be the opposite. Property values run high and low--get estimate from responsible source. See in light of actuality. Avoid self-deception. Tax write-off might cost you more in long run. Be aware and heed counsel of one who has benefit of experience.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Hold off on journeys, if possible. Tendency exists to confuse directions, reservations. Relatives now are ultrasensitive. Make meanings crystal clear. Leave nothing halfway--state facts in concise, complete manner. Disagreement will be settled. Grudge is counterproductive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid being rash with expenditures. Don't attempt to "buy" security--or love. Be what you are and be natural. Then you are presenting your best side. Message will become increasingly clear. Aries, Libra persons could figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Give attention--and feeling--to one who has been with you through thick and thin. Real friend is not throwing bouquets. Be grown-up enough to value sincerity. Otherwise, you will fall victim to empty flattery and emotional vacuum.

Singers' workshop tonight in Herter

Tonight, Herter Hall 227 will be the scene of a Singers' Workshop when fifteen students from a "Techniques in Afro-American Vocal Music" course will present a concert of solos, duets and trios. The course, taught by Horace Clarence Boyer, focuses on the singing of jazz, blues, popular songs , show tunes, soul, gospel and spirituals.

Offered for the first time this semester, the course has attracted a number of talented singers from all areas of popular music who, heretofore, found no directive expression for their talent and interest.

While the development of such standard aspects of music such as note reading, analysis, rhythmic relationships have been stressed, considerable attention has been given to vocal improvisaion of melody, rhythm and text, as well as ensemble singing in large and small groups.

Each type of Afro-American Vocal Music, from the blues to the present-day soul songs will be included in the concert, which also features several songs performed in the "jamming" manner of an instrumental ensemble. During the course of one song, several singers alternate on choruses for the development of the improvisational style.

The singers will be accompanied on piano by Jake Epstein, Patty Harris and Harace Clarence Boyer. Drums will be played by Alan Harris, and Congas by Glenn Rosa.

The concert is scheduled for 8:00 P.M. and the everyone is invited to attend this free concert.

Mosakowski is delegate candidate

Kenneth Mosakowski of Amherst has announced his candidacy as a delegate to the national Conference on Democratic Party Organization and Policy which will be held in Kansas City, Mo., this December.

Three 1st Congressional District delegates to the national conference will be selected in Holyoke on June 1st at a Congressional District caucus of local delegates who were selected at Democratic ward and town caucuses last Saturday.

Mosakowski was a delegate to the 1972 Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach. That convention approved a resolution calling for the adoption of a permanent Democratic Party charter at this year's conference.

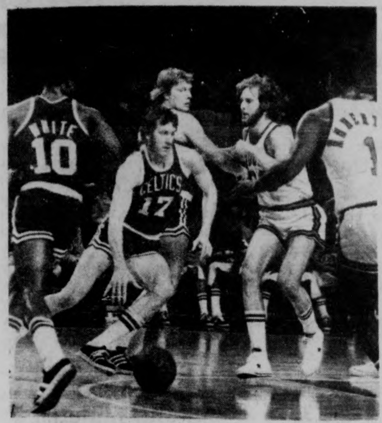
Heinsohn speaks

"We're going to win it"



"Jarrin'John" Havliceck catches the Bucks off-guard and slips up the middle for an easy lay-up. The new celts want to prove that they are as good as the Celts of old.

Tom Heinsohn broke a personal tradition of cautiousness Thursday and predicted the Boston Celtics will win the NBA title.

The odds are with Heinsohn, whose team leads the Milwaukee Bucks 3-2 in their best of seven series which resumes Friday night at Boston Garden.

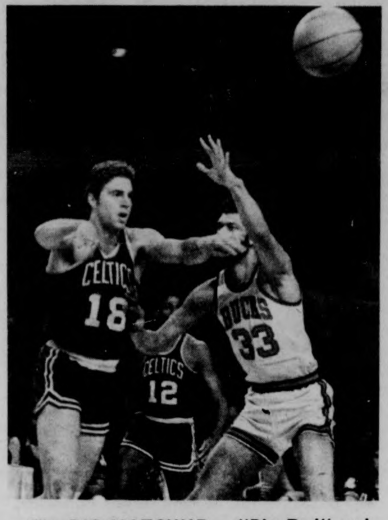
"We're going to win it," said the Celtic coach. "On any given night, either team can win, but we've beaten them twice on their home court and now they're coming back to Boston."

Heinsohn predicted further that Boston will win even if the Bucks take Friday night's game. "If we can't go back to Milwaukee and beat them, we don't deserve to be champs."

The Celtic players are hungry to give the fifth-year mentor his first champsionship as a coach. "I want the title and so do the younger players on the team," said Captain John Havlicek who played on six Bill Russell-led Russell-led Celtic championship squads. "They are tired of hearing about the old celts. They want to prove they are as good as the old Celts were."

But Havlicek was not ready to predict a Boston win Friday night or Sunday, sticking instead to his usual cautiousness. "It's not over yet," he said. "I expect the Bucks will be sky-high Friday night, ready to give us a real tough game."

Of course, Bucks coach Larry Costello agreed with Havlicek's statement, saying, "We've put a lot of pressure on ourselves, but it's not over yet. We had the same pressure last Sunday but we won there. But we've got our work cut out for us."



The BIG MATCHUP — "Big Red" and "Kareem". The one who holds off the other best may provide a victory for their respective club. If Cowens holds his own, the 12th World Championship Banner will hang from the rafters in Boston Garden.

Steve Blass

Trade 'em or pay 'em

PAWTUCKET, R.I. (UPI) — The Pittsburgh Pirates face a dilemma as they consider what to do with Steve Blass, the pride of their 1971-72 pitching staff — let him lose in the minors at $90,000 a year, or try to trade him?

Blass hit the first batter he faced, gave up a home run, a walk, a double, two more walks, hit another batter, and walked two more before he was lifted with two out in the first inning, while pitching for Pawtucket.

With the trade deadline approaching, the Pirates, Parent Club of the Charlies, must decide whether to keep paying Blass and hope for better times, or trade him and fear he may come back to haunt them as a winner elsewhere.

McDonald heralds a track resurrection

By WALT POWERS

Leave it to a Boston College runner to herald the resurrection of New England track.

Jack McDonald, the tall redheaded ex-flying Eagle who has held both the indoor and outdoor collegiate New England mile championship led a group of ex-collegians called the Greater Boston Track Club into the first club-college dual meet ever held in New England last week, and when the dust had settled on LLewelyn Derby track, age had been served – by one point.

It was another chapter in what is developing into one of the biggest success stories in track this year. From it's tentative beginning last September the greater Boston Club has developed into the fastest-growing track club in the nation, so fast growing, in fact, that Coach Billy Squires has visions of winning the A.A.U. relay championships this summer – an unprecedented accomplishment.

According to Squires, his club "is the first real track club in New England since the old B.A.A. of 1938."

"Oh there have been others throughout the years," he said "But they were primarily distance – running clubs".

§ The success of the club has surprised most track followers, including members of the club. When McDonald and Army veteran Bob Sevehe (at 31 "The oldest fastest miler in the country," according to Squires) formed the club in September, it was mainly to continue their distance runnine careers. McDonald, the driving force behind the group was thinking on a New England level and did not consider field events in his original plans.

SPORTING OPINIONS

Enter Billy Squires, the veteran coach of Boston State College. From the beginning, his ambitions have been unabashedly national.

"This can be the rebirth of New England track", he said. "It's a two year experience. If we make it, we've got something solid. If not, then it will probably fall apart."

It was rough going in the beginning. As volunteer coach of an unknown team Squires was forced to scrounge for meets and training facilities. So far, the expenses have come out of the athletes pockets, leading Squire's to quip. I'm thinking of changing the name of the club to the "Poverty Athletic Club".

Success was almost instantaneous, however. A second place finish in the A.A.U. two mile relay and a victory in the same event at the MIllrose Games in New York highlighted an undefeated dual-meet season indoors. A high finish in the A.A.U. relays will almost guarantee sponsorship for the international Cross-Country championships at Spring Bank Canada this summer. Now theeteam looks forward to the summer, a summer with the potential to turn the New England track picture completely around. On June 15 the Greater Boston Invitational meet will give Boston its first "class" track meet since the folding of the B.A.A. and Knights of Cloubus indoor meets. With such runners as Bruce Fisher and Howie Michael scheduled to compete this summer New England's first sub-four-minute mile becomes an enticing possibility.

"The reason we have never had a sub-four minute mile", Squires says "Is because the New England season always ends before the good weather. There are no June races in New England."

"You've got to set up a good race, he continues which means having the runners agree beforehand the pace for the first 1,000 yards, giving 220 splits, and throwing in fast pacesetters."

Results so far indicate a great reservoir of talent and interst in the New England area for competitive amateur track. The accent right now is on quality rather than quantity, but Squires says he welcomes anyone, "as long as he's sincere and dedicated. I want to fill out a full program."

The Magic Moment for New England could occur within the next month. On June 3rd Fisher Michael, and several Greater Bostonites square off in a televised mile at big B.C. stadium. Can anybody on the club break 4:00?

"We have never had a sub-four-minute mile...because the New England season always ends before good weather"

"I think we have runners who can break 4:02." Squires says. "We've got the ability, we just need the opportunity."

If by chance the tall redhead with the bushy mustache happens to crack the magic 4:00-minute barrier, listen for the rumbling at the Heights. The resurection will have finally occurred.

Incidently, the Greater Boston invitational is an open meet, scheduled for June 15th at Branders and McDonald welcomes all interested to compete. For an entry application, mail your request to: Jack McDonald, 33 Elmlawn Street, Braintree Mass., 02184.

Put the fun back into sports

As we reach the end of another year, I feel the time has come to take a pause and reflect on what sports today are really like. (I do not mean to copy the style of an ex-staff reporter who always was heavily into the heartbeat of sport, but I do have my own feelings on the subject.)

Sport, as we know it today, is no longer all fun and games, but a business. We have rival leagues at every level of competition, we have lawyers representing every player from the fringe rookie to the twenty-year veteran. And we have disagreements and squabbles on the same team.

A recent example at the major league level occurred the other night when Walter Alston, the dean of baseball managers, told his LA Dodgers that he was conducting an 8:30 bed check. Imagine, twenty-five grown men with families going to bed at eight-thirty. Then there's always the classic case at any level of competition of the player complaining that he doesn't get enough work.

WALTER ALSTON

When dissension occurs, the owner inevitably steps in and takes some sort of action. Since getting rid of all the troublemakers is no easy task – what if the whole team started an uprising – the manager and-or coach gets fired. Another case in point: in 1971 Alvin Dark was fired as manager from the Cleveland Indians because he was considered a strong racist. Well, racism is no reason alone to fire somebody, but the Indians also were sporting a poor record at the time and their owner then, Vernon Stouffer – who has that famous restaurant chain – got rid of Dark. And as susally happens, one of Dark's assistants was hired to replace the former man in charge, in this case coach John Lipon. Lipon's first statement at a press conference that day was the now famous sports cliche, "Well I don't plan on making any immediate changes." Today Alvin Dark manages the defending world champ Oakland A's. Their players are always complaining (mostly about their owner, the erratic and unpredictable Charles Finley) but when it comes time to playing the game, the A's show up at the ballpark, put all their worries behind them, and go out and win most of the time.

In football, a player can announce before a season starts that he is playing out his option – this will be his last year with the team. (he is, in a sense, graduating). So that player gives it his all in order to impress the scouts of other teams that he would like to offer his services to for coming seasons. He doesn't just lay down and die, he plays the game. And if his original team has been eliminated from all possible playoff competition for the year, he doesn't stop giving one hundred percent effort; he is a pro. He has class and he has pride in what he does.

When dissension strikes upon a team, someone like a writer must remain neutral, because after all he is not involved in the issues on a direct basis. His job is NOT to read between the lines and say that this or that thing should have been done at some certain point in time, but to just simply report the facts as they are while not taking any sides and also showing no prejudices. However, he can offer suggestions toward a peaceful settlement.

The people involved, both sides, cannot just run and hide, convinced that they are both totally right. They must come together and air their differences and reach some concensus that can satisfy all parties concerned. This may mean bending a little in both directions. All possible suggestions should be listened to and then when all these solutions are listed, to go over every one of them in order to make some sort of evaluation as to which course of action should be taken, what is best under the present circumstances.

Two years ago, the major league baseball players went on strike at the start of the season. Some baseball executives came up with the idea of playing the games using minor leaguers until the issues were settled. This brainstorm was quickly thrown out the window because the fans would not be seeing the real product. It would have been a team, such as the Boston Red Sox, with the same name, but disguised as something else. And when the season finally got under way, the paying customers in the ballparks around the country booed. They had their right to do so. And even the striking players admitted that they missed something from not being out on the field of battle for a period of almost two weeks.

So let's make sports enjoyable for eveyone again, after all, it's really only a pastime. Both players and those who coach them must come to the realization that they have to work together, functioning as one solid unit.

Kono Quits

CLEVELAND [UPI] – Morrie Kono, equipment manager for the Cleveland Browns since the Club's founding in 1946, is relinquishing his post and will become a part-time equipment consultant.

Kono, 61, will be replaced by his former aide, Charles Cusick Jr., who has been with the Browns since 1969.

"I certainly appreciate Morrie's desire to ease up a bit," said Browns owner Art Modell. "His loyalty to our organization for 28 seasons is something that just can't be measured in words. He possesses a great sense of humor, a commodity that is priceless in our business."

Gorillas' win: the shot heard around New England

By SCOTT HAYES

Dramatic? A fiction writer couldn't have dreamed up a better ending for a lacrosse game. If you missed the 10-9 lacrosse victory over Brown, you failed to see one of the most pressure-packed, tension-filled, down-to-the-wire clashes a sports fan could possibly want to witness.

It may be necessary to reset the state which resulted in a golal that vaulted UMass to its first major college New England title. With under half a minute left in the game, Rich Lally, a senior defenseman from Massapequa, New York, scoooped up a loose ball and winged it upfield. "I saw a white shirt and hurled the ball in that direction," said Lally.

Pete Connolly, the third-leading scorer from a year ago, gathered in Lally's pass and hit senior Hirsch Seidman with a split-second pass. "I wasn't aware of how much time was left in the game. When I got the ball, I instinctively headed for the cage and the defenseman swung over to cover me. That left Jeff with a one on one situation."

Jeff "Sure Shot" Spooner wasted no time in putting the ball into the net. Spooner's goal with eight seconds left in the game wrapped up the victory and left the crowd of about 3500 cheering for several minutes while the players ecstatically congratuled number 18. When asked whether or not he knew it was going in, Spooner replied, "I was just praying that it would go in." "Coach Garber told us to keep the shots low and try to bounce them. We had a few high shots and Campbell (the Brown goalie) stopped them," added the freshman from Setauket, N.Y.

"Rich's pass forced a two on one and all I had to do was beat the goalie," Spooner stated. Twice in the late stages of the game, UMass was thwarted when a goal seemed inevitable. On one play, the ball bounded off the post and another time deflected off a defenseman who had slipped behind a beaten Campbell. Commenting on those few frustrating minutes, Pete Connolly said, "For a while I didn't think we were going to score. We were controlling play but we just could't put the ball in the net."

The players had plenty of praise for the tough Brown squad. Brown fulfilled the expectations of the UMass team by fighting right down to the wire. The team had been working hard to prepare for the game and knew that Brown had some fine stick handlers. "We knew we were going to have to play the whole game. You have to play the entire 60 minutes to win against a team like Brown," said Rich Lally.

Enough can't be said about Harry McVey, who almost single-handedly brought the team back during the early stages of the game, but the defense also deserves a great deal of credit. "It was my defense. My defense won the game," said an elated John Rutledge. "O.J." had seen the other side of the coin in the Hofstra and Cortland games, and wasn't looking ahead to overtime. Rutledge pointed out that a fine team effort was the difference. "We worked together and won as a team," stated the seniorgoalie.

While on the subject of goalies, "O.J. always keeps us in the game. His passing gets the fast break going. As soon as he gets the ball, the middies head downfield and the fast break is a key," said tri-captain Rich Lally.

The defensemen that station themselves in front of "O.J." include Lally, Kurt Olson, Russ Incorvia, Tim Murphy and Bill Blaustein. These players were instrumental in the winning effort and kept UMass in the game with some fine plays and hard checks. Incorvia was stalwart throughout the game and Blaustein thrilled the spectators with a rush the length of the field, only to see his shot go wide.

What did the game mean to the players? "This is the happiest day of my life. In ten years of organized athletics, nothinn ever felt better," explained "O.J." Rutledge.

"I never felt so good in my life. The fans were just great," added Pete Connolly.

Three great passes sprung Spooner loose for the shot that gave the senior members of the team their first win over Brown. The way the crowd and players reacted to the dramatic goal, it's possible the shot was heard throughout New England.

The victory also served to illustrate the respect among the players and how a close-knit team operates. When asked about McVey and Spooner, team "quarterback" Rutledge just payed homage to his teammates. "They're just unbeatable. I wouldn't want the task of covering them."

Baby gorillas stick Westfield St, 9-6

By TOM CROWLEY

The JV Lacrosse team won their first game of the season yesterday, 9-6, against the Westfield State Varsity.

UMass dominated the game outshooting Westfield 37-17. UMass was hurt in the first half by penalties, but this changed in the second when UMass only had 3 and Westfield had 13.

Westfield drew first blood, but UMass retaliated 37 seconds later. Mike Altott scored with an assist to Dave Lewis. Westfield scored the next two goals, both on power plays. The baby gorillas came back with three unanswered goals before the half. Dave Lewis scored the first one, Ben Peirson the second, and Glen Nickerson scored the Third goal, with an assist to Dave Lewis.

Ken Michaud kept the fire going in the second half by scoring two unassisted goals from the point, but Westfield State closed out the third period scoring.

But 'mm 'Moose' Michaud scored again in the final frame, and Peter Lyons then scored after him. Sandwiched between two Westfield goals was another goal by Dave Lewis.

It was a rough game with the UMies getting 12 penalties and Westfield receiving 16. A fight broke out near the end of the game and almost emptied the benches.

UMass passed well most of the game. They had a few fast-breaks and capitalized on the opposition's penalties.

Tim Harney was again good in goal. Larry Heton played an excellent game, hustling and hitting all the time. Bob Graham also played a good game.

It was the best offensive effort of the year for UMass, and it was their highest goal total of the season.

The JV Lacrosse team is now 1-5 on the season. Their next game is next Wednesday up at Dartmouth College.

UMass faces UConn in 'meaningless' tilt

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

There's a baseball game today.

The game itself is meaningless, and for that matter the second game of the home-and Quy series between UMass and UConn on Saturday is meaningless, also.

The big games will be played between UNH and Rhode Island, two unlikely candidates to be playing off for the Yankee Conference title. (In fact neither of the two teams had won the conference crown in 16 years.) UNH has 5-1 mark compared to Rhode Island's 4-2. Thus, Rhode Island has to sweep the doubleheader, UNH must win just one. [When was the last time UNH won any Yan-Con title?] (I wonder how long its been since UNH has won any Yan-Con title.)

In any case, the Minutemen (0-6 in Conference, 6-12 overall) will host Connecticut (3-3 in YC) this afternoon at Earl Lorden Field, still seeking their first conference triumph. If they can't do it today, their last chance to avoid a winless YC season will occur tomorrow, when the same two teams square off at Storrs. (What ever happened to Omaha?)

Coach Dick Bergquist will send Craig Allegrezza to the mound this afternoon. Allegrezza, who has been somewhat of a dissappointment this year looked very good against Fairfield this week.

Jeff Reardon will probably get a start in the Saturday game, provided he does not work in relief on Friday.

Will the Minutemen finish out the year with a clean slate in the loss column?

We'll know by Saturday afternoon. Game-time tomorrow is 3:00 p.m.

SPORTS NOTICE

The UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team has been invited to compete in the Gator National Invitational Bowling Tournament in Gainesville, Florida. The tournament will take place on May 18-19 and is sponsored by the University of Florida. The invitation is in recognition of UMass's status as current ACU-I regional champion for New England. This tournament will decide the national team champion. However, it appears the team will not be able to compete due to a shortage of funds. A potential national championship must go by the board because there is no money available. If you feel as this is wrong please let your student senator know or call the senate office at 5-0341. Gorillas battle weak MIT

By JUNIOR GUNKY BARNES

UMass, 10 - Brown, 9. There is not much that the UMass lacrosse team can do to top their performance against Brown on Wednesday. That game was the culumination of a good season. The victory came on a Jeff Spooner goal with only eight seconds left in the game, giving UMass a long awaited win over the Brown Bruins and its first New England Championship in the major college division.

Brown came out hitting in the first period and it took Garber's Gorillas a while to get it together, but when they did they controlled the play for the greater part of the remainder of the game. The defense was exceptional in breaking up the Brown attack. The patented UMass fastbreak was executed very well, especially on the last score. Even with what UMass coach Dick Garber called "a super Effort", Brown was able to stay even with the Gorillas throughout the game. Both teams played a tough game with plenty of solid checking. The game was fairly clean; 7 penalties were assessed to UMass and 8 to Brown. UMass outshot Brown, 28-22 (including goals). The Gorillas controled the ball for most of the final 45 minutes of play but Brown made most of their shots count.

The rest of the Gorillas' schedule is almost an anticlimax. There are two games remaining. The Gorillas face M.I.T. on Saturday and Dartmouth on Wednesday. They should win both of these games handily. The Dartmouth game should be the tougher of the two, but no real problem.

Bruins felled 3-2 in OT

BOSTON [UPI] — Bobby Clarke scored his second goal of the game at 12:01 of sudden overtime Thursday night to give the Upstart Philadelphia Flyers a dramatic 3-2 comeback victory over Boston that enabled them to even their Stanley Cup final at one game each.

After Philadelphia defenseman Moose Dupont had forced the overtime by scoring with only 52 seconds left in regulation, Clarke batted home his own rebound after bearded Bill Flett passed the puck to him in the slot. It was the Flyers' first victory in Boston Garden since 1967 and marked only the fifth time in 40 career games that they have beaten the Bruins.

Dupont's goal came just seconds after the Flyers removed goalie Bernie Parent for an extra skater. Stationed in the slot about 20 feet in front Gilles Gilbert, Dupont took a pass from Rick MacLeish and sent the puck whizzing past the glove of the Boston netminder.

In identical fashion to the opening game Tuesday, Boston surged to a 2-0 lead in the opening period on goals by Wayne Cashman and Phil Esposito, with Philadelphia getting one back in the second and another in the third.

Yan Con track-UMass vs UConn

By SCOTT HAYES

In the past eight years, only one indoor track championship and one outdoor championship have eluded the perennial powerhouses of the Yankee Conference, UMass and UConn.

This year should be different, as the Minutemen and Huskies resume their rivalry, tomorrow, at Orono, Maine. It appears that the meet will be close enough so that a few upsets or exceptional performances could spur the trackmen to their sixth Conference title in nine years.

The meet shapes up as a carbon copy of the indoor YanCons, which UConn won by a score of 81-69. The battle for first should be somewhat closer than 12 points, however, with URI, BU and Maine fighting it out for third.

The championship affair should breakdown with UMass enjoying an edge in the distance events, and UConn holding the advantage in the throwing events. Both teams seem to have equal strength in the sprints, hurdles and middle distances. Supremacy in the long and triple jumps by the tracksters will be offset by UConn's group of fine high jumpers and pole vaulters.

In fact, the meet could conceivably go down to the last even with one or two points deciding the championship. Coach Ken O'Brien feels that the key to Yankee Conference supremacy is success in the hurdles, 100-yard dash and 880-yard run. O'Brien stated, "Whoever wins the hurdles, dash and 880 will probably take the title."

One of the key events might be the discus. So far this season, the weightmen have had few outstanding performances, but they'll get a chance to prove themselves in a critical situation tomorrow. Only ten inches separate the top ten discus throwers in the Conference. The pre-meet favorite is UConn's Rick White, but Ed McAleney, Tom Lonergan, Steve Mason and Bill Cooke will all be fighting to place.

The four UMass throwers are Conference-ranked and their performances will be worth watching.

Steve Crimmins, who has been running well, will attempt to defend his title as number one quarter-miler in the Conference. Barron Littlefield, a veteran middle-distance runner, will be shifted to the 440, in an attempt to pick up some ground on the Huskies. Littlefield, although a proven competitor, is coming off a painful groin injury and will face a test in the one-lap race.

Another factor will be the effectiveness of Curt Stegerwald, who has contributed points meet after meet. Stegerwald has had an arch injury and his foot is still a little tender. A sub-par Stegerwald would be a blow to the team and enable UConn to pick up some extra points. There are five hurdlers within four-tenths of a second and UConn's John Bracceo and Dave Peterson should be scoring threats if Stegerwald isn't at his best.

Jack Maloney and Devin Croft will resume their rivalry with Fran Brough and Fred Steigart of UConn in the 880. Maloney and Croft finished 1-2 during the indoor season and UConn's Steve Hulme will be moved to the half in an effort to prevent another 1-2 finish. Hulme, an IC4A finalist in the 600, equalled the Conference record at the indoor championships.

There should be several records set in the heat of the rivalry as the trackmen attempt to add the Yankee Conference title to an already outstanding record.

Women's softball teams edged by Springfield

By DAVE VARG

UMass played exceptional softball yesterday in Springfield but their arch-rival hosts still copped the win 2-1. The game was a pitchers duel from the outset and it took a break in the bottom of the tenth inning to decide the contest.

The vengeful visitors scored first in the third inning. Pitcher Micki Locke cracked a single to right and moved to second on a steal. Then Nancy Caruso sent a single up the middle and Locke came home. UMass had the lead and almost the game. But Springfield scratched across a run in the bottom of the seventh inning and the two clubs were extra inning-bound.

Inning after inning past and neither team budged. Vic Lentine, who relieved Locke in the fifth, was breezing. But Springfield hurler Pat Shoemaker was also unyeilding. The, in the tenth, Springfield got a break. Leah Carter banged a drive to right which got by the diving glove of Nancy Caruso and rolled to the wall. Carter ended up at third.

A short fly to left retired the next batter. But with one out, Jan Sholes hit a bouncer toward the shortstop hole. Fruzzetti dove and stopped it but her throw to the plate was off target and Carter scored the winning tally. Springfield won the game on the scoreboard, but they couldn't prove they're a better club.

The JV's gave their opposition a good game also, but they too ended up on the short side, losing 7-5.

Crew hopes to repeat as Dad Vail champs

By BOB ESTELLE

The 36th annual Dad Vail is Being held today and tomorrow in Philadelphia with the Massachusetts varsity heavyweights defending their championship of a year ago.

Besides the varsity heavyweight cup won by the Minutemen last year, trophies for the junior varsity, freshman and varsity-4 races are also up for grabs.

UMass will be entering one boat in the varsity, junior varsity and freshman races while two 4-man boats will enter the varsity-4 event.

The Dad Vail also has a 2-man boat race and a varsity lightweight race but the Minutemen have no entries here.

The main goal that the Minutemen have this year is to win the Jack Bratten Point Cup, given to the team accumulating the most points in all the events. Marietta College in Ohio won that last year.

In the varsity event, UMass, Trinity, Georgetown, Marietta and St. Joseph's (Pa.) are the favorites. UMass has been unbeaten in all of its races this year and the Minutemen are confident about winning.

Coach Mike Vespoli has juggled his lineup again and has found what may be the best possible combination. Peter Berg is the bowman, Peter Flood is at 2-seat, Jack Watkins is at 3-seat, KevinConnor is at 4-seat, Rich Clair is at 5-seat, Bill Fitzpatrick is at 6-seat, Paul Gowen is at 7-seat and Steve Loomer is the stroke. Bruce Kline is the coxswain.

The junior varsity will have to do well if the Minutemen are to apture the point trophy. Racing in that boat are bowman Bob Norton, Dick D'Addario at 2-seat, Bill Vose at 3-seat, Rob Hopkins at 4-seat, Mike Kaczmarek at 5-seat, Rich Jamara at 6-seat, John Moynihan at 7-seat and Jim Bouzianis at the stroke. Mark Lyle is the coxswain.

The freshman boat has only one loss, against Boston University, and is considered a favorite to win their event. To do so, they will have to beat out Trinity and Marist. They have Dave Ferguson at the bow, Dave Snyder at 2-seat, Dave Burke at 3-seat, Dick Seuss at 4-seat, Mike Melvin at 5-seat, Paul Shea at 6-seat, Dave Hansen at 7-seat and Dave Peck at the stroke. John Barrett is the coxswain.

Other freshmen will be in the varsity-4 event. Two boats are entered. Frosh coach Chick Leonard says that while they are freshman rowing against varsity oarsmen, they react well to the pressure of a race and can be considered as strong possibilities. In the "A" boat are bowman Al Segal, Dennis Brown at 2-seat, Jim Tilley at 3-seat, Robert Cullen at the stroke and coxswain Andy Burton. In the "B" boat are bowman Steve Latter, Mark Lucas at 2-seat, Ted Mone at 3-seat, Jim Linnehan at the stroke and coxswain Bruce Jacobson.

Today, the preliminary and semi-final heats for all events will take place with the finals coming tomorrow.

When in doubt, punt

By BEN CASWELL

When in doubt, punt. Or pass the buck. Or evade the issue. Or be unclear. The punting we're talking about here has nothing to do with football. What it actually is we are talking about is the punting that the gymnastics team and the gymnastics committee and various Collegian reporters have been receiving from the Athletic department.

In a taped interview with Athletic Director Frank Iclnerney not long ago he told me that the right to make any changes in the present decision to Phase out a full time gymnastics coach was in the "office of the Provost". Yesterday during the discussion following the presentation of the petition signatures to Associate Provost Bischoff stated that the decision change policy would lie in the hands "of the Athletic department and with AD Frank McInerney." Discrepancy? No, probably just a little misunderstanding.

Proposed plans have it that all varsity level competition will be or is presently now at "primarily the New England level of competition" to quote Dean Bischoff. Primarily is a very vague word but Bischoff clarified it by saying that it meant, "more than half." Athletic Director McInerney said, in that same earlier interview, that gymnastics would be phased down to an "all New England schedule after next season". Primarily was not included in this instance but it was probably just a slip of the tongue... so to speak.

This whole positions available, but what for thing, has me just about as baffled as anyone else. Or at least as baffled as it seems to have McInerney and Bischoff. There are two positions available in the Athletic department. One is going to the womens program as an assistant Athletic Director. The other is just not going. Or at least not until after next year when the "subject can be researched more inteligently", said Bischoff. Of course by that time the gymnastics situation will be long over and buried. All the freshman will be ringing and pommel horsing elsewhere and Gene Whelan will be either competing in the World Games or winning titles for University of Illinois or both.

Then that position could go towards the creation of a varsity level double talking team. When in doubt, punt.

Commission member claims

Privacy unit Gov's pawn

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

The Governor's Commission on Privacy and Personal Data was labeled a "Sargent political game" by one of its members Saturday during a special conference at the University.

"Sargent has done more for Sargent on matters of privacy," Miss Carolyn Hunter told the Collegian.

"Although the Governor has distinguished himself in this area nationally, he has failed to address himself to the problems in his own state. This commission so far, has turned into nothing but a showboat."

Miss Hunter, who is also a spokesman for People Against National Identity Cards, was the only member of a panel discussion on: Use and Abuse of Record Keeping Systems in Massachusetts" to criticize Sargent's stance.

Besides rapping the Governor on his failure to crack down on privacy invasion within the state, Miss Hunt also criticized the commission for not adequately educating the public.

"I am concerned with the lack of depth of Sargent's stand vs the National Criminal Information Center (NCIC)," she said.

"Although the Governor's position drew national attention to the NCIC state link-up, he has not dealt with those existing leaks of information to the NCIC through the state police computer system or through the Registery of Motor Vehicles."

"Nor has the commission been an impetus or force for him to do so."

MIss Hunter also said Sargent's inaction on the sale of information by the Registry of Motor Vehicles is an indicator of his wanting to "avoid the real issue for political reasons."

I challenge the Governor to challenge the political power of the Registry of Motor Vehicles in the name of citizen's rights and freedoms," she said.

"The question is often raised as to whether the privacy issue has become just new political rhetoric, and whether the Governor's Commission on Privacy and Personal Data was appointed for "political purposes only."

Majorie Eltzroth, a member of the Governor's staff and executive director of the commission, welcomed Miss Hunter's criticism's as "something that fulfills a very important function."

"We need that kind of public action to get things done. Carolyn is an activist of the group; and she performs a very meaningful task."

Asked if Miss Hunter's attack on the governor was justified, she replied: "Sure, he absolutely needs that kind of support. We need grass roots action."

Michael Dukakis, Democratic candidate for Governor, told a special legislative hearing during the conference that Massachusetts "still does not have a comprehensive policy on rights of privacy."

UMass officials to stop carcass disposal

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

UMass officials have decided to stop the disposal of animal carcasses in the vicinity of North Village, the Collegian learned Friday.

Complaints from students that dogs were dragging decomposed animal remains into the apartment complex has forced the administration to shift its burial spot to its South Deerfield farm.

It was reported three weeks ago that dogs had dragged rotting flesh and bones — even a horses's head in one instance — from the University burial area.

Although University officials did not consider the carcasses to be a serious health threat, Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) requested an investigation of the incidents.

Vice chancellor Robert W. Gage complied with Collins' request asking Barry H. Averill, director of health services, and Arless A. Spielman, dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources, to account for the matter and to propose solutions.

The investigation was assigned to Robert P. Gleason, the director of environmental health and safety and Charles W. Turner, assistant tohthe dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources.

The investigation was assigned to Robert P. Gleason, the director of environmental health and safety and Charles W. Turner, assistant to the dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources.

Last week Gleason and Turner released their report recommending a new burial spot at the University's South Deerfield farm "on the basis of soil conditions, water table, isolation and distance from the river."

"It seems to me the problem in this area has been rectified," Rep. Collins told the Collegian Firday.

"It appears that this type of thing won't occur again. The University certainly did not like the previous situation and was quick to respond to the issue."

Collins said he was glad to see the University designate accountability "which without it, was the source of major problems before."

According to Averill and Spielman, Fox has been assigned to ensure that procedures recommended are implemented and Gleason has been given the responsibility to ensure that recommendations are meeting the health and safety needs of the University community.

The Gleason-Turner memorandum of April 30 conceded that the campus burial ground was a poor site because "there are no isolated areas which are not subject to high water table."

"There is always the secondary question of aesthetics and nuisance if the animals are not buried properly which was reflected in the occurance mentioned in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian," the report said.

"Consequently, the general consensus is that animals can, and should, no longer be buried on the University Campus."

The report finds the new spot close to where most of the animals are located. Previously, the dead animals were taken from South Deerfield to the burial area near North Village Apartments.

"The practice of digging a large pit and adding animals to it over a period of time with additions of cover will not be followed; instead, a separate hole will be dug for each animal or multiple to a degree allowing for at least three feet of cover," according to the report.

"The concensus was that under these conditions, there was no need of adding quicklime to promote decomposition nor erecting a fence to keep out stray dogs...other advantages are isolation of the area and easy access by supervision," the report continued.

Looking ahead to the future, Averill and Spielman note in a preface to the report that the University should "seriously consider the possibility of financing the construction of an incinerator that meets the environmental requirements and is large enough to dispose of large as well as small animals."

"$ million mistake" needs investigating

A member of the Governor's Council is asking for an investigation into "a million dollar mistake" at the UMass medical school in Worcester.

Wayne M. Thomas (R-Worcester) said the teaching hospital's ventilation system will have to be converted from a low-pressure system to a high pressure system and that conversion will cost $1 million.

Thomas said he asked the state office of Administration and Finance and the state Bureau of Building Construction to answer questions at a Governor's Council meeting scheduled for Wednesday.

Thomas says there are conflicting reports whether the state will sue to recover funds spent for conversion or will not try to get the money back.

James H. Ritchie Associates of Brookline is architect for the hospiial, presently under construction. The contractor is Vappi and Co. of D Cambridge.

Two weeks ago a request for a $170,760 change order came before the Council for approval. Joseph Glynn of the Office of Building Construction investigated the request and he told the Council it was the first of many requests to come to replace the entire ventilation system.

Thomas said the low-pressure system was in the original contract. "Since it very clearly appears to be a design mistake, there is no way the taxpayers of the state would pay for it," he said.

Thomas says it should be determined just who made the original mistake. "If we can show the designer is at fault," he told the Worcester Sunday Telegram, "then the governor should direct the attorney general to do his constitutional duty and sue the company."

Attempts Saturday to contact officials form Vappi and Co. and Ritchie Associates were unsuccessful.

Legislators charge

Sarge, Quinn playing with B'town issue

A member of a state legislative commission has charged that the Sargent administration and the Attorney General's office are playing "political football" with the Belchertown State School issue.

The consensus of the Special Legislative Commission Investigating Conditions at Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital is that Gov. Sargent and Atty. Gen. Quinn are trying to take political advantage of administrative failures.

Although the state has granted over $3-million in concessions for major improvements at the institution for the mentally retarded, the two unannounced gubernatorial candidates are willing to trade the blame for the handling of the court suit.

"It is the responsibility of both Democrats and Republicans not to turn this thing into a political football as they have done," Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) told the Collegian.

"It's obvious that politics and political competition has indeed entered into the issue and fid drag the court settlement."

Quinn has credited his office with having achieved the consent decree in which the state is meeting some of the demands made by the Belchertown State School Friends Association two years ago.

However, State Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark regards Quinn's comments as "sheer nonsense" and added Quinn may be using the issue as political dynamite against Sargent for November's election.

"It seems that the Governor and the Attorney General are not as cooperative as one can expect. And this has got to change," Collins said.

"Service to the people of this state should be of greater importance than political advancement. There's evidence of a lack of real feeling for the people on the part of Gov. Sargent and Mr. Quinn."

Sen. John Olver (D-Amherst), co-chairman of the Commission, called the buck-passing of Sargent and Quinn "shoddy."

"Both are trying to take political advantage out of what is a demeaning failure of this administration," Sen. Olver said.

"There's been a hell of a lot of foot dragging from both sides. The Department of Human Services is clearly at fault for remaining insensitive to the entire matter. And there was no evidence to me that the Attorney General objected to the state's questionable behavior."

Olver charged a lack of workmanship between Sargent and Quinn on the Belchertown suit.

"If they did consult, then one comes to the conclusion that they didn't consult very well," he said.

Rep. John G. King (D-Danvers) called the comments of Quinn and the Governor's office "ludicrous."

"It's really incredible that two people so highly placed where the blame lies can maintain a defensive posture right through," he said.

"If the state had been willing to address itself faithfully to the Belchertown issue, then there would not be any need for Ben Ricci and the Friends who had to fight to get reforms."

King labeled the state's apparent neglect as "just an absolute scandal."

Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky (D-Springfield) said "the fute is senseless."

"The architect of major reform has been the Commission and the Belchertown Friends. Meanwhile the state has displayed insensitivity and partisanship to the problems.

"Let's correct the situation and make sure it never happens again."

Hoffman wins Fellowship

Allan R. Hoffman, assistant professor of physics, has been awarded a Congressional Fellowship by the American Physical Society and will spend next year in Washington working with the Congress.

Congressional Fellowships are administered by the American Physical Society, in close cooperation with the American Association for the Advancement of Science, to place younger physicists on the staffs of individual senators, representatives or congressional committees for a year.

Major goals are to broaden the perspective of the scientific and government communities in science-government interaction and to make practical contributions to the more effective use of scientific knowledge in government.

ALLAN R. HOFFMAN

Dr. Hoffman, 36, is one of two fellows chosen by a selection committee that received applications from a nationwide field. He will serve for a 12-month year beginning in September, 1974, and expects to receive a specific congressional assignment late this summer.

His research interests include the behavior of metals at very low temperatures, radiation monitoring in the vicinity of nuclear power plants and application of solar energy to space conditioning and hot water production. As author or co-author, he has published 17 publications and abstracts.

Off campus housing hdqt. to open soon

A new service will begin on May 20 for students who live off campus. The Office for Off-Campus housing will assist students or staff who wish to find housing within 20 miles of UMass. The office will be compiling listings of rooms, apartments, and houses that are available for rent.

A "roommate wanted" list will also be available. The office will try to match each persons needs and means with what housing in the area best fits those needs. The service will greatly cut down on the amount of running around that people usually have to do to find housing.

This office is a joint effort of the Commuter Assembly and the Office for Non-resident Students. The office will be open from May 20 to Sept. 7 on an experimental basis and will be evaluated extensively. If the service is used and is found to be helpful to those who need it, efforts will be made to make this a permanent service to the University Community.

Larry Gendron and Jill Zeremba have been employed to work in the office on a full time basis. Those planning to live off campus in the fall are urged to visit the Office for Off-Campus Housing, 229 Whitmore before leaving for vacation. The office will be open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily except weekends. Phone 545-2300 after May 20 for information.

UMass experts publish "Wetlands" bulletin

"Classification of Freshwater Wetlands in the Glaciated Northeast" is the title of a new bulletin co-authored by Dr. Joseph S. Larson of the UMass Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management and published by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Dr. Francis C. Golet, a UMass graduate now on the faculty at the University of Rhode Island, is co-author. The 56-page bulletin describes the 24 different kinds of marshes, flats, meadows, swamps and bogs commonly found in the Northeastern United States and illustrates each with photographic plates and line drawings. Each wetland type is described with regard to plants and characteristic water conditions which prevail in each.

This publication is the most recent addition to a series of similar works prepared by wetland experts in different regions of the United States and Canada. It is based on several years of study by an interdisciplinary wetlands research team at the University of Massachusetts under the direction of Dr. Larson. It is expected to be useful in wetland management under state and federal legislation.

The booklet is designated Resource Publication No. 116 of the U.S. Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife and is available from the U.S. Government Printing Office at a cost of $1.15, according to Dr. Larson.

A most repelling un-music at the Cage

By STEVE FELD

Aerosmith brought cag...
I can't hear you! Too loud.
Aerosmith brought cag...
STILL TOO LOUD!!

AEROSMITH BROUGHT CAGINESS back to the Cage yesterday in the form of some of the loudest, most repelling un-music ever to have fallen on these ears. The audience — a peculiarly animalistic bunch intent on reaching the highest possible state of artifically-induced euphoria — filled the place to the gills and fell at their feet. I would have too, if only they had something to offer besides a copy-cat Alice Cooper band, and a Jagger-lookalike lead singer.

Second-billed Elliot Murphy, in a pattern typical to UMass concerts, easily out-classed the headliners with an engrossing presentation of scornful, momentous music ("White Middle-Class Blues", "Terminal Teenager") that critics, similar to last year's Bruce Springsteen, are comparing to vintage Dylan.

The concert, slated to be held in the Stadium, but moved due to the rain, started two hours late, and, amidst the confusion, brought damages to the Cage estimated to be in the thousands of dollars.

In retrospect, it was about as exciting as last month's Emmett Kelly circus.

It's been a helluva year, hasn't it?

Elliot Murphy easily out-classed the headliners with his hard-hitting musical diatribes.

Delayed Entrance Plan gives incoming UMies a breather

By DAVID SPARLING
MDC Staff

The University of Massachusetts, through its Delayed College Entrance Program, provides students accepted at the university the opportunity to spend up to two years away from the Amherst campus "proving that all learning does not take place in the classroom."

Instead of going directly from high school to college, students are given the choice by UMass to work, travel and develop their interests outside of an academic environment.

About 150 students accepted for admission at UMass in September, 1974, have elected not to come right away, according to Asst. Dean of Admissions Sam J. Lussier.

"We understand that young people can learn more about themselves and things around them by not going to the university immediately following high school," Lussier said. "We want people to find something, learn something, and then come here to focus on them."

Once a student decides to delay admission UMass set only a few requirements down. The sole restriction is no full-time attendance at another academic institution.

The only other requirements are that the student notify UMass six months in advance of when they plan to enroll and the student write a letter to the Admissions Office describing what they are doing and why they feel ready to enter UMass.

Letters received by Lussier indicate a wide range of experiences, but they all have one thing in common — the time on their own, frequently the first time away from the tightly regimented life of school and family, is basic to their maturing proces.

Many students mix work with travel, establishing their independence. Another writes, "Living alone has given me the opportunity to live my life freely, restricted to my own needs."

Many students dealy admissions in order to accumulate enough money to pay for some of their college expenses. Lussier said that the rising expense of higher education is making it harder for parents in the $10,000 a year bracket and delayed admissions is a way to help overcome this problem.

One student who, after a variety of jobs, worked for a state senator in Boston wrote Lussier saying "If all I gained this year was a confidence in myself and an attitude that it never hurts to try, then I think my year was well worth it.

"Some people look at it to develop their learning skills," Lussier said, and letters from students bear this out.

One student planning to major in German went to live in Germany for a year. Another interested in Japanese art is spending a year in that country.

Closer to home, a woman spent time in Boston studying flower desgin and working in a florist shop. Still another student interested in marine biology worked at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute for a year — and hopes to return after completing his degree at UMass.

Lussier feels that the delayed admissions program, which has been offered at UMass since 1972, gives incoming students a chance to "express themselves."

Summer art workshop set up for kids here

"My Own Art", a summer arts experience for children, has been announced as part of the Summer Arts Institute of the Division of Continuing Education here.

It is a workshop in the creative arts for children five to seven years old to develop their perceptions and abilities through experiencing and creating in sound, graphics, movement, language and crafts.

The instructor is Kathryn Alexander, a teaching assistant in the University's Department of Music. Ms. Alexander has been a public school music teacher, and has offered workshops in string teaching for the Massachusetts Music Educators Association and the University.

Children are invited to register for one or both of the four week sessions. The first will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays, 9 to 11 a.m. July 8 to August 1. The second session will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays, 9 to 11 a.m. August 6 to 30. All classes will be held in the garden and Parish Hall of the Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst. Early registration is encouraged because enrollment for each session is limited to 12 children.

Further information and registration forms are available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass-Amherst 01002. Telephone 545-2013.

Women's Studies Comm. seeking new members

The Subcommittee on Women's Studies of the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women is now taking nominations and applications for positions on the Policy Board of the new Women's Studies Program. The proposal has been unanimously endorsed by the Academic Matters Council, passed the Faculty Senate, and has just been approved by the Board of Trustees. The Program will begin in the Fall 1974 as an experimental pilot project, and will run through 1976.

The Policy Board will be composed of three students, three faculty sponsors, two University staff members, two community resource persons, and the Program Coordinator serving in an ex officio capacity.

Immediately send all nominations for members of the board to Everywoman's Center, c-o Ann McCord, Coordinator, Women's Studies for the Center.

The Policy Board will be the responsible agent for determining overall academic policy and program direction, for evaluating the Program in its second year and reporting the results of evaluation to the Academic Matters Council, and for developing a proposal for a degree-granting major in Women's Studies to place before the Faculty Senate.

It will set the general guidelines for the Program during its two year testing period, hire and evaluate staff members and make all budgetary decisions. The Board will begin consultation immediately with outside groups working on evaluation, so that evaluative mechanisms can be built into the Program from its inception.

"Absolutely no shutdown," says driver.

Planned truck strike may not materialize

Ohio truckers said yesterday they couldn't afford to join another protest shutdown over high fuel prices and lower speed limits. But, said one driver, "We sure can't afford to keep running either."

The plight of the driver-owners in Ohio, A center of earlier protests, was typical of the situation among independents elsewhere.

Militants among the truckers have urged a strike at 12:01 a.m. today, but most drivers surveyed by The Associated Press said they would ignore the strike call by Overdrive Magazine, one of the leaders of earlier shutdowns.

"Absolutely no shutdown," said Jim Kirk of the Council of Independent Truckers, which claim a nationwide membership of 22,000 drivers. "The government is working on proposals we made in February. We're not satisfied, but we know they're working."

Some truckers said they didn't think anything would be accomplished; others said they were in sympathy with the shutdown but had not recovered financially from earlier work stoppages.

The drivers pulled off the roads twice during the winter, tying up traffic, blocking fuel stops and sparking scattered violence. They wanted more diesel fuel at lower prices, standardized trucking regulations and speed limits above the current 55 miles per hour.

Negotiations in Washington, D.C., in February ended the last strike and drivers say things have improved somewhat. But not enough.

John Pinchot, president of the Connecticut Independent Truckers, said his members were in sympathy with the aims of a strike, but probably would not shut down because they couldn't afford to.

The executive board of the 3,-800-member North Carolina Truck Drivers Association, which claims to represent about 5 per cent of the independents in the state, voted Saturday not to support the shutdown actively, although it expressed sympathy for the protesters.

In contrast, Willie Cheek, president of the Southeastern Indépendent Operators Association, said at the meeting all of his group's 200 members would park their rigs for the duration of the shutdown.

In Washington, D.C., spokesmen for the Department of Transportation said they did not expect any disruptions. Frank Fitzsimmons, president of the Teamsters Union, which opposed the winter shutdowns, asked federal, state and local officials to make sure that truckers who want to work will have no problems.

ADA relaxes opposition to easing of Soviet trade

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Americans for Democratic Action concluded its 27th annual convention yesterday by backing off their previously solid support for legislation denying the Soviet Union special trade status.

At the same time, the politically liberal organization split over the question of election campaign financing and finally decided to support partial campaign financing as proposed in legislation now pending in the Senate.

Earlier in the three-day convention, ADA delegates called for the prompt impeachment of President Nixon by the House of Representatives and said he should not be granted any immunity from prosecution if he either resigns or is impeached.

ADA said that while it supported the purpose of legislation to deny special trade status to the Soviet Union, it now believes "that because it is presented as an ultimatum, it is less effective in achieving its laudable purpose than a more flexible approach, one that would provide both a strong encouragement for the Soviet Union to extend human rights internally, and give the United States an opportunity to encourage Soviet compliance."

Instead, ADA recommended modification of the proposal, known as the Jackson-Vanik amendment, so that Congress could grant "most favored nation" trade status to countries whose conduct would be "carefully and closely monitored."

On the issue of campaign financing, a majority report from the "Political and Governmental Policy Commission" said that the Federal Campaign Finance Act of 1971 had "failed to bring the full reform needed."

It called for "the total public financing of all municipal, state and federal election campaigns."

A minority view from the commission, which later prevailed in the convention, simply urged passage of the pending campaign finance bill which calls only for partial public financing of election campaigns.

The minority report said that the pending legislation would "remove from the political process the inherent conflict of interest which now exists when any candidate accepts a sizeable contribution from a single source..."

Ervin labels Peterson's role in Watergate "highly improper"

CHARLOTTE [UPI] — Sen. Sam Ervin, D-N.C., said yesterday some actions of Assistant U. S. Attorney General Henry Petersen in his prosecution of Watergate defendants appear to be "highly improper."

Ervin, chairman of the Senate Watergate Committee, told newsmen that the recennly-released transcripts of White House tapes indicate Petersen kept President Nixon abreast of the prosecution of the Watergate defendants.

"The transcripts of the tapes reveal that he Petersen was over there the White House time and time again, that he received information about what the grand jury was hearing," said Ervin.

"He gave that information directly to the White House and the only conclusion you can make is that this information helped to sort of frustrate the work of the grand jury."

Ervin said it was "highly improper" for the head of the prosecution to talk about what the grand jury was hearing in closed hearings.

"Nobody has got a right to reveal what testimony has gone before the grand jury," he said.

Ervin was here to deliver the commencement address to graduates of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

At a news conference before his speech, Ervin said he also thought it "highly improper" that Petersen exempted former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans from testifying before the grand jury investigating the Watergate scandal.

Ervin said the investigation into the Justice Department's handling of the case has not been conluded and he would not indicate what action might be taken against Petersen.

But Ervin added, "All civil officers of the United States are subject to impeachment."

Ervin, who is retiring at the expiration of his term later this year, said he plans to ask his committee to delay its report to the full Senate until impeachment proceedings are completed by the Congress.

In the nation...

Strauss says Nixon in deep trouble

From The Wire Services

WASHINGTON-Robert S. Strauss, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said yesterday the transcripts of White House tape recordings demonstrate a "total lack of concern about the nation."

As a result of the transcripts being made public, President Nixon is "in deeper trouble today than he was last week and the week before," Strauss said.

Strauss, who has chaired the Democratic party for 17 months said he does not "take the position that all Republicans are sinister and that all Democrats are pure."

But, he said, he is bothered by "the lack of concern shown in these tapes, a total lack of concern about the nation, a lack of interest in its people and a concern about individual people, and a total lack of any moral indignation."

He said the transcript "puts the level of conduct around this White House and this President...in a different class than anything we've ever known or seen in the United States."

Strauss said he would prefer to "have a constitutional response to this mess" as opposed to Nixon resigning, as many Democrats have suggested.

Speaking about the impeachment process, Strauss said, "people are concerned about it and frightened of it, almost like a child going to the dentist for the first time. He's frightened because he doesn't know what it is; he doesn't know how much it's going to hurt and what this frightening experience is.

"And I think all of us are in that shape, because we haven't been through it before."

Strauss also sharply criticized Vice President Gerald R. Ford and said his party would be "very pleased" to run against Ford in the 1976 Presidential election.

Strauss said that instead of touring the country attacking the Democratic Congress "I think he'd be better disposed if he added to the public confidence in the institutions of this government.

Tornadoes kill three in Georgia trailers

By United Press International

Severe weather struck the South Atlantic coastal areas yesterday and tornadoes which skipped across Georgia killed three residents of mibile home parks.

Twisters touched down in Florida, Georgia and South Carolina and most of central Florida was under a day-long tornado watch.

The Georgia State Civil Defense said Rebecca Edwards, 22, and 8-year-old Connie Anderson were killed when a tornado struck a trailer park near Glennville.

Mrs. Loren Manning, 60, was killed and her husband and two grandchildren were injured when a tornado hit their trailer home near Rincon, Ga., 10 miles northwest of Savannah.

A tornado was also reported to have touched down near Statesboro, Ga. Georgia authorities said about two dozen persons were injured in the state.

One resident of a suburban neighborhood of Jacksonville, Fla., was slightly injured when a twister touched down there. Three or four frame homes and a number of mobile homes were damaged.

"As best as we can tell we had two separate twisters actually, with the second one pulling off a roof at an industrial park but causing no injuries," said Duval County Fire Chief Walter Butler.

Advantage over U.S.

Study finds Soviet might in Indian Ocean

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A new study of comparative naval power in the Indian Ocean by the Congressional Research Service shows that Russia has acquired a vast advantage over the United States there since 1969.

The study shows that Soviet ships spent four times as many days as U.S. ships spent in the Indian Ocean last year, and that the Soviet vessels were much more powerful ships than the American ships.

The study was published Saturday by Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., chairman of the House foreign affairs Near East subcommittee who has been holding hearings on a Pentagon proposal to put a major U.S. base on the mid-ocean island of Diego Garcia.

Despite the finding, Hamilton said he still believes the United States should follow a policy of "restraint and low profile" in the area and should defer any military buildup there.

The study, based on both unclassified and classified material, said since the beginning of 1969 the Soviet Navy has more than quadrupled the "number of ship days" its fleet spends in the Indian Ocean to 8,543 last year while the U.S. position remained largely static.

Last year, even with a temporary buildup during the Middle East crisis, U.S. ship days stood at 2,145, just about a quarter of the Soviet total.

Moreover, the study said, most of the U.S. ship days are being piled up by a "Middle East force" that consists of two aging destroyers and one transport ship.

The Soviets, by contrast, maintain a dozen first class cruisers and destroyers in the Indian Ocean and they have shown much more aggressive "surge" capabilities that the United States in times of crisis, it said.

The study said the United States will have to overcome a variety of problems if it wants to regain parity with the Soviets in the Indian Ocean. Even if the administration gets congressional authority to build up Diego Garcia, the planned base there will "still have substantial shortcomings," the study said.

While closer than the nearest current base at Subic Bay in the Philippines, and less subject to political disruptions than mainland ports, it would still be 2,000 to 3,000 miles from the scene of potential actions around the Persian Gulf.

In addition to the distance of its main potential base from the action, the United States will be at a serious disadvantage when the Suez Canal reopens because the entire Russian Mediterranean fleet can steam through the waterway, while U.S. aircraft carriers the heart of U.S. Navy offensive forces-are too big for it and would have to circumnavigate Africa in a three-week journey to reach a crisis area in the Indian Ocean.

Italian vote on divorce may bring down government

ROME [AP] — Italians are voting in a two-day referendum to decide whether to continue their three-year experiment in legal divorce or revert to divorce, Italian style.

Whatever status of the law, Italians may wake up tomorrow without a government to enforce it.

The highly emotional issue has divided and threatened to split Premier Mariano Rumor's center-left coalition government, already plagued by rampant inflation, labor unrest and increasing crime.

His dominant Christian Democratic party and the far right-wing Italian Social Movement are in fvor of repealing the bill.

Rumor's coalition partners, the Socialists, Democratic Socialists and Republicans, have sided with the Communists in arguing that the law be retained.

Public opinion surveys showed most voters favored retaining the law but a late trend indicated many were "undercided."

Socialist leader Pietro Nenni warned Friday that if that repeal of the divorce would "upset present political relationships."

Before the controversial law was passed December 1970, divorce was illegal, resulting in many life-long separations which have been referred to as "divorce Italian style."

Since then some 70,000 divorces have been granted under the relatively strict law, which permits divorce after a five-year separation or when a spouse has been sentenced to more than 15 years in jail or convicted of a sex crime or a murder in the family.

If the law is repealed, divorces already granted would stand but all current divorce actions would be dropped, and partners to an unsatisfactory marriage would find consolation only in a recent Supreme Court decision declaring adultery no longer a crime.

The Vatican and Italian bishops have strongly urged repeal, which one priest said caused conflict in some of his parishoners.

Kissinger reports progress in Syria

JERUSALEM [AP]-Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said he had made some progress in talks yesterday with Syrian leaders in working toward a disengagement of Syrian and Israeli forces on the Golan Heights.

He said no agreement has been reached.

After his talks in Damascus yesterday, Kissinger's shuttle diplomacy took him on a flight back to Tel Aviv. He then drove to Jerusalem for another round of negotiations with Premier Golda Meir and top cabinet ministers.

Israeli and American officials had hoped the secretary's 4¼ hours of talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad earlier in the day would score a breakthrough for a disengagement pact. But instead of a final response, Kissinger brought more questions to discuss with the Israelis.

Senior officials aboard Kissinger's jet said during the flight from Damascus that the Syrian and Israeli truce teams were close to agreeing on key elements of a settlement, but that major differences still remained.

"We have passed from the state of general discussion and consideration to a detailed and compelete examination of all the elements of disengagement," Kissinger told newsmen just before leaving the Syrian capital.

Kissinger had departed for Damascus early yesterday with his spirits buoyed by what American officials described as a definite and positive change in Syria's attitude.

The new tone - on the 15th day of Kissinger's latest Middle East mission, led the U.S. officials to upgrade the odds for a settlement by the end of the week to better than 50-50.

Kissinger's next shuttle to Damascus was set for tomorrow, and American officials said by then he is almost certain to know if he can achieve a separation of forces.

About 200 demonstrators shouted "Kissinger go home" as he arrived at Mrs. Meir's office yesterday. They carried placards protesting Israel's reported offer to surrender at least part of the captured Golan Heights town of Quneitra.

Diplomats increase security in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina [AP] — Foreign diplomats, frightened by guerrillas, have wrapped themselves in tight security and have turned some embassies into fortresses of glass and grillwork.

U.S. Ambassador Robert C. Hill rides to work in a $30,000 Chevrolet, so heavily bombproofed that his chauffeur complains the thick glass hurts his eyes to see through.

British Ambassador Sir Donald Hopson practices shooting regularly, and his embassy's hired guards have used up to 2,000 rounds a month in target practice.

Argentine federal police guard all embassies here, but some countries - including Germany, Brazil and Isreal - have brought their own sharpshooters from home. Others employ extra bodyguards.

The Marxist People's Revolutionary Army (ERP) kidnaped Alfred Albert Laun III, the U.S. Information Service man in Cordoba, on April 12. Laun was critically hurt in the scuffle and was left on a riverbank by the guerrillas.

Embassies had taken elaborate precautions before then, but no diplomats had yet been bothered during the recent years of Argentine terrorism.

"Right now everyone is scared," said one western diplomat. "I guarantee you that the first time someone is hit in Buenos Aires there'll be a line to the airport."

Reaction may not be that drastic if there is anew attack, but some embassies are already planning curbacks. Some dependents, including at least one ambassador's son, have been sent home.

"I think we can presume that since they failed with Laun, they will try again," said one European diplomat. "I think people who tended to be blase about security are sitting up and taking notice."

After the Laun kidnaping, the U.S. Embassy pulled back its other three U.S.I.S. men in the interior. The 80-person staff was told not to leave the Buenos Aires area on personal business. Official trips must be approved by the ambassador.

Protection has been necessary increasinly since 1968 when terrorists stepped up activity here. In five years, the American community has dropped from 8,000 to 4,000 estimates say, including 200 top business executives.

But it is not only the Americans who are worried.

The vault-like British Embassy is like Fort Knox. Visit slips are passed through a slit in a thick glass wall and guests are escorted in and out.

The Israelis, with more than just Argentine guerrillas to worry about, are reported to have the tightest security.

British raidnets IRA working plans

BELFAST [UPI] — Police said yesterday a raid on the Belfast headquarters of the Irish Republican Army's militant Provisional wing has uncovered the group's plan of operations and should "cripple" it.

In what may have been the first fruits of the find, British police seized explosives in a raid on a suburban London home.

In continuing Noothern Ireland violence, 19 persons were injured in a wave of bombings during the weekend. British troops defused a 200-pound bomb in Londonderry.

A Noothern Ireland police spokesman said the Provisionals' "blueprint for planned violence" was found Friday, along with a list of IRA key men and contacts in the raid on an expensive home in fashionable West Belfast.

Brendan Hughes, alleged leader of the IRA's Belfast forces, and another IRA suspect were arrested.

The seizures were "our most important find since the beginning of the violence," the spokesman said.

"It should cripple the IRA operations for some time," he declared.

A few hours after the Belfast operation, British police raided a house at Maidenhead, 27 miles west of London, found "a large quantity of explosives" and arrested two men.

They were investigating whether the home might have been an IRA bomb factory, possibly the headquarters of a recent campaign of bomb attacks in England attributed by police to the IRA.

Spinola may become Portuguese leader

LISBON [UPI] — A newspaper quoted Gen. Antonio de Spinola, president of the governing military junta, yesterday as announcing he will become provisional president of Portugal Wednesday when a new government will be announced.

The newspaper Diario Popular said Spinola made the remark to one of its reporters as he left the former presidential palace yesterday after a three-hour meeting with Adelino Palma Carlos, widely said to be the choice for premier of the provisional government.

There was no confirmation of the remark.

Meanwhile, diplomats said the new government is liable to face its biggest threat from the Communist influenced trade unions.

Prior to the April 25 military coup that overthrow a rightwing dictatorship, the unions had been under government domination. Strikes were illegal and broken up by police. Employer groups were able to stall wage increases for considerable periods after they were scheduled.

But soon after the coup, Communists began moving in on workers' groups freed from the previous restraints. The unions have issued a series of demands for shorter hours and higher pay.

"The extreme left is pretty strong and I think they have a head start," says Ervin Brown of the AFL-CIO's Paris office.

On Saturday, restaurant workers who live off tips and a 10 per cent service charge added to bills marched through Lisbon to demand shorter hours and a fixed wage. They threatened violence to cafe owners, forcing them to close.

Shop workers have threatened to break windows unless their employers close Saturday afternoons to allow a longer weekend.

Foreign trade unionists from the United States, Scandinavia, France, Italy and the United States have flown in to help their colleagues organize.

The junta, which has met individual union, delegations to hear grievances, has not recognized demands for a national federation.

It has given indirect approval to union activity because, as a spokesman put it, "The Portuguese people need to participate in their own restructuring."

The Portuguese chief of staff, Gen. Francisco de Costa Gomes, flew to the garrison town of Nampula in northern Mozambique yesterday for a first hand look at the military situation.

Aides said he was considering whether to replace the top army commander in Mozambique, as he did in the territory of Angola.

D'Estaing supported

PARIS [AP] — The head of France's caretaker government yesterday urged voters to back presidential candidate Valery Giscard D'Estaing to save the country from "the threat of Communism."

"We must demonstrate that France does not want the Communist party," Prime Minister Pierre Messmer said in a newspaper editorial. "We must also launch an urgent appeal to all those... who have still not realized the dangers of the Communist program."

Brandt urged out

BONN [UPI] — A West German magazine said yesterday that Willy Brandt's top party aide pressured him into resigning as chancellor out of fear that political opponents would capitalize on Brandt's alleged love affairs.

The weekly Der Stern The Star said that on May 4 Herbert Wehner, the Social Democrats' chief parliamentary whip, showed Brandt intelligence dossiers on Guenther Guillaume, a top Brandt aide arrested as an East German spy nine days earlier.

Wehner called the Stern story "pure invention." He specifically denied without elaboration the Stern statement that he had received reports on Brandt's alleged affairs from Guenther Nollau, the chief of West German counter-intelligence.

India may need food

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The key to India's chances of avoiding a severe food pinch late this year lies with the summer monsoon rains expected in early June, an Agriculture Department specialist said yesterday.

If the monsoon is poor, India's fall harvest may be skimpy and it could produce a 10 million to 15 million ton gap between grain production and the needs of its people, specialist Kenneth L. Murray said in a report published by the Department's Foreign Agricultural Service.

"India would experience great difficulty in making up such a deficit from the world market," he warned.

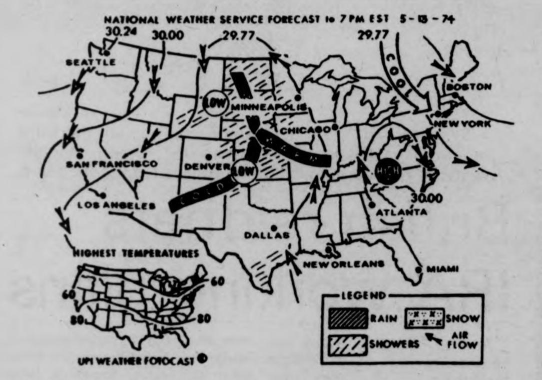
Red Square repaired

MOSCOW [UPI] — The Tass news agency took some of the mystery out of the Red Square coverup yesterday.

Explaining why Moscow's most famous landmark was suddenly blocked off by a wooden fence this weekend, Tass said the closure is to permit extensive repair and construction work.

It said the red granite facing of the mausoleum containing the embalmed remains of V.I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state, will be removed for restoration.

Tass promised that the mausoleum, Communism's chief mecca, will look the same when the work is completed. The 44 year old mausoleum, which is visited by tens of thousands of persons every day when it is open, stands on one side of Red Square beneath the Kremlin wall.



FBI silent on discovery of Hearst blindfold

From The Wire Services

SAN FRANCISCO — The FBI said yesterday it had no comment on reports that a bloodhound led agents to a blindfold bearing the scent of newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst.

"I have no comment on that today," said agent John Kelly.

On May 2, a bloodhound trained to detect the scent of Miss Hearst reportedly led agents to a blindfold fashioned from sponges in an apartment that had been used by the terrorist Symbionese Liberation Army.

The Chicago Tribune, quoting federal sources, made the report in its Sunday editions.

If confirmed, the development could indicate that Miss Hearst still is being held against her will. In her most recent taped messages, the 20-year-old coed repudiated her parents, said she had cast her lot with her abductors and participated in a $10,690 bank robbery with SLA members.

"I've known she was taken against her will since the very beginning," said her father, Randolph A. Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner. "It was not surprising that they'd find a blindfold or anything else," he said.

Investigators also reportedly found a bag they believe may have been used by the SLA as a face covering but added that the bloodhound did not detect the scent of Miss Hearst on that article.

The FBI agent in charge of the case, Charles W. Bates, declined to discuss any of the evidence found in the apartment.

In Thursday's Collegian, it was inadvertantly stated in a headline that the Watergate committee had accused John Mitchell of 'planning' Watergate. The headline should have stated that Mitchell 'approved' the plans that were submitted by G. Gordon Liddy. The Collegian regrets the error.

Soviet dissident journal reappears despite KGB

MOSCOW [UPI] — The underground journal Chronicle of Current Events, suppressed by the secret police 19 months ago, is again circulating in the Soviet Union, a group of dissidents said yesterday.

The Chronicle had been the outside world's main source of information about the action taken against Soviet dissidents. The KGB secret police employed hundreds of agents and arrested scores of suspects in suppressing it.

The dissidents, acknowledging they risk arrest for their action, told Western newsmen that three issues of the typewritten journal have been distributed.

"Not considering the Chronicle of Current Events an illegal, slanderous or defamatory organ, we consider it our duty to facilitate as much as possible its wide circulation," they said.

The dissidents are physicist Sergei Korvalov, mathematician Tatiana Velikanova and linguist Tatiana Khodorovich. All were among the persons arrested and questioned about the Chronicle during the earlier KGB crackdown.

The KGB told dissidents then that each new publication of the Chronicle would be answered with a new wave of arrests.

An unsigned statement accompanying the three latest issues says:

"If we should continue to keep silent, it would be equivalent to support by us, even if it is passive and involuntary support, of hostage tactics, which is contrary to moral law and human dignity."

The three issues disclosed today are dated Dec. 31, 1972, July 31, 1973, and Dec. 31, 1973.

Previously unreported items included are:

—A Lithuanian nearing the end of a 25-year term in a labor camp was ordered by a medical panel to do heavy labor last year despite an ulcerated stomach. On his first day at work, the ulcer perforated but a camp doctor refused to treat him and he died.

—An unknown number of Lithuanians were arrested last May 14 when they tried to place flowers on the spot where a student burned himself to death in protest against Soviet rule.

Drunk driving law may be loosened

BOSTON [AP] — The state's strict drunk driving law would gain some flexibility under a bill geing drawn up by a legislative commission on drinking and driving.

The commission is expected to recommend next week that the current mandatory one-year loss of license be eased to allow some drunk drivers to regain their permits after 90 days.

The problem with the current law is its inflexibility, according to the commission chairman, Sen. John M. Quinlan, R-Norwood.

Because of the mandatory penalty, police, judges and juries — often social drinkers themselves — are reluctant to enforce the law, he said. And even among drivers whose licenses are revoked, half stay on the road, he said.

"The law is not properly serving its primary purpose of keeping the drunk driver off the road," Quinlan said.

The proposal now being drafted, to be filed with the legislature this month, would retain the one-year license suspension as a starting point.

But it would give convicted drunk drivers the option of entering a 90-day education and rehabilitation program, at the end of which a judge could return their licenses.

Even after a license was returned, the driver would be required to report to a probation officer once a month for the rest of the year.

For a second offense, the license suspension would be for five years, with the rehabilitation program lasting a year.

The rehabilitation programs would be financed by $200 paid by the offender.

Yale suspends 11

NEW HAVEN [AP] — Yale University suspended 11 undergraduates Friday for what the school called their "persistent disruption" during a speech April 15 by controversial physicist William B. Shockley.

In addition, Yale said it was withholding a degree from a senior pending a review before the May 20 commencement.

A spokesman for the university said the school's executive committee considered the 12 as leaders of the disruption. More than 100 students took part.

The executive committee said the 11 undergraduates could apply in August for re-admission in the fall. In any event, they can return in January 1975 and study while under probation.

Shockley, who has won the Nobel Prize in physics, has suggested that whites are genetically superior to blacks. He has been shouted down during speeches in many cities.

Cyclists protest

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Some 500 motorcycle enthusiasts most of them members of motorcycle "clubs" like the Hell's Angels, rallied yesterday on the steps of the Capitol to protest a new law that requires them to wear safety helmets.

The bikers, who rose in from all parts of the state under strong showers, burned a helmet in the Capitol parking lot along with summonses they received on their way into town for their failure to wear helmets.

Rt. 7 study nixed

HARTFORD [AP] — U.S. District Court Jon O. Newman ruled Friday that the proposed section of relocated Route 7 between Danbury and New Milford may proceed without a federal environmental impact statement.

Barring an appeal the decision means the state may proceed with the northern half of a planned limited-access highway linking Norwalk and New Milford in western Connecticut.

Mistrial ruled

NEWBURYPORT [UPI] — A mistrial was declared Saturday night in a murder-robbery case at Essex County Superior Court, following 22 hours of deliberation and no verdict.

Judge Andrew Lynscott said he had no recourse but to declare a mistrial after two days of deliberation in the case of three men accused of killing and robbing a Newburyport florist in December, 1972.

Effects of closing mental hospital small

BOSTON [UPI] — A slightly increased death rate and a decline in the mental functioning of some patients have been reported as after effects in the closing of a state mental hospital.

The report, which was released late last week by the Massachusetts Mental Health Department, shows that 36 per cent or 207 of the patients surveyed, ahd shown declines in mental functioning one year after the phase out of the Grafton State Hospital.

Dr. Nasir Khan, who directed the closedown and prepared the report, pointed out the statistics show 185 of the former Grafton patients remained the same in mental functioning and 188 improved.

Khan's report shows that 38 of the 750 former Grafton patients had died as of March 1. Thirty of the deaths were reported for patients over 65 years-old resulting in an annual death rate of 8.5 per cent.

Kahn said the normal death rate for patients over 65 at Grafton had been 7 per cent.

He said the slight increase was far less than predictions from some sources which ranged as high as 40 per cent.

The Grafton facility, which was opened shortly after the turn of the century, officially was shut down in September of last year as the first major step in a state program to phasedown the institutionalization of mental patients.

Grafton was chosen due to its remote geographical location and the existence of two other mental hospitals in the region.

In a statement accompanying the report, Commissioner William Goldman gave assurances that there are no current plans to shut down any other state hospitals. "We certainly don't plan to close state hospitals," Goldman said, "but only shrink them as patients are placed in more appropriate alternate care programs.

Dukakis seeks time to respond to Sargent

BOSTON [UPI] — Michael Dukakis, Democratic candidate for Governor, yesterday announced that he will ask the major Massachusetts television stations for equal time to respond to Governor Sargent's television address of last Friday on the Racial Imbalance Law.

"I was deeply disappointed in the Governor's statement on the Racial Imbalance Law which he delivered over statewide television Friday night," Dukakis said.

"Like many Massachusetts citizens, I had hoped that we would at long last be presented with a thoughtful and constructive long-range proposal which could solve the problems created by the Racial Imbalance Act without sacrificing its goals.

"Unfortunately, the governor's speech did not provide that proposal.

"Therefore, on Monday I will ask the major television stations of the state to grant me equal time to respond to the governor's message."

Scully's anger justified, but...

To The Editor:

Susan Scully's recent letter of complaint about the Sociology Department [Daily Collegian April 29] deserves response. Specifically, Ms. Scully noted that the Department had only twelve course descriptions listed in the Course Description Guide for the coming Fall semester. She also reported considerable difficulty in finding advice concerning our Honors Program, and cited an offensive faculty quip concerning her reasons for pursuing the matter.

Her anger is justified on each count. Alas, we too were chagrinned to discover how few of our descriptions made the Guide. We had worked hard to meet its deadline even though it was poorly coordinated with the administration's timetable for making the prior faculty course assignments. As for the Honors problems, I apologize for the lack of help and for the graceless and gratuitous remark. Both are especially unfortunate since the Department is now developing new Honors options in cooperation with the new campus-wide thrust in this direction. Surely an important measure of any department's undergraduate curriculum is the number of Honors students which it is able to attract and stimulate.

Actually some of the confusion at issue here may reflect the considerable changes we have made in our undergraduate program for next Fall — changes which are designed to provide more meaningful new courses for majors and non-majors alike. This is not the place for a thorough review, but one example may be worth noting. Our old Sociology 101, "Introduction to Sociology," was so broad and so dry that it was often a dirge to students and faculty alike. Accordingly, we shall now offer a series of 100-level courses, each of which will have a different problem focus. Thus the student can choose to be introduced to sociology through such topics as "Race, Sex, and Class: Inequality in Society," "Self, Society, and Interpersonal Relations," "Age, Sex, and Kinship," "Contemporary American Society'," "Urban Life and Industrial Society," and "Sociology of Learning: Problems of Personal and Social Change."

But it seems to me that Ms. Scully is registering more than a complaint against the Department of Sociology. She is also raising some important issues about what it means to be a UMass student, and I especially welcome her letter as an exception to the rule of "apathy" which she laments. I concur with her diagnosis and would like to venture a possible explanation. Having come to UMass only two years ago as a rookie professor and chairman, I have been continually struck by the unduly low level of self-esteen which seems to characterize most UMass undergraduates. The fact is that this is a far better university than most of its students realize, and the students themselves are far more capable then their self-images would suggest.

Perhaps partly as a legacy of the old days of "Mass Aggie," many entering undergraduates see the university as a second- or third-best alternative. The prevailing student culture is basically non-intellectual. While the campus is perceived as adequate for occupational training, it is rarely taken advantage of as an intellectual community. All of this may have been realistic in the past, but it is sadly out of step today. As I compare this campus with such places as Harvard, Berkeley, and the University of Wisconsin, I am struck far more by the similarities than the differences. The further I travel from Amherst, the higher the reputation of UMass appears to be. The overwhelming fact is that ours is a first-rate university whose name is increasingly mentioned in the front-ranks of higher educational excellence around the country and around the world.

In short, the resources are here, and students do themselves a disservice by not responding to them with pride and vigor. Of course, students in any university community must be aggressive in pursuit of excellence. If the Department of Sociology has let its own students down, I welcome Ms. Scully's complaint and can only say, "Write on!"

"Human power" unites, pie carving divides

To The Editor:

I was reading an article the other day and came across this which might do us all some good if we think on it

"They make black and white fight each other so they can take over at each end. If they can get the Black Panthers fighting the hippies, who are really the young whites, then we will be right back where we started off twenty years ago."

Now here we are at UMass and I see plenty of racists amongst our age group who will probably end up in the milhous nixon corporation anti human fuck over machine. But what about people who aren't like that? We've got to give people a chance to prove their worth as individuals. It seems to me an increasing number of Black people are beginning to typecast all whites into the racist category, either as overt or the guilty racist and that's wrong. It appears to me that it's just the other end of the spectrum of the same type of "step-n-fetch it" racism which still prevails today in a great many insect heads. Black Power should not be something which is going to be tomorrow's racism and it should not cloud out the fact that we are human beings first. This same problem exists [or should I say is cultivated] in the White Power Structure, which we are against because we are human beings. I'm sure that none of us want to perpetuate that system by replacing it with just another stupid type cast one.

Can't you see that there are plenty of white people who want freedom. You could counter and say that because we were born white we just naturally had freedom. But look what kind! We are free to cut our hair and paint on america can do no wrong smiles, we can join their "honorable" corporations which will keep our health in mind when they send us down into coal mines or keeps us locked up in little gray boxes within their city pride skyscrapers, we are free to participate in government and watch watergate infested puppets dance on strings and attempt to destroy us, and we are free to join the ranks of the great american middle class which gets every technological piece of bullshit crammed down their eager mouths. Is that the kind of freedom any sane person wants.

Humans have got to lock together in HUMAN POWER otherwise the great power structure will again resume gorging themselves on human pie which is once more separated according to each color slice. This structure has been around a long time, so don't think it's just sitting on its ass while they watch others try to change it. They can call on their own assortment of brains to think up ways to subvert us and if Blacks begin acting like racist whites then those america must rule corporate bastards in their putrid parlors of shameful achievement will be on the road again to a new time of prosperity.

Library applying for liberary depletion tax

To The Editor:

Imagine yourself on the library's elevator and you are about to land on the nineteenth floor. You are anxiously waiting to get your books because that last paper of the semester is due tomorrow. The elevator stops, you exit but you see no books. They are all gone. You frantically run to the other floors but to no avail. The books are all gone. Your once-over-a-one-million collection has been depleted. What a paradox. UMass has one of the tallest libraries in the country and not one book.

Although this situation is not credible I can envision the library confronting a disaster in the near future if something is not done to curtail the current rate of book theft. A recent survey taken in the library shows that 6 per cent of our collection is missing. This percentage represents nearly 40,000 books and in monetary terms approximately $400,000.00

Unfortunately because of budget cutbacks we can not feasibly replace all these books. Hopefull some of these missing books are still on the UMass campus. We are asking for your help in bringing back your books. To protect your library take a positive initiative to search your closets, rooms, and cars to see if you have some of these missing books. If you really get excited about tracking down these books you could also search your dorms. Have a search-for-books party in the dorm. The library needs these books. If these books find their way back to the library you will really be doing the school a favor. And in the long run you might even be helping yourself.

In returning the books, you don't have to worry about any problems. Returning lost books is a hassle-free transaction. It might be the only one you have all semester so give it a try. Please help us solve the missing books dilemma.

Bromery, Gage host seniors

To The Editor:

To the disappointment of many seniors and undergraduates here no funds were allocated to Senior Day this year.

Senior Day has remained one of the few traditions left on this campus besides commencement. It is a day of beer, bands, graduation mugs, and old friends since freshman year, getting together before everyone goes their separate ways into the world.

In April, when it was realized that there was no Senior Day, a group of interested Seniors got together and decided to try to receive funding for the occasion. They took their problem to Jill Cochrane, program advisor in the Student Activities Office. She knew they were willing to work and she told them that she would try to help them in any way she could.

With Jill's support and with the willingness of a group of seniors to help organize our only commencement activity besides graduation, we took our problem to different administrators. They sympathized with our plight, recognizing the severe identity problem at this University, and enabled us to attain our goal.

The root of the problem as to why there was no funding this year still needs to be dealt with. The class of 1974 is the first graduating class in the history of the University of Massachusetts to have absolutely no funds for an alumni class reunion, a class gift, or a commencement activity such as Senior Day. In the past, classes have received this funding from a $3.00 fee taxed on the bill of seniors approved by the Student Senate. This year no such fee was added to the bills because last year when the motion was up before the Senate there was no action taken on it. Consequently, since there was no discussion the motion was tabled, and the fee was dropped. Undergraduates, take notice if you wish to go to your own Senior Day!!

But, for this year, the Commencement Reception for Seniors is being hosted by Chancellor Bromery and Vice Chancellor Gage, and will be held May 31, 1974, in full tradition, at the Quad from 12 noon until 6 p.m. The day will be complete with graduation mugs, bands, and plenty of beer for a set price of $1.00 for Seniors and $2.00 for a senior's guest. The administrators will hopefully be there and seniors are encouraged to invite their favorite faculty or staff member. Tickets will be on sale until May 24 on the Campus Center Concourse. Tickets will also be on sale the day of the Commencement Reception for Seniors — Senior Day. We sincerely hope that many people will come and celebrate with us on this last day of revelry before graduation.

Why is Dean Tucker so mean?

The other day I happened to be in a rare position: headed to one of my classes. My eyes picked up a familiar face in the crowd. "Zamir! Zamir Nestelbaum!" I yelled. "What are you doing in Amherst?"

"What do you mean?" "I haven't left the campus center in two and a half years."

"That's what I thought. But I read your column yesterday and it was datelined Kishinev, Moldavia (U.S.S.R.). Isn't that unethical?"

"Yeah. But I couldn't help myself, Mike. It's because of Dean Tucker."

"I don't get it."

"Well he's the Executive Editor, you see, and he's mean as Hell."

"So?"

"So?! In last week's column I spelled Josherina Toughcookie incorrectly and ... well ... look at my hand."

"Wow it looks like a snakebite," I said.

"No such luck he stapled the column to my hand and told me to get it corrected soon. I'm taking no more chances ... o-oh I think I see him coming, so long."

"We'll see you Zamir."

I couldn't forget the story that Zamir had told me. I thought it was worth pursuing. So I looked up the annual Collegian poll to see what the readership thought about the editors and the newspaper. The results would have shocked Leon Jaworski!

Of those who had done business with the editorial department, the following question was put; WHAT DO YOU THINK OF DEAN TUCKER. The results are as follows:

24 per cent - No comment
61 per cent - Ran away
15 per cent - Spit

Staff Photo-George Withers

Dean Tucker

"He's filthy, immoral, disgusting, spiteful, and has a mean disposition," Dean s mother was quoted as saying.

I began to think that something might be wrong with this character. Then I remembered that Jerry Lazar knew him. I saw Jerry outside Machmer one day he was stumbling around. "What's wrong?" I asked.

"Oh I feel terrible," Lazar replied, "I just got out of Mental Health."

"I see! A personal problem?"

"PERSONAL!!! hell no! Everybody knows about it. And it's all Dean's fault."

"Dean Tucker?"

"Yeah, the dirty schmuck. It wasn't enough that he told everyone that I had no class. But now... this... look at it."

Jerry dropped the paper shaking his head with incredulity. I picked it up.

"He sent this to rabbi in Philadelphia after I forgot to order mustard for his pastrami grinder," a beleaguered Lazar reported. I read the note.

oy voy
Lazar's a goy
He eats ham knishes
From christian dishes

This is incredible," I said, "Will he stop at nothing?" Don't worry Jerry. I'm going to take this to people who can act — the student judiciary. If student government won't solve a student's problem then who will!?"

After making eighty-seven phone calls and standing in five lines I made it to the waiting room of the office of the Student Judiciary: Prosecutor of Positive Execution and Your Enlightenment (POPEYE-office hours 6:30 - 7:30 a.m. Tuesday). Sitting next to me was a rather robust bearded fellow with a southern drawl.

"Don't I know you I asked?"

"I don't know let me introduce myself, my name is Charles Camelopard. I'm the Collegian's Washington correspondent."

"Of course! How do you do?"

"Why are you in POPEYE?"

"I'm here to register a complaint against Dean Tucker for ..."

"...Dean ... not another one. Look there's another side to this story."

"Yeah. yeah, I said, and Nixon's really a swell human being too."

"Look kid. We all have our off days. Why I bet you never even had a decent conversation with Tuck."

"Well I haven't but..."

"Why if you knew him back in the old days ... He was a pacifist, you know."

"Really!"

"Sure one year he won the coveted Carlotta J. Molasses Award for easy living and awareness."

"No kidding."

"Sure and he helps little old ladies across the street and is a very involved person."

"Well maybe I was a bit too hasty, Mr. Camelopard."

"Besides that he's allowing Howard Ziff to stay on an extra year," Camelopard added.

"Well that sheds a different light on things," I said.

"Now that's the spirit."

"By the way Mr. Camelopard, What are you doing in this area if your beat is Washington?"

"Oh I don't write out of Washington. I just use it as a byline."

"Why?"

"So I won't have to put up with Tucker's shit."

"Well I'll be damned."

"You will be."

Disagree? Conflict is the key

By RAYMOND TIE

Considering that the United States is the richest country in the world, that per capita it is the best to live in, that virtually anyone can have a stab at becoming a millionaire, that no person here has to endure the internal agony of not being able to cry out in anger at inequity, why are there such groups as the S.L.A., the Death Angels, and the Ku Klux Klan?

To a certain degree, their presence is dictated by disagreement on socio-economic questions, but the basis for their existence is far more simple and far less intricate. It is contlict: the device that makes democracy work; that lends credence to the institution of popular sovereignty. Two hundred million people cannot possibly live in harmony continually. Divergence is unavoidable. To compensate, the system of government we use attempts not to avoid conflict, but to accept it as necessary, to even encourage it, and then hopefully synthesize it into change.

For practicality's sake, it is the means by which we cont rol the infinite tendency of government to isolate itself at the expense of people. it is our safeguard against becoming mere puppets of a snowballing bureaucracy. The constitutional carpenters realized the importance of this concept and made it their first responsibility to insure for future generations the rights of free speech, of dissent, and of demonstration to voice that dissent. They realized that not to do so would extract the very core of the viability of democracy. It is the responsibility of the people to promote their wishes, to make known their needs, and to establish without doubt the fact that they are the theoretical and practical center of democracy.

Unfortunately, it is readily apparent that the people vacillate an awareness of this doctrine. Sometimes they let their responsibility slide, they procrastinate. They become apathetic, saying, "what does it matter?" or, "it doesn't affect me."

This is wrong to the point of threatening the essence of a free land. American history has proven over and over that the "checks and balances" system is inadequate and falls short of its expected goal. Time and again one branch of the government has found itself involved in a protracted battle to regain control of its expressed purpose. Evidence at hand; Nixon vs. Congress.

In light of this inherent defect, it becomes even more important that we assume the responsibility of assuring government for the people. To turn the rusting wheels of government requires conflict. We must initiate it and not let it die of disconcern. Similarly, we also must not pass the opportunity to use existing conflict.

Although I far from agree with the violent thievery of the Symbionese Liberation Army, and althouth I detest the racist violence of the Ku Klux Klan and the Death Angels, I can not completely chastise them.

They have their conceptions of ideal life in this country and are using their constitutionally guaranteed right of dissent and conflict without being thwarted or intimidated by the expanse of bureaucratic machinery in Washington. They are actively pursuing conflict, realizing full well its impact on the system.

Some call them radical or reactionary, others commie or nazi, but whatever title they are accorded, they have chosen their routes and are seeking their ends through a democratic notion — conflict to achieve change. If we do not agree, if they anger us or depress us, or if they bother our sense of human value, then it is our duty to provide the other side of the conflict.

Governments crumble: Who's next?

By BOB FOSTER

Governments are toppling about us as quickly as the news media can report their downfall. England, Portugal, Israel, Canada, and West Germany have all crumbled before our worldly eyes. Each fell for differing reasons; democratic overthrow, popular revolution, errors of political judgment. Yet, in most, political dignity was a watchword, an ideal that in some cases was surpassed by human integrity.

Examine England, Israel, and Canada. Each government fell before the will of the citizenry. The parlimentary process showed the world that confidence in the fuling party is the key to political success. In each, a strong premier, a party leader succombed to the guiding political hand of those who placed he or she in the office. There were no quarrels. There were no last minute clings to power. There was only a system that ground its tired gears and produced another ruling party with another ruling personage.

Examine Portugal. Indeed, the system suffered a massive breakdown. Confidence in iron rule was replaced with left wing optimism. The people expressed a collective, violent opinion about the ancient methods utilized by the rulers. The people succeeded in expressing this opinion collectively enough and violently enough to achieve new representation. They met their initial goal. Pray they achieve the desired results beyond that goal. Pray they achieve the desired results beyond that goal. Optimism and idealism are most difficult objectives in the governance of individuals.

Finally, examine West Germany. A true crisis of confidence was met with a political and human integrity far superior to anything the world has ever seen. The goal of the ruler was not selfish. He didn't cling to a seemingly lost power. Instead, he valiantly conceded his error and withdrew from his position. He conceded to the people. He followed the unwritten rules of political integrity to the letter. He epitomized a true world leader with ideals far beyond himself.

Upn examination of the rest of the free world and discovering similar cases throughout, we turn to that haven of political freedom, the United States. Here, freedom has turned against us. An anachronistic system taunts us with its imperfections. It dangles a powerless President before us like a political carrot upon a twisted governmental stick. With each new awakening, we drool more furiously for a bite of that carrot.

Yet, the President continues to cling to that which is no longer his. Paranoia sets in. The Oval Office becomes not a symbol of honesty and integrity as it should be, but a nest of cackling ravens begging for more power. No longer can America be viewed as the supreme example of how a free, democratic institution should function. That tale is now an American myth that you may tell your grandchildren. Instead, the country hangs its head in a dignified shame with the hopes that it was all a bad dream.

Hopefully, it shall soon be finished. America shall wipe its hands clean of the nasty overtones and debasing innuendos. Confidence shall again become the watchword. Our President shall follow the lead of the Brandts and the Meirs of the world. He shall resign perhaps lacking the dignity and integrity. But, he shall resign.

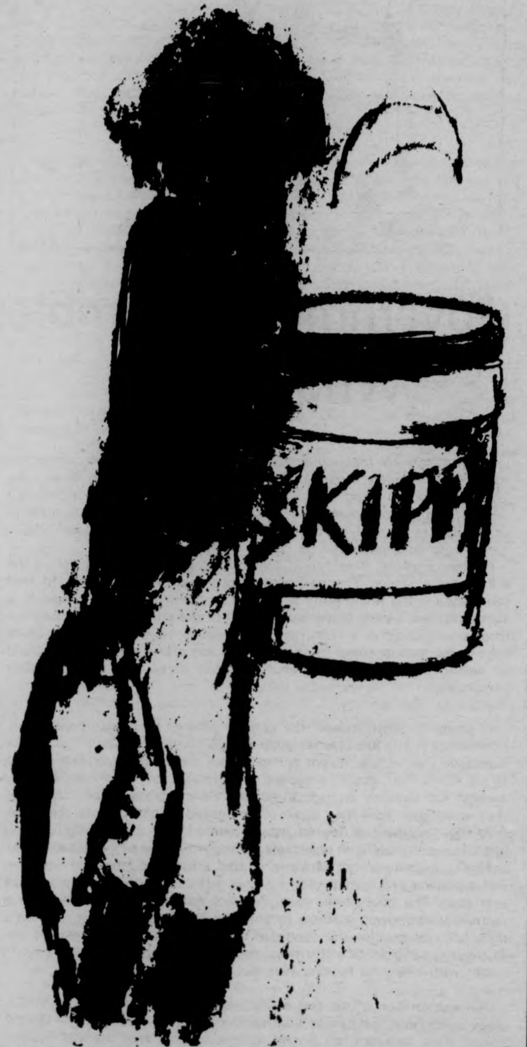
Ethnicity in America

A personal commentary
by Denny Matteau

Getting an education



To be a white who applauds black militance can be a confusing, frustrating experience.. It is, apparently, against my own material self-interest, for when one sees the tremendous competition in this society just among white men, who usually have the advantage over half of their own race as well as all of every other race, it is too much to imagine the level of competition that would exist if we all really did have an equal chance to begin with. The hierarchical structure of society, which has prevailed for so long that it's hard to imagine an alternative, just can't accomodate everybody.

And so, it is obvious that it is absolutely impossible to demand equality for blacks, women, spanish, etc., within the framework of our present society and culture. If we win equality without changing society, we will all, in effect, become white men. The structure of culture supports the structure of society, and serves to keep rulers, rulers. Elements of other cultures which live alongside or within the society become hidden, and then lost through ignorance, sometimes enforced ignorance, as when certain subjects cannot be taught.

We are happily seeing the establishment of Black Studies and Womens Studies programs, which are an attempt to save the cultural heritage of certain people, so that those people won't become empty cogs, getting along in a society that's forgotten great chunks of its own history.

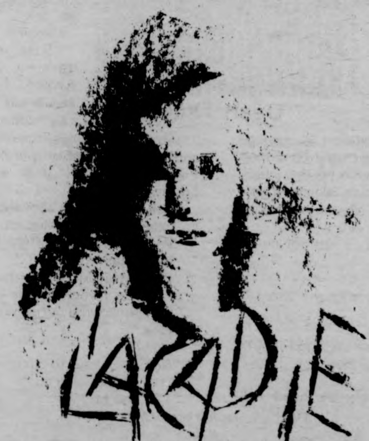
But the establishment of these programs only comes after a long hard fight, which is by no means over.

What does it mean when pieces of culture are hidden or lost? As a very young kid, I had never even seen black people (except in Shirley Temple movies, which bore little resemblance to real life in an respect) when my first grade teacher, Mlle. Suprenant, returned from a trip to the South. She had been shocked by what she saw there, and for weeks she drummed it into us that it was our duty to sit next to a "colored" person on a bus, to show we weren't ignorant. I was ignorant, and I imagined this poor old man, with swirls of red and blue, standing lonely at a Southern bustop. Later on, I was disappointed to hear that "colored" people were simply brown.

Soon after this, we came to the Civil War chapter of history. We learned about slavery, and how Harriet Beecher Stowe sparked the entire abolitionist movement (no mention of Harriet Tubman, Sojourner Truth, Susan B. Anthony, etc) with her book, Uncle Tom's Cabin, and how the noble North, which of course was never racist, saved the Negro. But at the same time, the history books carried a sort of disclaimer by saying that slavery was generally not as bad as Ms. Stowe made it out to be. And after this chapter, black people stepped out of sight, implying that outside of their former role as slaves, they are not important. Except for George Washington Carver who gave us peanut butter.

But even a full intellectual realization of the meeting of all this cannot touch a white at gut level. To see an entire culture ignored and destroyed, as the African heritage has been in American schools, does not directly threaten the white. Many whites have suffered the same injustice, the loss of our own heritage, but don't fully realize it because we can easily be absorbed into the mainstream "wasp" culture.

Black history in past decades surrounded insignificant events.



French-Canadian culture like African cultural history has been suppressed in a sea of an Anglo-centered society.

The French in North America are also endangered by acculturation

This semester taught me the very deep meaning of what a cultural history means, and what its destruction means. Most of my relatives are first and second generation French-Canadians. That is, my grandparents were born and brought up in Quebec, and came down to New England with some children and oTher children were born here. I went to the French Parish school, L'Ecole St. Anne, until the eighth grade, at which point I happily escaped the good Sisters of St. Anne by opting for public high school.

Since most of the French I learned was involved with religion, along with my rejection of the Church went a rejection of everything it taught me. You might say the baby got thrown out with the bathwater. But some of the things I learned stuck in the back of my head, and I took them for granted. Like, the national anthem I learned in kindergarten was "O Canada", the flag was the Maple Leaf, and "Evangeline" was of course an old French classic poem. Well, Evangeline is by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. And, though, both "O Canada" and the Maple Leaf are now official Canadian symbols, this is only since 1966.

What French I speak, I've learned formally. But I did pick up the Canadian accent to an extent, as well as some Canadian idioms. This is noticeable to European-French teachers, yet when I spoke French at work once to an older French-Canadian, she all but hugged me and said I spoke "La belle francais," meaning "the beautiful (European) French", which of course implies that Canadian French is the opposite.

There is now in Canada a movement by the French Canadians against this sort of degradation of their culture. Some proudly proclaim "Le Joual" - the name which has arisen for Canadian French from their way of pronouncing "Le Cheval" (horse). I was vaguely aware of all of this, but the question of whether or not Canada is French seemed academic to me.

A friend of mine, knowing of my interest in Canadian history, left a message for me to see a film "about the Acadian struggle." The Acadians were among the first French settlers of Canada, in what now is New Brunswick, and Noa Scotia and were caught up in the fighting between France and England for dominance in North America. In 1755, the English (of New England) overran Acadia and exiled as many Acadians as they could, scalped others, while still others escaped inland. Many of the exiles made it to Louisiana and settled there. (Know the pop song "Cajun Queen?" That's them.))

Anyway, I thought the film was to be about that. But it was about the Acadian struggle, 1969-70. It consisted of newsreels of student activism in New Brunswick, and interviews with some of the activists. They felt the University of Monsoon was being threatened (it is a French language University) because its government funding was being cut while the English speaking University of New Brunswick was growing. There was also a short reel about some military-school cadets of the same area who were also demonstrating against posted rules which forebade them to speak French, except with visitors in their own rooms with the doors shut. In the spirit of student rebellions of the time, the University of Moncton students took over the Science Building,. and occupied it for eight days.

They were finally given three hours by the police to leave peacefully without faceing charges. They waited for the three hours to pass, and then left, arm in arm singing a French song to a tune like "Auld Lang Syne."

The film then showed a series of newspaper headlines, they read: "30 NEW POLICEMEN HIRED AT U. MONCTON", "30 STUDENTS FACE CHARGES", "SOCIOLOGY DEPARTMENT PHASED OUT AT U. MONCTON". Then there were interviews. Some of the students seemed to be asking themselves whether they were Acadian, or Quebecois, or French Canadian. There was discussion of what it would be like, living in Quebec. An interview with one woman, whose name I didn't get, but who was a leader in the movement, brought out her reluctance of leaving New Brunswick. Nevertheless, she and the other 29 activists left, apparently without a choice.

I came out of the film room physically stunned. My ears rang. As I walked from Herter to the Student Union, I was squinting against the brilliant sunlight and all the students alike past were silent. I stopped and realized that I could see them talking, but I was momentarily deaf. Maybe it was only the shock of walking from a cool dark room into the summer sun, but this is what it was to feel one's own culture ripped away.

Calypso night a delight

By FREDERIC C. WEISS
MDC Staff

It was "Calypso" and not any "Presidential Commission" that seemed to bring a large part of the UMass Community together Saturday night. The moving sounds of "the Mighty Sparrow" and "Calypso Rose" backed up by the Jaguars vibrated a multi-racial crowd to "bump," move, slide, and "line dance" throughout the ballroom.

The Might Sparrow, on his way to New York to perform at the Garden, stopped of at UMass long enough to add movement to hips that are usually part of the crowd. More and more people seemed to get out of their seats as the show went on and danced with their own sense of rhythm to the bouncing calypso tunes that the Sparrow sent through the ballroom.

I came to meet a friend, and not to see the show. You see Calypso was something sort of alien to me; I never thought that it was something that / would like. Geez was I "out to lunch" on that one. It didn't take long to see the beauty of the spontaneous movement that shot through the crowd. Somehow the dancing seemed more "pure" than the type that crowds through the "Blue Wall" or "Hatch". People there really seemed to really get into it. There was something beautiful in seeing Blacks and Whites both enjoy the evening together; laughing, talking, and dancing. Music seemed to transcend rhetoric. While the Mighty Sparrow got the crowd really moving, Calypso Rose shot fire throughout the ballroom with her booming style. People stopped dancing to watch her energetic presentation, her movement, and her sound.

Before I got to the ballroom there was limbo and Calypso dancing. Sorry I missed it. One thing is sure; if there is another Calypso show next year it shouldn't be missed...by anyone!

The Mighty Sparrow

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
MDC Staff

The Mighty Sparrow sits reserved and relaxed in a caneback chair smiling wryly at the dressing room hubub, Friday night. He looks more like a vacationing Bahamian; than, the king of Calypso from Trinidad.

As he narrates in polished British prose the history of Calypso he is oblivious to a male dancer shaking his body paint and rabbit skins at Calypso Rose. "Don't you worry I'm coming back, mama." A flaming staff breaks the thread of his story.

Calypso, was the mouthpiece of the underprivilaged, the opressed the depressed. But the calypso chants were songs of love as well as of escape. They were the only means of slave communication in defiance of white laws. But with television the Calypsoni has become a self-appointed reporter of local news and commentary. "His mind shifted to things rated X...politics, sex, religion." "When I talk about a man and woman in bed it has to be something artistic. I'm not lewd."

"When your man, he tired and he want to sleep,
He ain't no kind of man at all.
They ask me, are you any kind of man at all?
And I say, yes. I am the village ram.
I don't refuse nothin...
I am full of love and charm and pure ability.
And if any woman say I left her dissatisfied. She lied."

The Sparrow apologizes for his directness. "If you find I was a little bit concisely direct or more precisely tersel It's because one in a while the British comes out in me."

They Calypsonian doesn't just sing of love sometimes he comments bitterly on politics. The Sparrow confronts the image of the people of Trinidad as lazy and uneducated. He asks, "When can we stop living in a cage? In this day and age, remember, we've passed that stage."

The Sparrow winds up his monologue and someone offers him a scotch and water on the rocks. "No, that's just a chaser." While he rummages for a Black Label bottle of scotch, that he has brown bagged and hidden under the table he pours himself a shot and adds. "If you think I'm articulate, after you see me down a few more of these, you'll be more careful where you throw boquets."

Everybody's crazy nowdays. If you see somebody walking down the street looking a little bit normal — Watch him!"

Oickle reflects on role of Collegian adviser

By ALVIN F. OICKLE
Collegian Adviser

My tenth and final year at the University of Massachusetts is about to end and I have my final assignment — write "something about the Collegian".

It is a frightening assignment. I could easily fill this entire edition with recollections from the second floor balcony area of the Student Union. And I could easily rattle off hundreds of names and the rollcall would have a meaning only to me. Worse, I would run that terrible risk of trying to compose a complete list and failing.

I have, therefore, decided to compromise. I will fill only a page and I will try to give names to tell the stories I want to leave, black on white, where they first took place. And...one final prefatory warning... I will not indulge my journalistic instinct to try to organize the material. This story will tumble out, in a manner of speaking, as it occurred... in unbalanced, illogical, unrelated circumstances.

– – – – –

IT ALL BEGAN, as they say, on a warm fall evening in 1964 when, on suggestion of Professor Arthur B. Musgrave, my brand new sponsor as an English Department faculty member, I wandered into the Collegian offices. Then they occupied only the space on the west side of the present facilities. A small, smiling young woman introduced herself and I had my first student friend. Terry Stock, who was later to marry Jack Balch of the UMass News Office, was news editor. The three times a week Collegian had a staff of about 45 then and Terry was the tough, fair boss of about half that number.

For most of that first year, my role as tutor to writing students brought me into the newspaper office three times a week. They became so accustomed to seeing me around that when their faculty advisor left for another campus, I was invited by Scott Freeland, the editor-in-chief, to take over. Despite strong faculty advice not to get mixed up with the student journalism gang, I decided to take the unpaid job because the students fascinated me.

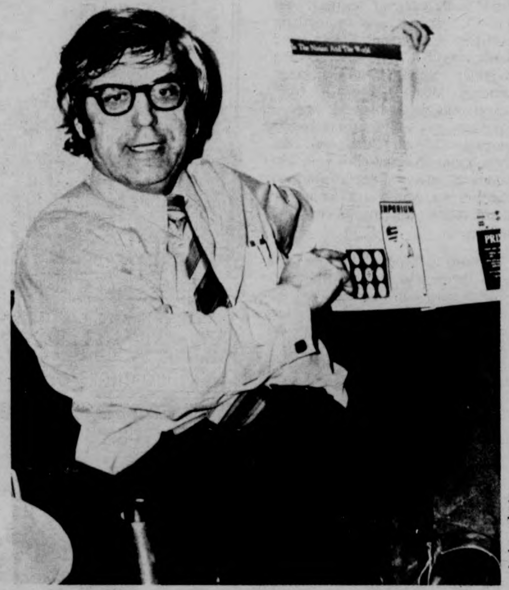
In the decade since, I have discovered that my batting average for accepted advice is no better now than it was then. One of the first crises in which my thoughts were sought came during the Selma, Ala., marches. The staff had planned a very tough front page, all concerned with UMass student Don Johnson's being injured while covering a Montgomery event. But this was also to be the St. Patrick's Day edition. Question: Would it be considered insensitive to print the entire page in green ink? Answer: Maybe. Why not print a "Happy St. Pat's Day" box in green in one corner of Page 1? Decision: Print the entire page in black on a green overlay. Oh, well...

– – – – –

DECISIONS are with newspeople every moment so it is natural that only the really big ones might stay in my head. An early one in 1964 involved a threatened administrative takeover or funds cutting. The Collegian's editorial page had published a partisan political letter under the headline: "Massachusetts Needs Volpe". The Democrats were in power that year. Nervous South College (this was before Whitmore was constructed) presented a challenge.

This was my first experience with how hard students can be. Within 48 hours of learning that one university official was considering some action, Collegian staffers had assembled from that executive's most recent previous campus assignment enough embarassing information... perhaps some of it even accurate... to make Richard Nixon blush. There was no further threat from the administration.

The threats, or claims of them, never really cease because the amateurs who are learning about journalism while practicing it are bound to make what some readers consider terrible errors. A few years ago, Sen. John D. Barrus, D-Goshen, and Rep. Walter J. Kostanski, Jr., R-Montague, wrote then President John W. Lederly to ask why the administration permitted "obscenities" to be published in the campus paper. University employes had written the legislators to complain.



Index photo

Al Oickle

Peter Pascarelli, the editor-in-chief, and Mark Silverman, the managing editor, led a student delegation to meet the legislators in a Machmer confrontation. They shook hands all around after an hour's discussion.

– – – – –

ON NOV. 4, 1971, the Collegian published an editorial that began: "The President of the United States is an asshole." Having disposed of one of his gentlest descriptions, editorialist Doug Packer went on in undeleted expletives to detail why Mr.Nixon's ordering of U.S. troops into Laos and Cambodia was wrong. Petitions were circulating in downtown Amherst within hours, asking the legislature to cut off university funding. Whitmore was rattling.

> "Amateurs who are learning about journalism...are bound to make... terrible errors."

The Collegian's Publishing Board knew a journalistic nor'easter when it saw one. In emergency session that day, the members considered a resolution asking for the resignation of... not author Packer, who was deemed incapable of journalistic judgment (after all, this was the very first piece he had ever written for the Collegian), but of the Editorial Page editor, Keith Bromery. Young Bromery, whose father was heading at the time up the UMass administrative ladder, stood his ground. Dean of Students William F. Field at one point dragged an angry Pub Board member back to the meeting after he had stomped off. Well, Keith was not asked to resign (by the proverbial split vote, of course) but a set of Editorial Page policies and guidelines was drafted and pasted to the newsroom walls for a few days. Freedom of the press had prevailed again.

But there was a marvelous epilog. About a month later, editorialist Doug Packer was in print for the second and last time. He prepared something like this: "A few weeks ago I wrote an editorial criticizing the policy of expanded Indochina warfare. About 50 complaints were received. Every single one was about the language I used and not one commented on the point of the editorial. I learned that if a writer wants his message to be considered, he must put it in language that does not distract the reader from the message."

I still consider that the apex of cause-and-effect learning.

– – – – –

NEWSPAPERS, it seems, thrive on controversy and the Collegian seldom stays out of it. Anyone remember letter writer Richie Rashed and his criticisms of State Rep. Louis Morini, R-Northampton? Or editor-in-chief Rich Hanson's well-rounded coverage of Chancellor Oswald Tippo's resignation? (What will the chancellor do with his new spare time? Grow a moustache, Hanson reported.)

Dave Axelrod had trouble convering integration in South Carolina. He was beaten up. During the 1972 campus strikes, Eric (The Rat) Walgren moved freely about directing the daily "Strike Page" coverage and no one thought a thing of his get-up: wooden shoes, a tight dress with cap sleeves and a blond wig with braids. Chet Weinerman and Stan Levco were literary terrors with their frequent satire written under the name Sam Sparcs (UMass Craps spelling backwards," the ubiquitous Weinerman used to explain).

Don't give all the hell-raising credit to the newspeople. The advertising representatives are pretty good at brinksmanship also. There was a time when the Collegian had to explain to a Student Senate member (a male, by gosh) why it was printing brassiere ads. Another senator was assured that the first beer ad was "just an experiment".

But it was John Mullen who set the all-time Collegian record for causing trouble with ads. He invented something I called "adversary advertising". A person he knew called one afternoon and asked to buy a modest-sized ad, say two columns by about five inches, to warn people not to buy clothing at a certain downtown store. He had had trouble with the item he purchased there. Not only did the ad manager accept the ad on the phone, without collecting the money, but he made sure the friend's ad appeared next to the "defendant's" display the next time it appeared.

> "Don't think Collegian advising has been all blood and subpoenas."

The adversary ad said, in effect, "don't buy there". The thoughtful ad manager put three black arrows pointing right at the merchant's box ad. As the store's lawyers said to the Collegian's lawyer later, "That was naughty." The Collegian settled up.

For some reason, adversary advertising never caught on. Maybe that's because it is pretty expensive... to the Collegian.

– – – – –

DON'T THINK Collegian advising has been all blood and subpoenas, however. The events I have mentioned so far stand out for the very reason that they were so unusual.

There have been so many positive actions.

Services? The Collegian presented the entire Cook Report, pages of recommendations for academic improvements; and the entire Amherst town warrant just a couple months ago.

Causes? Bob Medeiros, now an Associated Press writer, made Belchertown a dirty name in Amherst by sticking with the State School scandals and reporting them for the Collegian. Mark Vogler has been doing the same this semester with the Russell Daniels case.

And there have been Bill First covering Campus Police, Denny Matteau and Mary Keane writing plaintively and strongly for equality, Barbara Voorhees with her bright journalistic style on a variety of issues, Chris McGann with the Student Senate, Wendell Cook with the Graduate Student Senate, Denise Magnell neatly exorcising Student Senators from the Pub Board, Bob Gorman writing about agriculture in a way that was most readable and Anne Stadnicki and Bill Ballou and Mike Kneeland all trying as news editors to cover this campus fairly and accurately.

Devotion? None more than Tom FitzGerald, who was such a great sports editor he couldn't get to class and flunked out. (Happy ending: Tom returned after Navy service and will receive his degree at UMass this month.)

Nor Cliff Snickers, about whom I used to say: "Some day I will buy a plaque and hang it in the news room. It will warn: 'Cliff Snickers - Excellent News Editor, Lousy Student'." Cliff survived only that one semester. (Happy ending: Cliff is now an assistant city editor at the Worcester Telegram and has worked his way part-time through a couple years of college.

Nor John Sullivan nor Jim Gold nor Mike Shor nor a dozen or more of recent staffers who just could not carry a full academic load and run a daily newspaper also. This is one of the few problems I leave without a ready thought about a solution that will satisfy the academicians and the students.

– – – – –

THE COLLEGIAN is, of course, no more than the sum of the people who work with it and learn from it. "Laboratory" may be another dirty word but the newspaper is surely that for anyone who wishes to bring his curiosity to the Collegian as a learning facility.

Where else but on a college newspaper can a magazine be started almost overnight by whim? Ellen Levine came up with the name "Spectrum" when Collegian staffers worked one summer to make the old student handbook readable. It became so good that Spectrum is now a student magazine and "Directions" is a name someone else made up for the handbook.

And how about Au Present (that's French for Oh Pray Zont), which had a few months of publication with a black cover and a daring report on LSD. Or Exit, a magazine that founding editor Jack Dean liked to subtitle "A Way Out". And then there was Poor Richard's, named by founder Bob Nesti for the editor, Rich Hanson, and retitled by editor Mike Kostek as Below the Salt.

And where else but on a college staff would the editor preside at his own impeachment? Tom Donovan did, agree with the charges resigned and became a valuable senior reporter helping younger staff writers.

Self-help comes in all shapes and sizes. Jan Curley was managing editor before any had heard of women's liberation because she wanted experience as an editor. Mary Vorderer ran a copyediting class; so did Jim Gold.

Danny Glosband tried so hard to get rid of a Constitution which was being violated in 62 ways (he counted them). So did Peter Hendrickson. But it was Don Epstein who finally made it.

Satirist Weinerman became editor-in-chief and led the paper into daily publication and brought a news wire on campus. Bill Densmore has brought a second one to the newspaper this semester.

> "The Collegian is...no more than the sum of the people who work with it."

Brent Wilkes and Gib Fullerton modernized the business department. Gib made his contribution by getting billing on computer; Brent by making advertising sales a professional skill and putting the Collegian in position to exceed $200,000 a year in ad revenue.

– – – – –

PEOPLE. That's what it finally comes down to. The faces and names begin to blur after ten years. Was Frank Wandrey business manager before or after Marilyn Stowe? Did Harold Gushue take his own photos the night he rode around with the police to get a story?

Was Oleh Pawluk the editorial page editor when Carol Schultz was a writer? Did Pat Tempart Collins only take pictures or did she write also? How he hell did Bob Goshemietski spell his name? And did Joel Hartstone give up too hard? Has Lou DiMonaco gone back to smoking cigarettes? Will Barry Rubinstein make as good a lawyer as he was an editorialist?

It comes down to the intensity of Alan Chapman the photographer

GRADUATE STUDENTS, faculty and staff members are finally having to make a decision on whether the University's free and responsible press is worth a nickle.

Majority have smoked

PRINCETON, N.J. [AP] — The number of college students who say they have tried marijuana at least once is 11 times as great today as it was in 1967, according to the latest Gallup Poll.

Fifty-five per cent of the 1,100 students surveyed this January and March said they had tried marijuana, as compared with 51 per cent in 1971, 42 per cent in 1970, 22 per cent in 1969 and 5 per cent in 1967.

The students were asked, "Have you yourself ever happened to have tried marijuana?"

The survey showed that students from relatively affluent families are more likely to have tried the drug than students from less affluent families.

In addition, men are more likely to have smoked marijuana than are women. The poll showed that 62 per cent of the male students indulged while only 42 per cent of female students had smoked the substance.

and the deep understanding of the journalist's role of reporter Jerry Lazar. It figures out to new situations being hassled with and maybe occasionally overcome.

> "PEOPLE...the faces and names begin to blur after ten years."

Editor-in-chief Karen Lynch and news editor Don Bishop are white students who will never forget their first very moving, emotionally bruising confrontations with blacks.

It winds up with a Jim Foudy deciding not to run for managing editor because he just wants to be a good reporter. And a Joe Bradley going for stringing with the big city paper and never really getting to be a writer.

And what it comes down to is the smart kids and the smart-ass kids fighting and laughing, beering and jointing, loving and swearing and working like all hell to see that every morning, Monday through Friday, an average of 24 pages of news and ads are printed 18,000 times on a press 20 miles from Amherst campus and hauled back to be read by an audience that changes a little bit every day.

Like the audience, the Collegian staff gets a little smarter and knows a little less every day. And like all the rest of the humans who walk around and wonder who they are and what they are doing, these Collegian kids are sad-happy, sure-scared, tired-alive.

Only the Collegian people are just a little taller, and a little smarter, and a little more smart-assy.

That's why I love them and will miss being with them next fall.

Brooke claims Nixon allows energy waste

WORCESTER [AP] — Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., said Saturday that President Nixon has lulled many Americans into wasteful habits by calling the oil shortage a "problem."

Brooks said the oil crisis "is great a crisis as any we'll face. If we take it seriously as a challenge, rather than a burden, we will conquer it."

Brooks, speaking at the centennial convocation of Worcester State College, said he limited his address to energy as a "relief from the country's obvious crisis" — Watergate.

Brooke received an honorary degree of doctor of humanities from the college.

As painful as Watergate is for the country, Brooke said, "it will improve campaign techniques and strengthen the weaknesses of the CIA and IRS that have been so shocking to the American people."

Brooke said that a possible solution to the energy crisis is in nuclear power.

Brooke also said modern technology has yet to develop a practical method of harnessing solar or geothermal energy as a solution to the energy crisis.

How would you like to sign the work you do?

It's a shame that most of us don't get to sign our work. Because we'd probably do it better. Just out of pride. And that could mean better products and services for everybody. So, even if you don't have to sign your work, do the kind of work you'd be proud to put your name on.

America. It only works as well as we do.

TWO WASHINGTON, D.C. residents contemplate the political future of the president. Young and old, stoned and straight, the people of the nation wait.

Consumers, conservationists hassle over pop-top cans

By MICHAEL J. CONLON

WASHINGTON [UPI]-Proposals to ban pop-top cans and nonreturnable bottles on a nationwide basis could trigger a conflict between environmentalists and consumers.

However much some consumers may agree with the need to cut down on litter, the safety questions surrounding glass bottles for beer and soft drinks may bring some opposition-up to an outright ban-on one-way containers.

A proposed ban, similar to one which went into effect in Oregon in 1972, is at the hearing stage in Congress.

The chief backer, Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., says the consumer would benefit since returnable bottles are cheaper the buyer doesn't have to buy the bottle, in effect and save energy because they can be used over and over.

But the idea of continued use worries some consumers. The glass industry says small nicks and scratches on bottles in handling are the prime factors in breaks and explosions.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates there were 25,000 emergency room cases last year involving bottles which exploded.

On the other hand, commission statistics show that one way bottles, which generally are made of thinner glass, were involved in more of the accidents than were returnable bottles.

Physics funds appropriated

On the recommendation of the Forum on Physics and Society, the Council at its meeting on 22 April 1972 authorized a Congressional Fellowship Program. Funds were appropriated to support up to two APS Congressional Fellows — physicists who will serve for a year in the offices of Senators, Representatives, or Congressional Committees beginning September 1973.

Any physicist who wishes to apply should submit a resume, references, and a statement indicating how his background and interests qualify him for the position to W.W. Havens, Jr., Executive Secretary, American Physical Society, 335 East 45th Street, New York, New York 10017. Applications will be screened by a selection committee appointed by Joseph Mayer, the President of the APS.

The APS joins the American Association for the Advancement of Science in sponsoring Congressional Fellowships for scientists. The April issue of the AAAS Bulletin and also the 13 April issue of Science announced that AAAS has funds to support at least three Fellows.

There will be close cooperation between APS and AAAS in administering the fellowships and in seeking foundation funding for an expanded program in future years. A Congressional Fellowship Office, under the aegis of AAAS, will coordinate the activities of Fellows during their stay in Washington.

The Physics Community will benefit by building bridges of understanding between scientists and the Congress. As a consequence of this program, physicists around the country eventually will be more effectively plugged into the deliberations of the Congress, and Congressmen and Congressional staffs will have a better understanding of the nature of physics and the concerns of physicists. The program shows that The American Physical Society seeks to promote public policy activities among its membership by providing recognition and reward for such activities. By establishing a Congressional Fellowship program, The American Physical Society gives its blessing to this type of activity and encourages physicists to become engaged in public service science. The APS is thus supporting the long-range goal of legitimizing for physicists activities other than traditional teaching and reasearch in universities and industry.

"In default of any communication with Armand Demers or Larry Popple (545-2351) in the RSO Office by the 27th of May by members, advisor's, or officers of the following organizations, said groups-accounts will be considered inactive."

Local music: Real Tears is real music

By STEVE FELD
MDC Staff

It's a Saturday night at the Bluewall. The people standing in line, waiting to get in, are thinking the music they hear is a record over the PA. It doesn't sound like the usual three-chord amplified-to-death boogie you'd expect to hear from several of the area's other bands. But they're all wrong — it's Real Tears.

Meanwhile, people are pouring out as fast as they are shuffling in Ed Vadas and his Big City Blues Band is sharing the bill with all the beer you can drink for $1.50 a few hundred feet away at Worcester Dining Commons, and that seems to be where everyone is heading.

Real Tears doesn't like that. They have had more than their share of trouble getting gigs in the area.

"The trouble is", says lead singer Barbara Turcotte, "club owners aren't crazy about us. The people we attract like to sit, listen, and enjoy us. As a result, the booze doesn't move as fast as club owners would like."

Hornman Tim Moran further explains: "Real Tears is not your run-of-the-mill band. We feel there's nothing creative in playing modified blues riffs; it's like jiving the people in a way. Our music isn't for the drinking-and-screaming set, with puke on the floor and spilled beer everywhere. It's there to be enjoyed and appreciated. People find it hard relating to a group like Real Tears because they're not used to it. They're not aware something like Real Tears exists right now. Real teals plays real music."

REAL TEARS plays "funky jazz rock".

Real Tears plays what Moran loosely describes as "funky jazz rock", where the emphasis is on musicianship and solo improvisation. The eight-member group is among the largest in size of the area's bands — a fact which makes the going all the tougher, but they insist it helps bring them together. Four of them are UMass students, and this makes if difficult for them to play anytime but the weekends. Their gigs have been mostly in the Amherst-Northampton area, but lately they've been stretching out, as with the week-long stint coming up at Boston's Lucy's in the Sky.

Their size allows them the double percussion of drummer John "Buckwheat" Ramsey and the congas, temple bells, and other exotic beat-keepers of Manny Roberts. This lends a distinct Latin influence to the group, similar at times to Santana and Earth, Wind and Fire. When Tim Moran's saxophone comes into play, there are undeniable resemblances to Traffic.

There are also two keyboardists — Kit Walker and Harlan Harvey — who alternate on electric piano and organ. This helps give them frive and momentum, especially towards the end of the night, when things have loosened up and people are inventing new dance steps to Stevie Wonder's "Too High" and Earth, Wind and Fire's "Evil".

Kit and guitarist Jim Bridges write the group's original material, which comprises about one-fourth of their repertoire. Kit's "Be" ("Who are we?/ All we must do is be.") and the instrumental "Radio Blood" have become standards with the group, while Jim's catchy "Down to the Front" is one of the nicest songs they do.

Barbara shares the vocals with Jim. Her singing is surprisingly mellow and her presentation is low-key and demure. Her influences explain this. One is DeDe Bridgewater, vocalist with the Thad Jones - Mel Lewis Orchestra. (Real Tears had a gig the night DeDe and the boys were at UMass, and this particularly upset her.) Another is Jean Carn, who records with her husband Doug on the Black Jazz label.

Real Tears has been together a little over a year. They formed in March '73 when Jim, Barbara, Manny, Harlan and Dave Gage, the bass player, disbanded their previous group, Flight, and decided to go ahead with something new and different. For Real Tears, they wanted the same general direction as Flight, only a more sophisticated one, with an emphasis on individual output the improvisation.

The following June, they added the three remaining members: Kit and Tim, who were just finishing stints with the jazz-oriented Abo-Zamu, and Buckwheat. This gave the group added rhythm, plus Kit's writing and Tim's especially impressive sax and flute.

Then, it was every Tuesday night at the Rusty Nail in Sunderland, which all considered a big drag.

"The Rusty Nail was a door gig", explains Moran. "Whatever we

Lib. typewriters

The Library has acquired four coin-operated electric typewriters on a trial basis. The cost is 10 cents for 15 minutes. The typewriters are available to everyone. Keys to the typing rooms may be picked up at the Reserve Desk, University Library, on an as-available basis and must be returned on the same day. Users must ask for a key to a room with the coin-operated typewriters.

H.C.P.

The Health Careers Project (H.C.P.) is an effort by several brothers to establish a mechanism whereby Black students here who have a serious interest in the fields of Health Administration and-or Planning as a future career, can obtain valuable experience in these areas while undergraduates.

H.C.P. is in the process of finalizing plans for an internship program that will involve several qualified students in employed positions at University Health Services. These positions will introduce the students to the various aspects involved in operating a health care delivery system from the administrative perspective. H.C.P. is in the process of establishing academic credit and financial stipends for participants in the internship.

Students in the Health Sciences, Physical Sciences, and Biological Sciences interested in this internship program are urged to attend a meeting at New Africa House Wednesday.

What is WUMV?

What is WUMV? It is supposed to be the video tape medium on campus. But very few students know of its existence... or its potential.

With cable tv looming as a future communications medium here at the University, WUMV will have to go big time. Student bodies will be needed.

For those who are interested in becoming a part of the growing organization, please attend a special meeting to be held tomorrow night at 8:00 in room 167 of the campus center.

For an example of what WUMV is capable of doing watch their "Telopolitics" special on "The 1974 Massachusetts Gubernatorial Race" to be aired in the campus center this week.

Women studies experts here tonight

Two contributors to the field of women's studies will be on campus tonight for a joint guest lecture at Orchard Hill Residential College at 7:30 p.m. in the Webster Main Lounge. Martha Vicinus and Ellen Cantarow are currently furthering their study of working women through historical and sociological perspectives, respectively, at the Radcliffe Institute in Cambridge.

Vicinus, on leave from her teaching post at Indiana University, is researching the role of working class women in Victorian Britain. She is editor of the magazine, Victorian Studies, and of Suffer and Be Still, a study on Victorian women.

Cantarow is researching rank and file organization in the Italian labor movement. Her stay in Italy in 1972 resulted in a series of articles in Liberations magazine. She will return to Italy this summer to continue her research. People involved in the local women's movement will remember that Cantarow was one of those who assisted in the very beginning of the movement throughout the Pioneer Valley several years ago.

Cantarow and Vicinus will be present at "Womankind: Beyond the Stereotype". The format is open discussion around the general topic of "Women and Work: Feminist and Socialist Perspectives".

Real Tears

pulled in, we kept. Tuesday's were slow as hell, but we wanted to play there for a weekend, and we had to start somewhere."

The band usually starts by playing a song or two without Barbara, to get things going and to warm up. Often it'll be Freddie Hubbard's "Pove", where Moran will stretch out on soprano sax, then pass it on to Kit who'll whoop it up on organ. Jim will follow through with smooth, adroit guitar licks.

Barbara then ambles onstage to do the leads on Les McCann's "Universal Prisoner" and "When You Are Who You Are", a song by black poet Gil Scott Heron. From then ot it's anything goes, as the group takes on tunes by . . . Full Moon, donny Hathaway's "Ghetto Boy" (Jim, this time, up front), Stevie Wonder's "Tuesday Heartbreak", Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On", the Labelle soul-arized "Moonshadow", and plenty of improvisation.

While they have a potentially explosive sound because of their size, the Real Tears' sound is a surprisingly subtle one:

"The major complaint the band receives", explains the roguish-llking Kit, "is that we don't entertain enough, there's no show going on. People have come to expect bands to cop old licks from Cream and Jimi Hendrix, or to play the guitar behind our backs and dance at the same time. But we don't do that; we'd rather devote that energy to our playing."

"It's hard not to sound pompous and pretentious", says Tim, "but we're a little like all those black blues and jazzmen who put everything on the line and get hardly anything in return. As a result, we've grown disgusted with the whole commercial scene."

Dave Gage explains, "The thing we try to get across is something, by definition, hard to talk about or describe. You dan't walk into a club and see it, you have to feel it. It's abstract, intangible. We feel good about what we play with the hope that we can use this good feeling as an alternative energy source for people who see us. They can return the energy and the cycle has been started."

It was at a gig at Boston's Oxford Ale House that Bobby Green from the Webster Lewis Group, one of the city's most progressive combos, heard Real Tears. He was impressed enough to give them the address of one Atilla Horwat, a club owner in Oslo, Norway, who might be interested in bringing the group overseas to play a series of club dates. The group sent him a tape and are waiting.

Meanwhile, they have gigs lined up for Hamilton College in New York, and in Nantucket, where they'll most likely play in the summer.

Their best gig in a long while was in the Speakeasy Lounge at the Steak-Out, a week after their futile attempt to give the Bluewall some class. (They have since heard a tape WMUA made of the Bluewall gig, and it served to prove a Bluewall-type ambiance is not best-suited for musical creativity.)

Everything was better at the Speakeasy. The atmosphere was cleaner. The audience was receptive and overtly appreciative. And the band played the best they have in a while. In spite of a three-day weekend that usually means slow business, they filled the place three nights in succession.

This gave the group some of the encouragement they need, and prompted one member to admit, "Actually, for the last few weeks things haven't been quite that bad. People seem to have gotten into it more lately. It really seems to be getting better."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Pluto in the Fourth House of a horoscope depicts a native whose early life was surrounded by upheaval, violence and whose parents were unorthodox, poor where money was concerned but possible rich where affection entered picture. This person is tough, capable of fighting to achieve goals and is likely to experience difficulty with authorities, police and otherwise. Much depends, of course, on the entire chart, planetary positions, ascendant and time of birth. However, Plot-in-the-Fourth is a signature and the native is out-of-the-ordinary and bears close scrutiny.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can take definite steps toward achievement. Professional superior is willing to invest in your potential. Be specific, frank – say what you mean and enumerate requirements. Some desires are revised, others will be fulfilled.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accept proposition which sees you co-operating in community project. Civic leadership is emphasized. You have more responsibility but there also is ultimate advantage. Gemini, Virgo persons could figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Re-establish contact with one at a distance. Be gracious. Family member is willing to make concession. Check calls, correspondence. Taurus, Libra individuals could be in picture. If you are receptive, you gain materially and spiritually.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): See in light of reality, especially where property, land values are concerned. Avoid tendency toward self-deception. No one plans to give you anything on proverbial silver platter – despite what they say. Check behind the scenes for additional information.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Responsibility arises from partnership, special agreement or association. Older individual will share experience. Defer to judgment of one who knows rules, regulations. Patience now is valuable asset.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Finish rather than begin – find ways of appealing to more persons. Check possibility of advertising program. Basic issues will be settled. Now you should concentrate on distribution, communication and direct sales.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Romance, creative endeavors are featured. Your personality, appearance are spotlighted. Be ready for new contacts, challenges. Member of opposite sex could fall hopelessly in love with you. Be mature – and appreciative!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You deal now with real situations, practical people. Put aside make-believe; state facts as they exist. Stick to familiar ground. Aquarius, Leo and Cancer persons figure in important ways. Be aware of costs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Expect more movement, social encounters. Plenty of opportunity exists and key now is to be selective. Avoid scattering your forces. Expand. Refuse to be painted into corner. Express yourself. Change routine. Get away from depressing situation – and persons.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Debt is paid. You will be more comfortable – and confident. What you collected in past has double the value. Hold tight to possessions. Someone may try to talk you into relinquishing your rights. Be prepared and know you can deal from position of strength.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Trust judgment, intuition. Lunar cycle is high; you get point across in meaningful manner. Take initiative. Ideas click. You gain added recognition. Views are vindicated. Gemini, Virgo persons are likely to be in picture.

Privacy unit called Governor's pawn...

Dukakis made the statement in a letter to Sen. Chester Atkins and Rep. David Mofenson, co-chairmen of the Special Legislative Commission on the Right of Privacy.

He cited the information-gathering policies of one state agency to illustrate the need for safeguards on personal data.

"The Department of Public Welfare, under a somewhat controversial new law, has begun a central registry of information on children who have been reported to the Department as being abused or neglected, he said.

"Under this law, the Department is required to promulgate regulations governing the security of the data. Such regulations have not been promulgated, even after exchange of correspondence and angry protests that the system should not be in operation without such safeguards.."

"I think that the commission would agree that we need a constant administrative concern for this issue. Regulations require vigilance from every level of the executive branch of government."

In the keynote address, Arthur Miller, renowned author of "Assault of Privacy," warned that America may soon be "a dictatorship of dossiers and data banks."

"We Americans are watched, counted, questioned, dossiered and questionaired more than any people in the history of this planet," he said.

"The affect of this surveillance activity may be to make Americans keep their mouths shut on national issues."

UMass moundmen drop pair to UConn, 0-8 in YanCon

By BOB HIGGINS

The UMass baseball team ended their Yankee Conference schedule in disappointing fashion Saturday as they dropped both ends of a doubleheader to Connecticut, 7-3 and 6-3.

The losses brought the UMass YanCon record to 0-8, marking the first time in modern history that UMass has lost every conference game. It also is the first time that a team has gone from first to last place in the space of two seasons.

Defense was again a problem for the squad, and errors led to UConn's first game victory. Starting pitcher Craig Allegrezza dug his own hole in the second inning when, after a walk and a single, he threw two consecutive UConn bunt attempts into right field. Three runs scored on the second error, and the Huskies had a quick 4-0 lead.

Allegrezza got into trouble again in the fourth. With two outs and a man on second, he gave up a single, a walk and another single. Two more runs were in, and Gus Bedard came in to relieve Allegrezza.

The Minutemen mounted a small attack of their own in the bottom of the fourth, and it added some excitement to an otherwise dull game. After Ron Beaurivage walked, Rick Hansen beat out an infield hit on a questionable call by the umpire at first. John Healy walked to load the bases. John Baldwin, the UConn pitcher who had been breezing up to this point, faced Joe Black next. The count went to 3-2, and the next pitch was called a ball and a run scored.

Baldwin then slammed his glove down to the ground, and was immediately ejected from the game. This brought UConn Coach Larry Panciera out to yell at the umpire, and he was ejected as well. After the turmoil had subsided, Greg Biercevicz relieved Baldwin and struck out Joe Marzilli to end the inning.

The second game started out as a pitchers' duel between UMass' Jeff Reardon and UConn's Tom Germano. Neither team could score until the Huskies broke the ice in the sixth. After two men were out, Reardon walked two and the next man singled for a 1-0 lead.

The Minutemen tied it up in the seventh on doubles by Mark Fontaine and Pete Backstrom.

The walks hurt Reardon again in the seventh, when UConn scored three runs. Again, he walked the first two, and then gave up two singles. Two fielder's choices brought home two more runs, and the score was 4-1.

Gary Sanderson had a pinch-hit RBI single in the eighth to cut the lead to two, but UConn came back with two in the bottom of the eighth to put the game away. Craig Allegrezza belted a pinch-hit home run in the ninth, but it was not enough.

Although it is hard to find bright spots in a double-header loss, a special mention must be made of the pitching of two men. Gus Bedard, a sophomore just up from the JV's, relieved Allegrezza in the fourth inning of the first game, and pitched four and one-third innings of one-run, two-hit ball, striking out three and, more importantly, walking just two. Jeff Reardon, a freshman who started game two, held UConn scoreless until the sixth, when he began to tire.

Gorillas beat MIT 19-3

Rutledge, Dandy Scheffer, Gene vardiman, Terry Keefe, Steve Pappas, Bruce Sibson, and Tom Geronimous (one each).

Sophomore Bobby Durland started in goal and John Rutledge played attack. John hustled and his efforts paid off. In the 4th period he stole the ball in front of the MIT net and fired it in. Defenseman Dave Boudreau played offense and picked up an assist on the 18th UMass goal, on a perfect pass across the crease to Billy Collins.

In the fourth quarter, after UMass had built up a 14-0 lead, Coach Garber put in his 4th, 5th, and 6th string goalies — Harry McVey, Jim Curran, and Tom Geronimos, respectively. McVey and Curran were unspecacular, letting up three goals between them. Geronimos shut out the M.I.T. team, during his stay.

After the game, the team, friends, and former players joined in a tribute to Dick Garber in recognition of his twenty years as UMass lacrosse coach. Coach Garber noted that this year's team was the best he's ever coached and the biggest thrill would be for the team to make the NCAA tournament. News on UMass' status will come this week.

Athletic department blasted by Vespoli Vespoli came to UMass in the fall of 1972, serving as a part time crew coach while attending graduate school at UMass' School of Education. When he took the job, it was accepted and known that it was a part-time job. "There was definite assistance from Dean David Bischoff (of the School of Physical Education," said Vespoli, "I signed a contract as a teaching assistant for my first year but I did not sign one for this year. When I took the job, I understood it would only be for two years."

When asked to comment on the AP story, Athletic Director Frank McInerney said that Vespoli was not resigning and that he was leaving because the terms of his contract had run out.

McInerney further stated, "I am somewhat puzzled about the resignation story because he has brought two candidates before the Athletic Department to be considered as his successor."

McInerney also added, "Vespoli and the members of the crew have done a superb job. The entire University Community is proud of them. They've done all this as a club, without the benefit of varsity status."

This comes about at a time when the Athletic Department is already confronted by cutbacks in the men's gymnastics program. McInerney was presented a petition with 12,000 signatures from students on Thursday who wanted to keep that program on the same level it has been and have the state hire a full time coach for gymnastics.

The crew, fearing that they could be next, has applied for varsity status. They are not looking for an increase in funds but they want to keep what funding they have. They also want the recognition of being varsity athletes. "They work harder than any other team on campus," stated Vespoli, "and they deserve that kind of recognition."

Because he was considered a club coach, Vespoli was never invited to any coaches meetings and has had to adhere to Athletic Department policy even though he didn't know what the policy was as he never went to meetings.

This lack of communication is just an example of the bitterness felt by Vespoli. His feelings are that nobody in the Athletic Department has given a damn and that he and his athletes get no recognition on campus.

According to McInerney, it may be possible to give the crew varsity status but there is no money to either increase their budget or hire a full time coach.

The crew should be given a varsity status by the Athletic Department as soon as possible so that team members will receive the recognition they deserve. Vespoli's successor, whether considered full or part-time, should receive the treatment given to any coach. There should be no communication gap between this coach and the administration and the Athletic Department ought to give the varsity crew a vote of congratulations for their accomplishments.

Red Sox edge Tigers 4-3

DETROIT [AP] — Dick McAuliffe drilled a tie-breaking double in the 10th inning Sunday that lifted the Boston Red Sox to a 4-3 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Carl Yastrzemski singled with one out off John Hiller, 5-2, took third on Rico Petrocelli's two-out single to right and came home when McAuliffe pulled a double down the right field line.

Willie Horton crashed a three-run homer for Detroit in the first inning following Mickey Stanley's infield single and a walk to Al Kaline.

But the Red Sox got two runs back in the sixth inning when Carlton Fisk walked and Bernie Carbo hit his fifth homer of the year. They tied it in the eighth when Fisk doubled to knock out starter Lerrin LaGrow and Dwight Evans, batting for Carbo, singled off Hiller.

Celts cop championship

By MIKE O'BRIEN
AP Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE [AP] — The Boston Celtics, propelled by Dave Cowens' outside shooting and a relentless fast break, beat the Milwaukee Bucks 102-87 Sunday to win the National Basketball Association championship.

Cowens fired in 28 points for the Celtics, whoneeded the maximum seven games in the series to clinch their 12th NBA title and their first since 1969.

The Celtics registered three of their four victories at Milwaukee.

Kareen Abdul-Jabbar, who scored 26 points, and reserve Mickey Davis led a Milwaukee comeback that cut a 17-point deficit midway in the third quarter to 71-68 in the first minute of the fourth period.

However, Cowens broke the Bucks' momentum with a running hook shot to touch off a run of eight straight points as the Celtics opened a 79-68 lead with 8:50 to play.

Reserve Jon McGlocklin's jump shot broke the streak, but Cowens came right back for Boston with a hook.

Davis, who scored 13 of his 15 points in the second half, converted a three-point play with just under seven minutes to play, cutting the Celtics lead to 83-76.

But the Bucks could come no closer as Paul Westphal connected for Boston from the side and then fed Jo Jo White for a layup, making it 87-76 with 6:02 to play.

The Celtics earned $215,000 by winning three rounds in the playoffs, including $100,000 for taking the championship series. The Bucks' share of the title round money will be $65,000.

John Havlicek, who had been averaging 28.2 points for the series, was held to 15 points for Boston. However, Havlicek limited the Bucks' Bob Dandridge to 14. Dandridge had poured in 65 points in Milwaukee's three victories but only 52 in the four games they lost.

The Celtics never trailed, taking a 4-0 lead in the first 15 seconds on a layup by Don Chaney, a steal by Havlicek and a jumper by Don Nelson.

The Bucks managed to tie the score six times in the first quarter but trailed 22-20 after Cowens hit a long jumper one second before the end of the period.

Milwaukee forward Cornell Warner committed his fourth foul with 4:30 left in the half and Paul Silas sank two free throws on the play. Cowens hit from the top of the key seconds later, giving Boston its largest lead to that point, 43-34.

Bucks guard Oscar Robertson, who has indicated he may retire after the season, came back with two baskets, but the Celtics responded with 10 consecutive points, including two jump shots by Cowens, to open a 53-38 lead seconds before halftime.

Cowens connected again in the early moments of the second half, his ninth basket in 14 attempts. Warner's fifth foul seconds later further weakened the Bucks' power on the boards and a fast break basket by Silas with 8:25 left in the third quarter gave the Celtics a 63-46 spread.

David began Milwaukee's comeback with a jump shot and Robertson added two free throws. A dunk by Jabbar after a floor-length pass from Warner cut it to 65-62 and brought the capacity crowd of 10,938 to its feet.

The Bucks closed to within 69-66 on two Jabbar free throws 50 seconds before the end of the quarter. Reserve Curtis Perry connected on a line jumper in the opening minute of the final period to make it 71-68 before Cowens' hook shot sent Boston on its surge to victory.

Playoff MVP John Havlicek takes a slug of champagne in the victorious Boston dressing room as Coach Tom Heinsohn looks on.

Celts credit victory to "decoy" Havlicek

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

MILWAUKEE [AP] — The Boston Celtics credited a last-second offensive realignment for their 102-87 breeze past the Milwaukee Bucks in the National Basketball Association title game Sunday.

Boston Coach Tom Heinsohn, waving a bottle of champagne over his head said the decision to scoring sparkplug John Havlicek as a decoy paved the way to the Celtics' 12th championship in the NBA's 28-year history.

"We totally confused their defense," said Heinsohn, celebrating his first Celtic crown since his playing days as a high scoring forward and the first Boston championship since Bill Russell's 1969 club.

"They figured we had to keep going to Havlicek, so they were double-teaming him because he creates so many situations," said Heinsohn. "We were working down the middle instead of along the baselines. We ran stuff we never ran before."

"I was a decoy quite a bit," said Havlicek who, along with fellow forward Don Nelson, are the only still-active Celtics who played major roles in the series of Boston titles in the 1960s.

"We decided yesterday in practice that's what we were going to do , and it worked," said Havlicek, who had only six buckets and 16 points but contributed nine rebounds and three steals.

The Bucks' extra pressure on Havlicek freed center Dave Cowens in the middle and out at the top of the key. Cowens, who poured in 28 points, said the victory plaudits belonged to Heinsohn.

"It was all the coach's brainwork," said the massive redhead, sagging into a tiny cubicle in the Milwaukee Arena.

Cowens, one of nine Celtics reveling in their first championship, said his deadly 20-footers drew Milwaukee center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar out of the middle to clear the way for drives by guards Jo Jo White and Don Chaney and inside spins for forward Paul Silas.

Cowens, overshadowed by the 7-2 Abdul-Jabbar for most of his four professional years, said he had a lot of help in holding the league's most valuable player to 26 points, seven under his series average.

"We were sagging on him from the weak side," said the 6-9 Cowens. "He was still getting the ball, but he couldn't move after he got it so he wasn't shooting."

"We put a lot of pressure on them when they were bringing the ball up," said White after retrieving his bottle from Cowens. "They got behind and then that was it. It just took too much out of them rying to come back."

Flyers conquer Bruins 4-1 for 2-1 series margin

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA [AP] — Little Terry Crisp, acquired last year as a defensive specialist and penalty killer, scored the second of two first-period goals that fired the Philadelphia Flyers to a 4-1 victory over the Boston Bruins Sunday in their Stanley Cup showdown.

Tom Bladon, a bench-warmer most of the regular season, scored the first goal for the Flyers, who took a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven game National Hockey League final playoff.

Rookie Orest Kindrachuk and Ross Lonsberry scored third-period goals to wrap up the Flyers' victory.

Boston scored first for a 1-0 lead on a goal by John Bucyk at 1:o3 in this series between the upstart expansion Flyers and the proud old-line Bruins.

The series continues here Tuesday night, with Game 5 at Boston Thursday.

The Flyers were so confident that they played the standard National Anthem before the game, instead of their goodluck song — Kate Smith's "God Bless America."

Boston, however, played its own tune at 1:03 of the opening period, turning off at least momentarily, the wildly cheering sellout crowd of 17,007.

Bobby Orr moved the puck across the Flyers' blue line and passed to Gregg Sheppard. Sheppard put a great fake on defenseman Ed Van Impe and fired away. He caught gaolie Bernie Parent leaning left, but the puck hit a post. It rebounded to Bucyk, who drove it home from about 10 feet.

Later in the period, Parent saved further damage with a sensational save on Wayne Cashman's drive on a power play.

The Flyers finally got on the scoreboard with two Bruins in the penalty box. At 10:27 in a four-on-three offense, Bobby Clarke whipped a cross-ice pass to Bladon, who beat Boston goalie Gil Gilbert from some 35 feet to tie the score.

With six minutes remaining in the period, Crisp won a faceoff from Andre Savard. He followed the puck across the Boston blue line, stole it off the stick of Carl Vadnais and whipped a wrist shot through Dallas Smith and off the stick of Gilbert into the Boston net for a 2-1 lead.

Men's crew national champs

By BOB ESTELLE

The UMass varsity men's crew won its second consecutive national college division championship at the Dad Vail last Saturday.

5,000 spectators saw the race which was held on the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia last Friday and Saturday.

The two-day regatta started off on Friday morning with the varsity in a preliminary heat against Temple, Purdue, Wesleyan, Fordham and Morris Harvey. The Minutemen won easily with a 6:07.5 time. The nearest finisher was Temple with a 6:12.1 time.

The jayvees were the next to race and UMass won that heat with a 6:13.2 time. Georgetown was the runner-up with a 6:19.6 time. Also racing in that heat were junior varsity crews from Holy Cross, Trinity and Mercyhurst.

The frosh were the next ones to race and they beat out Williams, Ithaca and Georgetown with a time of 6:05.8.

The varsity-4 ended the preliminary round for UMass by winning their heat with Florida Tech, Stony Brook, Virginia, the Merchant Marine Academy and Wesleyan. The winning time was 6:57.2.

The varsity raced again on Friday afternoon to qualify for the finals. They had a time of 6:00 and beat Marietta, Western Ontario, LaSalle and Ithaca.

The varsity-4 then qualified for the finals on Saturday morning, beating Florida Tech and Wesleyan.

By Saturday afternoon, the weather had changed from having quick, flat water with a slight downcurrent and very little wind to having a headwind to go with the downstream current.

The finals, on Saturday afternoon, started with the frosh competing against Marist, who had all experienced rowers, four of whom had competed internationally.

The frosh won by two lengths with a 6:28.7 time to Marist's 6:34.4.

The varsity-4 followed and was won by Florida Tech and UMass finished fourth. This was attributed to the fact that the Minutemen were tired and that steering problems with the F.I.T. boat nearby caused the UMass boat to slow down.

The jayvee race followed in a very close race which saw them finish third. Coach Mike Vespoli stated that it was the closest race he had seen in watching the Dad Vail for 10 years.

The varsity was next and they started off in a close race with Coast Guard. They came from behind three times and survived a powerful sprint by St. Joseph's to win by three-quarters of a length with a time of 6:09.5.

Garber honored by victory against MIT

By MIKE ELLIOTT

UMass Lacrosse Coach Dick Garber celebrated his 20th year, in style, as his squad bombed M.I.T. by a 19-3 score.

The game was more like a practice session as the hapless Engineers of M.I.T. could do nothing right. In fact, M.I.T. had no right being on the same field with the Gorillas. The UMass team completely dominated every aspect of the game. They bombarded the M.I.T. goaltender, firing a total of 48 shots (including goals). On the other side, M.I.T. could only manage three meager goals and five shots that did not go in.

The game was almost boring as Garber's Gorillas controlled the ball from the opening faceoff. It was a beautiful, sunny day and a good time to relax with a couple of beers. Even though the game tended to lull one to sleep, there were some excellent plays made on the part of the UMass team. The UMass fastbreak was executed perfectly on several occasions. The eighth UMass goal was a perfect example. The ball was passed perfectly from the breaking UMass midfielders, to Harry McVey, and then to Pete Connolly, who threaded a beautiful pass to Jeff Spooner, stationed at the edge of the crease.

The 11th goal, although not a fastbreak, was also pretty. The play resembled a quick, down the middle, layup in basketball. Attackman George Peraino got the ball behind the M.I.T. cage and hit teammate, Dandy Scheffer, who was cutting across the crease, with a perfect pass and Dandy just layed it in.

The Gorillas continued firing in goals. They scored six in the first period, four in the second, four in the third, and five in the fourth. Harry McVey once again lead all scorers with four goals to his credit. Other scorers were: Pete Connolly, Jim Curran, BIlly Collins, and Jeff Spooner (2 goals each); and John

Brilliant UMass efforts fall short in YanCons

By SCOTT HAYES

Despite momentous performances by Mike Geraghty and Randy Thomas, the Uvass Track team failed to pick up points in six critical events, and as a result, surrendered the 27th Yankee Conference Championship to the University of Connecticut.

The squad accomplished what was expected in the jumping, throwing and distance events. The distance runners were phenomenal, capturing two firsts and outscoring the Huskies 28-7. Randy Thomas set a meet record by running the mile in 4:10.9 and Devin Croft ran a "smart" race in the 880 to defeat UConn's tough Steve Hulme. Croft ran his kind of race, hanging back in third place until the final stretch, where he overtook Hulme and went on to win in 1:54.2.

Jim Shea, Ed McAleney and Steve Mason came up with solid performances in their respective events to provide the trackmen with seven points in the javelin, shot put and discus. Weightman Tom Lonergan pointed out the fine efforts of Thomas, Geraghty, and fellow throwers Mason and McAleney. Lonergan noted "UConn won't do as well in the New Englands. Dartmouth and Northeastern are stronger in the throwing events and UConn will lose some first place points. I think we can catch them at the New Englands."

The six critical events that "killed" UMass were the 100, 220, 440, 880 and the two hurdle events. The tracksters needed the edge in these events to dethrone UConn. The best the squad could manage, however, was a standoff in the 880 and the hurdles. In the 880, both teams picked up seven points, and UMass scored one more point than UConn in the hurdles.

The key to UConn's 93-72½ edge over the Minutemen was a 24-1 advantage enjoyed by the Huskies in the 100, 220 and 440. "We didn't run as well as we could have," commented Coach O'Brien, who was obviously disappointed with his team's second place finish.

Steve Crimmins held the lead in the 440 until the last 10 yeard, but the speedy junior slipped to fifth place. Just a step separated Crimmins from first place, and his 49.8 was only two-tenths off the winning time. UConn unexpectedly outscored the trackmen seven to one in the one-lap race.

In the hurdles, Jim Hennessey and Curt Stegerwalk placed for UMass. Hennessey, probably one of the most valuable contributors to the team's success during his stay at UMass, captured fourth in the 120-yard hurdles. Stegerwalk came up with a gutsy performance in the 440-yard hurdles. The Connecticut native had been suffering from a strained arch since the BC Relays and his condition going into the meet was uncertain. Stegerwald had been doing only minimal workouts to rest the injury, making his performance even more remarkable. The sophomore stalwart took the lead in the 440 hurdles and never looked back on his way to a 54.4 first place finish.

Mike Geraghty upset Herman Bigelow of UConn in the triple jump, sparking the jumpers to a fine overall showing. Bob Adamson just missed beating Bigelow, finishing half an inch behind the Huskies top leaper. The Adamsons led a 13 point UMass barrage in the long jump. Bruce Boyce of URI managed to slip into the top five, between Bob and Ken and Geraghty Pete Ryan. Adamson took first with a jump measuring 22-8 and his teammates finished 2-4-5. The jumpers added 10 points in the triple jump, with Bob and Ken Adamson capturing third and fourth, respectively. Bob came up with one of his best -all-around efforts of the season. Geraghty's triple jump of 48-2-three-quarters was another meet record.

Controversy spoils crew title

By BOB ESTELLE

The crew team's Dad Vail title celebration was spoiled yesterday by the resignation of varsity coach Mike Vespoli.

In an Associated Press story, Vespoli was quoted as saying that he was leaving UMass because of the way he was being treated by the administration.

In his two years at UMass, Vespoli has taken the UMass varsity heavyweight crew to two national college division championships, both of them won at the annual Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia.

Greenhouse thefts: lots of green

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

Greenhouses belonging to the UMass Botany Department were broken into for the tenth time in six months Friday morning and plants valued at more than $1000 were stolen, according to David Meyer, Administrative Officer of the Botany Department.

Meyer reported that several lilies, azaleas, and primroses were taken sometime between 11:30 Thursday night and 7:30 Friday morning.

Ronald Beckwith, greenhouse manager, said that many of the plants that were taken are irreplaceable.

"Most of these plants are very unusual," he said. "Some of them looked like ordinary plants but they're not. They're plants that were used for research and instruction up here, and represent years of work."

"We give plants away for free if students want them," he added, "so there's no reason at all to steal them."

"I can't see any pattern to the thefts," Meyer said. "Sometimes they take valuable plants; othertimes it's just common ones. That's assuming, of course, that it's the same person every time, but we don't know that."

He continued, "It's my guess that the person or persons who have been taking the plants either have an outside market for the plants, in which case I'm sure he's not getting what they're worth, or it's someone who just took them for their room, in which case most of the plants probably won't survive."

"The plants mean more to those who were engaged in research on them than they could possibly mean to anyone else," Meyer said.

"The primroses that were stolen exhibited some very unusual floral parts. They were to be used in experimentation and teaching," he said.

The department will not prosecute if the plants are returned, Meyer promised.

Meyer said that the department is currently looking into the prospects of having an electronic surveillance system installed. The cost of the system would be about $4,000, which coincidentally is the value of the plants stolen over the past six months.

Nursing admissions doubted in response to complaints

Staff Photo-Joe Martins

Speaker McGrath: Calls for investigation

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC News Editor

Student Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath says she will ask the administration to investigate the School of Nursing here.

McGrath says she wants the School to "clarify" program admission, suspension and expulsion criteria.

McGrath said her call for action is in response to "a multitude of phone calls and complaints concerning the Nursing School Admission's procedure and Nursing School Program." She says Dr. Robert Gage, vice chancellor for student affairs, has also registered concern with complaints directed at the program.

The School is presently undergoing major revisions. For the first time, students are not accepted as nursing majors until their junior year.

Nursing administrators say they rate an applicant from poor to excellent in six categories:

—Attitudes of Caring
—Awareness that Nursing involves both health, illness, prevention, and community aspects —Future in Nursing
—Prior Experience
—Interest in Personal Growth and Development
—Articulation of Ideas

Some 500 applicants applied to the school and only 135 were accepted. Some students rejected feel they have been grossly mislead by the program's administrators.

Kathy Hows sophomore with a 3.0 cumulative average, says she was lead to believe she would be accepted into the program if she had good grades. She was rejected and in retrospect said the "whole program is really screwed up. They don't know what they're doing."

"I'd talk anyone out of coming to nursing here," she promised, "and I already have."

Mary E. Helming, director of the UMass School of Nursing, says no one anticipated the great number of students who have applied to the School. She says she has encouraged students to make alternative plans should they not be accepted into the program.

"It's heartbreaking to have to say no," she told the Collegian.

Those rejected from the program feel all students should have been personally interviewed by the selection committee. They say little can be learned about the student from the way they answer application questions.

"You can write anything on an application but no personality shows through," argues Sophomore Donna Simson, also rejected from the program.

"I didn't get a personal interview and I was lead to believe I would," she said.

Richard Howland, attorney for students, said the applicants were "denied a promise for a procedure of acceptance."

Howland, referring to a 1972 letter sent by University Dean of Admissions and Records William D. Tunis, said it appears the nursing program has not provided candidates with "that which Dean Tunis promised." Said Howland, "The students sure do have a complaint."

Tunis' letter pointed out that no freshman candidates are formally selected for nursing. "We cannot guarantee your future admission into the School of Nursing," he wrote.

Tunis wrote, however, that candidates "will meet with an advisory group from the School of Nursing and individual decisions will be made based on such areas as academic performance, personal interviews, and perhaps some specialized testing."

Betsy Clark, acting head of the nursing undergraduate program, said students should not have infered they would be given a personal interview since the letter used the phrase "such as", not actually saying the interview would take place.

Clark said she has contacted other Universities and said there "was not a strong response in favor of the personal interview."

She says the nursing faculty voted against having personal interviews because of the high number of applicants. She also believes that many times the "interviewee has more to gain than the interviewer".

Clark also believes some students may not have heeded the School's warnings. "The information is there. How well they heard it and read it is questionable," she said.

Jay Savereid, University Ombudsman, says his office has also received many complaints from rejected applicants.

"There was a large number of qualified, but less qualified, applicants who got turned down here," he said.

Savereid said the nursing program is bringing in more candidates than they can accept, and this is perhaps the problem area. He said one should not rule out the possibility of a freshman admission's system.

Student Senator Martin Miller of the Academic Affairs Committee said he conducted an investigation into the matter last week but "found nothing."

Lights on for GI ed.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Monday unanimously approved a two-year extension period after discharge in which veterans can get GI educational benefits.

The 82-0 vote sent the bill to the House. It would allow 285,000 veterans to continue their educations after May 31 when their benefits would otherwise expire.

The legislation extends the post-discharge period for educational benefits from eight to 10 years. The same extension also would apply to wives of totally disabled veterans and veterans' widows who are eligible for educational assistance benefits.

MDC editors ignore SGA injunction

By MDC STAFF

The Student Judiciary issued an injunction against the Collegian last night against reporting the first day's trial of former Collegian Business Manager Michael Shor.

The judges wrote: "It is the opinion of this court that any statement by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, however unbiased, would hinder the rights of the defendant, Michael Shor, to an impartial trial. Therefore under the authority vested in the judicial body we hereby issue an injunction to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian not to print any material in regards to this case until such time as a verdict is reached."

The prosecution pleaded its case last night and the defense will present its case at 2:30 today.

Collegian Editor-In-Chief Karen Lynch defied the injunction.

News Editor Mike Kneeland said the "whole thing is ridiculous and it shows the incompetency of the play-judges."

Executive Editor Dean Tucker said, "It typifies the entire Student Government Association, its lack of organization, its lack of expertise and thoroughly amateur handling of everything from its own elections to its $150,000 budget over-ride. It's another in a series of very sad one-line jokes."

Attorney for Students Richard Howland said from his home last night that "the judges have no authority to issue such an injunction. The only basis for such an injunction is when someone out not to know (the case)." Howland said such an example might be a sequestered jury, one that is not locked up.

Howard Ziff, head of the Journalistic Studies Department, told the Collegian that he had "no idea what they (the Judges) are refering to."

Ziff also said the judges were "misguided" and the motion was "an absurdity on their part."

People's Market hopes to stay open for summer

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

The People's Market, the non-profit food store in the Student Union, which is currently doing its biggest volume since it first opened in February 1973, may remain open during the summer school months, according to its coordinator, Buffy Weissman.

"We'd like to keep it open," Weissman said, "but only if people are interested enough and can volunteer."

This past April the People's Market recorded $14,000 in sales. This compares to only $19,000 for the entire first semester period in the spring of 1973.

"Summertime will be an experiment," said Ellen Caracciolo, a Legal Studies major also involved in the People's Market.

The Market is conducting an ongoing survey to determine how many people who regularly frequent the Market will be around during the summer.

"A lot of people have signed the survey," said Caracciolo, "but we haven't got any definite statistics as yet."

The Market was opened in 1973 to provide students with an alternative to area supermarkets. The low overhead at the People's Market provides the opportunity to charge lower prices, according to the coordinators.

Prosecution presented in Shor trial

By ROBERTA MARTONE
MDC Staff

The prosecution presented its case in a trial brought before The Student Judiciary Court last night concerning actions taken by Michael Shor, former business manager of the Collegian.

The defense will present its side of the case today at 2:30 p.m.

Shor has been charged with ten separate charges (23 counts) in violation of the Student Code of Conduct. He has pleaded innocent to 22 of the 23 charges.

In last night's trial, prosecuting attorneys Jim Pappas and Rich Pierce charged Shor with misuse of Collegian business funds in four areas: misuse of purchase orders, misuse of hiring practices, misuse of conduct regarding advertising commissions, and violation of the Student Code of Conduct.

In the area of misuse of purchase orders, the prosecution questioned the purchase of various items bought under the heading of "office supplies." The defense maintained Shor reimbursed the Collegian for these items through their petty cash fund. The existence of an illegal Collegian cash fund was then discussed.

The second issue concerned the purchase of six parking spaces in the Campus Center garage for members of the Collegian staff.

The prosecution's second charge said Shor misappropriated funds by purchasing six parking spaces for Collegian advertising revenue while the editors paid the remaining 50 per cent. To this charge, Shor pleaded guilty.

The prosecution questioned the legality of payment of three part-time secretaries hired by Shor to work in the Collegian business office. The prosecution said the amount of money received by the secretaries violated the normal two dollars per hour rate.

In the third area, the prosecution charged Shor accepted commissions on advertisements he failed to solicit. The defense maintained the ad commission was not a written policy, and was therefore subject to questioning. The prosecution replied policies of this sort were usually unwritten, and more a "matter of trust".

In the fourth area, the prosecution questioned Shor's responsibility as the Collegian business manager.

Witnesses for the prosecution were: Armond Demers, business manager of the RGO office; Brent Wilkes, advertising manager of the Collegian; David Booker, former speaker of the student senate; and Student Senate Treasurer, Paul Hammel.

The judges hearing the case issued an injunction against the Collegian printing this story. They said such publication would bias Shor's case. [see related article]

New services offered by infirmary addition

The $1.2 million Health Center addition at the UMass Infirmary will be occupied the last week in May, and will offer students health care services previously unavailable on the campus.

New services will include eye care, preventive dental care, and flouroscopy (which takes moving x-ray pictures). Students will also be given more service from the wart clinic, which will add more hours and increase its self-care concept; the physical therapy department which will double its space and provide some new equipment; and the hematology laboratory, which has installed electronic equipment for more comprehensive and more efficient testing of blood.

"Expansion into the rest of our new two-story addition will greatly enhance the style and content of health care delivery here at the Health Center," says Barry Averill, UMass Health Services director.

In September, UMass Mental Health Divison personnel will be available in the Health Center for psychiatric consultations with students. A dermatologist and a gynecologist will also be added to the staff.

The wart clinic, which this year has been opened one day a week, will expand its hours and offer patient education sessions and kits for students to use in self-treatment. An eye clinic, recommended by the UMass Student Health Advisory Board and Health Services personnel, will give screenings and ophthalmological consultations as part of the regular health fee service, and general examinations, at a small additional cost.

Restorative services, such as fillings, will be provided on a fee-for-service basis as time permits, with first priority given to financially needy students. The Health Center lacks the physical capacity to offer restorative services to the entire student population, so most students will still rely on their own dentists, according to Averill.

In the doubled space for the physical therapy section, will be such new equipment as an exercise chair for rehabilitation of amputees, paraplegics, and hemiplegics. A mat platform and hydrocollator (a heat therapy apparatus) will help students with muscular disorders; and there will also be an ankle exerciser for the approximately 200 students who limp into physical therapy each year.

The flouroscopy unit, which takes x-ray motion pictures, will save students about 150 trips to radiology facilities in Northampton, according to UMass Health Center officials. And the new electronic blood testing equipment will save time for UMass laboratory personnel by allowing seven different tests on one blood sample in 30 seconds, and simultaneous testing of several blood samples.

Complementing these new facilities is a computerized appointment system, nurse practitioners who diagnose and treat minor medical problems and give health counseling, and physician rotation among two or more examining rooms each.

Marvin Ridgley says he lives off the waste of the American people. He sells junk for a living, and lives with his junk pile. Ridgley, 65, lives in a three room shack made from junk, gets half his food, and everything else he needs from his acre of junk. "I don't buy nothin'," he boasts. "I got peace of mind, I'm warm and I'm dry and I'm happy... and I love this junk pile."

In yesterday's story on page 3, "A Most Repelling Un-Music at the Cage", it was erroneously reported that considerable damage happened to the Cage. Further investigation showed minimal damage occurred.

By harnessing the UMie's perenial nemesis, the computer, to the teaching of English, Joe Auciello, UMass grad student in the School of Education has devised an "expeditious and attractive" alternative to the Rhetoric Department's two course "ordeal of writing theme after theme and attending countless lectures."

Basically, Auciello's format is merely a quick and painless means of preparing students to achieve the score require- on the CLEP exam to exempt one from the rhetoric requirement.

His format consists of a series of six tests emcompassing the entire scope of grammar.

After each test is completed, it is fed into the computer to be corrected. While "the computer blinks away at misplaced modifiers and cliches", it not only corrects the tests but prints explanations for each correction. Auciello feels that the presentation of corrections side-by-side with corresponding explanations, highlights the thrust of reasoning and the framework of rules which govern proper usage. Moreover, the explanations are laced with laconic witticisms like: "be taut, be logical, but damn it don't be tautological." The overall effect is that the student feels he's being taught grammar by Spock from Star Trek.

If the student conscientiously reviews each of the correction print-outs, Auciello feels he or she will have no trouble whatsoever with the CLEP exams. In fact, he feels so strongly about its potential that he said, "I'd stake my life on it."

His faith in the efficiency of his system is based on the outstanding results achieved by GI's at Pease Air Force Base who had used his system to prepare for grammar proficiency tests.

Auciello's development of this new teaching format, is the product of his dual interest in computer programming and in the teaching of English.

With the aid of a few self education courses in computer programming, Auciello soon found himself teaching both English and Computer programming at a junior college level at Pease Air Force Base. Observing the contrast between the high level of interest shown by students in his computer class and the low level of interest shown by students in his English class, Auciello concluded the "computer had Charisma" which drew a high level of response from students. To liven the format of his English class, he devised his present system.

Despite the proven success of his new format with Air Force personnel, Auciello foresees strong resistance from the faculty to the institution of his new format at UMass.

For a computer is definitely better than a mediocre teacher.

In conclusion, Auciello said he felt the prime merit of his system lay in its expediency which frees students to pursue courses which are more germane to their particular academic objectives than are rhetoric courses.

South Africa's liberation fight

Today, The Collegian begins a series of four articles detailing the liberation struggles of emerging African nations. The articles emanate from student papers written for a course, PAN AFRICANISM: Liberation Struggles in Africa, offered by Prof. Dovi Afesi in the W.E.B. DuBois Dept. of Afro-American Studies.

By KENNETH REARDON
Black News Service

For over 500 years the Portuguese have operated as a colonial power in southern Africa; never exhibiting extreme proficiency nor humanity in their efforts.

Recently, due to tremendous pressures being exerted upon them by various indigenous movements for independence and liberation in their colonies, Portugal's imperialist dreams may soon be crushed. Presently, this backward European farming nation is involved in three major military efforts in the areas of Angola, Guinea-Bissau, and Mozambique.

Fighting has reached such a peak in these three countries that Portugal has been forced to commit some 60 per cent of its national budget on military and para-military expenditures. In addition to fantastic sums of money Portugal has also commissioned over 100,000 Portuguese soldiers to southern Africa.

In Guinea-Bissau alone the number of Portuguese men is proportionately greater than a U.S. commitment of 600,000 troops in Vietnam. Such an example gives you an idea of the tremendous lengths which the Caetano regime is willing to go in order to retain its African possessions. In spite of Portugal's commitment in both men and arms to the struggle in southern Africa she is quickly losing her control in that area of the world.

This fact was illustrated on September 25, 1973 when the African Party for the Independence of Guinea-Bissau and the Cape Verde Islands (PAIGC) sought on behalf of the Guinean peoples recognition from the world community of its sovereignty. As Portugal persisted in its denial of this reality, calling it a "publicity stunt", some 80 countries chose to recognize the independence of Guinea-Bissau.

In November, a preliminary vote in the U.N. General Assembly concluded with a two-thirds majority casting their ballots in favor of admitting Guinea-Bissau into that world body as a new member with full status.

In spite of the growing strength of liberation movements in its "overseas provinces" and the presence of extreme dissatisfaction in the world community over its policies, Portugal remains unwilling to consider the possibility of withdrawing from southern Africa.

The issue of Portuguese colonialism and military activity in Africa has become a question of such intense controversy in Portugal itself that during the last national elections Premier Caetano moved to ban "all criticism of the present administration's policies and all mention of the military conflict in our "overseas provinces". The recent military coup in Portugal merely serves to underscore this point.

For Portugal the retention of its "overseas empire" is a must, for without the rich mineral and human resources of these areas her people will be destined to remain a poor nation. Portugal is by far one of the most backward nations in the Western Hemisphere; she has the lowest per capita income of any nation in western Europe and also the highest illiteracy among them.

As the first western nation to enter Africa and the last to leave she has shown herself incapable of facilitating any kind of meaningful community or industrial development.

Week-end crime rate increases

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

The UMass crime rate experienced another increase this past weekend, according to Sergeant Robert Joyce of the Department of Public Safety.

"There's been a sizable increase," he said, "in the number of calls that we have received. Alarge number of these are false alarms and so forth, but it still keeps the department extremely busy."

Police reports state that four motor vehicles were burglarized, three others stolen, and another severly vandalized in the period from last Thursday to Sunday.

A car parked in lot 32 near Whitmore was broken into on Thursday and three cassette tapes valued at $20 were stolen from it. On the same day a car in lot 11 was burglarized and a $100 tape deck was taken.

A husky dog worth $200 was stolen Saturday from a car parked in front of Tobin Hall. Later that day stero speakers valued at $25 were taken from a car parked in lot 11.

A locked car parked in lot 21 was stolen Saturday. Another was taken rom in front of the New Africa House. The car had been left running with the keys in it.

On Sunday a car was stolen which was parked west of Leach House.

A golfer practicing his swing near the stadium Thursday discovered that his clubs, worth $120, had been stolen from him while he practiced, Joyce said.

According to police, two males and a female were apprehended taking furniture from Crabtree Dorm on Friday.

Thomas O. Green, 23, and Richard E. Green, 22, both non-students from Brookfield, and Kathleen H. Faust, 22, of Seabrook, New Hampshire pleaded not guilty to charges of larceny in Northampton District Court yesterday.

The three were discovered by UMass police officers taking two lamps, a desk, and a table from the dorm. Total value was estimated at $110.

Joseph W. Chiapulis, 22, of Worcester, a non-student, was arraigned in Northampton District Court yesterday on charges of possession of a controlled substance (marijuana). He pleaded guilty and his case was continued.

Chiapulis was discovered sleeping on a lounge floor in Washington tower by police on Sunday. He was under the influence of alcohol. Police put him in protective custody and subsequently discovered an ounce of marijuana in his pockets and a small plastic bottle containing an unknown substance believed to be hash oil.

Ahora election results

The results of the elections for Ahora, the Latin American organisation at UMass, were announced yesterday. The officers for the coming year will be Arturo Brito, president, Rafael Otero, vice president, Julio Torres, secretary, and Doris Cruz, treasurer.

Brito called for a unity of all the spanish-speaking students on campus, following the election which took place in Room 163 of the Campus Center at 4:00.

Rules Mitchell bugs illegal

Supreme Court restricts wiretaps

WASHINGTON [UPI]-The Supreme Court ruled unanimously yesterday that the Justice Department repeatedly violated federal wiretap laws when John N. Mitchell was attorney general. The action probably means acquittal for hundreds of narcotics and gambling defendants.

The 9-0 decision came in one of two challenges to wiretapping procedures carried out in 1969 and 1970 when Mitchell headed the Justice Department. In the second case, the Court ruled 5 to 4 that another aspect of the procedures was not illegal.

The decisions hinged on interpretations of the Omnibus Crime Control Act of 1968, which requires authorizaiion by the U.S. attorney general or a "specially designated" assistant attorney general before a wiretap. Many of Mitchell's authorizations were issued by his executive assistant, Sol Lindenbaum.

Justice Byron R. White, writing the unanimous opinion in the first case involving a narcotics prosecution in Baltimore, said "plainly enough, the executive assistant is neither the attorney general nor a specially designated assistant attorney general."

He rejected the government's argument that the law vests all the Justice Department functions in the attorney general, who then delegates them appropriately. The department argued that at worst it had committed only a "harmless error."

The department originally told the Court that about 1,430 persons are involved in a series of cases - primarily involving narcotics and gambling charges - held up for a final decision on the wiretap issue.

Ruling affects 98 in Boston

BOSTON [AP] — A U.S. Supreme Court decision yesterday that invalidated several anti-crime wiretaps could affect the cases of 89 defendants awaiting trial on gambling charges, Gerald E. McDowell, attorney in charge of the U.S. Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force for New England said.

McDowell said the 89 defendants were arrested in the Boston area in 1972.

He said that each case will have to be examined to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to prosecute, after officials read the high court's opinion.

JFK autopsy still secret

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Amateur investigators challenging the decade-old Warren Commission report on the assassination of John F. Kennedy failed at the Supreme Court yesterday to force the FBI to make some of its records public.

The Supreme Court refused to review an appeals court decision that the FBI can keep the Kennedy files secret under provisions of the Freedom of Information (FOI) Act.

Judiciary panel hears tapes today; may subpoena more

WASHINGTCN [UPI] — The House Judiciary Committee may listen to the White House tape containing the now-famous 18-½-minute gap when it holds its first full day of closed impeachment hearings today.

There also was growing sentiment among the committee members to vote this week on a subpoena for a White House tape which they learned last Thursday may be central to their impeachment inquiry. A vote today apparently has been ruled out.

After a four-day recess, Special Counsel John M. Doar will resume his chronological presentation of the impeachment evidence on today. A committee source said the first tape the members would listen to was recorded on June 20, 1972.

Although he would not disclose the content of that tape, it was known that among the tapes the committee has received from the White House was the one on that date containing the 18-½-minute gap and a dictabelt on which Nixon recalled a telephone conversation with former Attorney General John N. Mitchell.

Notes from former White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman show that he and Nixon discussed Watergate during their June 20 morning conversations but that portion of the conversation occurred during the 18-½-minute gap on the tape.

The tape the committee may consider subpoenaing this week was recorded on Appil 4, 1972, when the Senate Watergate committee in a still unpublished report said Mitchell approved plans to spy on Democrats. Nixon met with Mitchell, Haldeman and John Ehrlichman on that date.

Doar told the committee last Thursday that the conversation could be important in finding out how much Nixon knew prior to the break-in at Democratic headquarters.

The April 4, 1972 tape is among 75 contained in a second committee request for White House material on Watergate.

Washington view

Sirica to release final tape report

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The final report by experts who studied the 18-½-minute gap in one of President Nixon's key Watergate tapes will be made public in about two weeks, Judge John J. Sirica said yesterday.

In a series of closed hearings on Nixon's Watergate conversations, Sirica also took under advisement a motion by the White House to quash Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski's subpoena for further presidential tapes.

Sirica's clerk said the ruling on the motion to quash probably would not come before next week. Nixon's Watergate lawyer, James D. St. Clair, has argued that release of the tapes sought by Jaworski would be contrary to the public interest.

The hearing concerned Jaworski's efforts to force Nixon to comply with an Appil 18 subpoena for tapes and other documents pertaining to 64 conversations Nixon had with former aides after the Watergate break-in.

St. Clair, has said the White House will relinquish no more tapes or evidence and will — if necessary — fight the subpoena to the Supreme Court.

The morning meeting on tape gap report was attended by White House lawyers, Watergate prosecutors and Charles S. Rhyne, attorney for Nixon's personal secretary, Rose Mary Woods. The parties discussed "the production ... and dispostion" of the final report.

The tape involved a meeting between Nixon and H. R. Haldeman, then his chief of staff, on June 20, 1972 — three days after the Watergate break-in. Miss Woods testified she might have caused a gap of four to five minutes accidentally while transcribing the tapes, but did not know what happened to the rest of the missing conversation.

In its preliminary report in December, the panel said the gap was caused by at least five and perhaps as many as nine separate erasures — all done manually — and strongly suggested the erasures were deliberate. A grand jury is investigating.

Italians to keep divorce after vote

From the Wire Services

ROME — Italians lined up almost 3-2 behind the nation's divorce law yesterday after a bitter referendum campaign in this Roman Catholic nation. The voters handed a rebuff to the government and to the Vatican.

With 26 million ballots counted — about 80 percent of the vote — the pro-divorce share was about 59.1 per cent.

It could mean serious trouble for the center — left coalition government of Premier Mariano Rumor, whose Christian Democrats strongly advocated repeal of the law.

The bishops urged church members to do away with the law and Pope Paul VI said he fully supported the views of his bishops.

The Vatican had no immediate comment on the outcome.

The law permits divorce after a separation of five years.

It was enacted by Parliament on Dec. 1, 1970 — Italy's first divorce law in more than a century. Until the law was passed only the Vatican's Holy Rota could rule on matrimonial matters.

The Christian Democrat party, a church-supported group and Italy's largest political organization, was the lone coalition group against divorce. Its partners in the Catholic-Marxist governing alliance — the Socialist parties — campaigned vigorously for upholding the divorce law.

Christian Democrat Secretary General Amintore Fanfani said during the campaign that a vote for divorce was a vote for the Communists.

The Communist party, largest in the West, countered that abolishing divorce would infringe upon the sovereignty of the state and could lead to fascism.

The two days of voting were calm as 88 percent of an electorate of 37.5 million acted as final judges on the law. The outcome may have been decided by women voters who outnumber men by 1.5 million.

Militant Protestants seek new elections

BELFAST [UPI] — A parliamentary Protestant group yesterday threatened a coup d'etat and civil war in Northern Ireland unless the British government orders new elections for its assembly.

Meanwhile security officials, expanding on a report to parliament by Prime Minister Harold Wilson, said captured documents also reveal a plot by the opposing side. They said Irish Republican Army Provisionals planned to seize populated areas of Belfast and foment sectarian violence.

The Ulster Army Council, military wing of the extremist Ulster Defense Association, demanded that London "restore democracy" through new assembly elections.

In view of their sweep of 11 of Ulster's 12 seats in British parliamentary elections in February, the militant Protestants express confidence that they can take control oo the Northern Ireland assembly, which is now dominated by a moderate Protestant-Catholic alliance.

Demonstrators, mostly settlers of outpost villages in the Golan Heights, display placards--one with caricatures of Secretary of State Kissinger--during protests yesterday as Kissinger met with Israeli leaders in negotiations.

Israeli Golan residents fear territory concessions

JERUSALEM [AP] — Some of Israel's pioneer settlers from the Golan Heights argued yesterday with Israel's top soldier about artillery and security.

"What are you promising Kissinger?" shouted one farmer to Lt. Gen. Mordechai Gur, the Israeli chief of staff. "How far will we withdraw? How close will the Syrians be able to move their artillery."

"None of your settlements is even beginning to be endangered," Gur fired back.

The protesters had come from their Golan Heights farms in occupied Syria to demonstrate outside Premier Golda Meir's office. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was inside trying to negotiate Syrian-Israeli troop disengagement.

The sunburned young men and women in work jeans are the last of a breed of pioneers who built the Jewish state, farmer-soldiers reminiscent of the people who settled the American West.

On the Golan they number about 1,000 and they are almost an anachronism in a land well-embarked on its industrial revolution. They command the respect of men like Gur.

Though they are few, the voice of the pioneers is powerful in Israeli politics.

They fear their government is making territorial concessions that will put their homes closer to Syrian guns.

Guinea-Bissau rebels propose negotiations

ALGIERS [AP] — Rebel leaders from Portuguese Guinea became yesterday the first in Portugal's three troubled African territories to propose negotiations to end more than a decade of guerrilla warfare.

A statement issued by the diplomatic mission here of the republic of Guinea-Bissau, the name insurgents have given to the two-thirds of Portuguese Guinea which they control, said the negotiations with Portugal's new regime could begin "with or without a cease-fire."

But it warned the rebels were aiming for "the total liberation of our people."

In Lisbon, Portugal's ruling military junta withheld comment on the reports from Algeria.

"We know of the reported offer," a junta spokesman said, "but we have no comment."

The rebels belong to the African party for the Independence of Guinea-Bissau and the Cape Verde Islands, known as PAIGC, and issued the statement after an "extraordinary meeting."

Independence movements in Angola and Mozambique, Portugal's two other African colonies, which are both larger than Portuguese Guinea, have rejected talks with the Portuguese junta of Gen. Antonio de Spinola.

Spinola's regime, which came into power April 25 after saying a military solution to Portugal's African problem was impossible, had offered negotiations and proposed that the revel movements submit the conflict to a vote among the native populations.

PAICG's statement, while demanding independence, did not make it a prerequisite for negotiations.

For a cease-fire to precede negotiations, the revel group said, Portuguese forces in Guinea-Bissau, will have to "cease all operations and aggressive acts against our population" and regroup in command centers.

60 mph rejected

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday rejected an attempt to raise the 55 mph speed limit to 60, with opponents successfully arguing the lower limit saves lives and fuel every day.

The Senate voted 51-29 against an amendment intoduced by Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., to let states boost the limit to 60 mph if they desire.

Opposing senators argued it was too early to ease up on the fuel conservation developed during the energy crisis.

Homosexuals limited

BOSTON [UPI] — Legislation to prohibit discrimination in hiring homosexuals for state civil service jobs was killed yesterday by the Massachusetts House.

The measure, which had won House approval on a voice vote last Thursday, was defeated on a 139-79 roll call after a motion to reconsider last week's action prevailed.

Rep. John R. Buckley, D-Abington, supported the bill. He said that it would prohibit the asking of questions on civil service exams about sexual preference and would make it illegal to turn down a qualified homosexual for a job unless it could be shown that his sexual preference would interfere in the performance of his work.

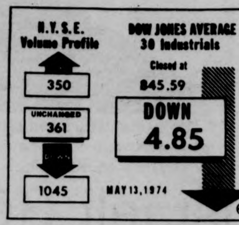
Defense cut pushed

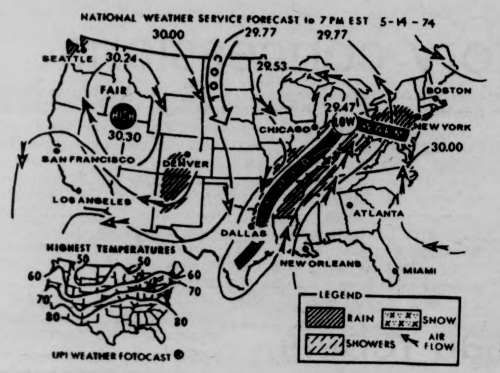
WASHINGTON [UPI] — A group of former defense and foreign policy officials recommended yesterday that at least $11 billion be cut from the 1975 Pentagon budget.

The group, composed for the most part of men who served in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, contended that current budget requests of more than $98 billion were deliberately bloated by the administration as an antirecession tool.

Paul C. Warnke, a former assistant defense secretary, held a news conference with Morton Halperin, a former deputy assistant secretary, and Adrian S. F1isher, a former deputy director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, to outline their views.

They said they believed the two most important cuts they were recommending were $2.5 billion for new nuclear arms and $1.4 billion for arms aid to Vietnam.





FCC asked for minority channels

By Black News Service

WASHINGTON [LNS] — The Federal Communications Commission has been asked to create 62 new VHF television channels reserved primarily for non-commercial use and minority-controlled commercial stations.

A petition was filed with the FCC by the United Church of Christ, three individuals in the field of communications, and by Geoffrey Cowan, director of the communications law program in the University of California in Los Angeles.

The petition prepared by Cowan said creation of the new VHF channels would "help to advance goals which the government has held to be in the public interest, including the development of public broadcasting and the increased participation of minority groups in television station ownership and management."

He said the new channels could be created in major cities without retarding the growth of UHF channels or causing significant interference with existing stations.

Cowan contended in the petition that rapid population growth in urban areas has resulted in inadequate television service in these markets.

The FCC was told that in more than 25 of the top 100 markets across the nation, there is a non-commercial station on the air, and in 38 of the major markets on UHF stations does not have non-commercial outlets, they are UHF instead of VHF. The petitioners said noncommercial programming on UHF stations does not provide an effective substitute because "UHF signals are inferior, reaching far fewer homes with acceptable quality of reception."

MIT study says gas prices to soar without imports

CAMBRIDGE [UPI] — Oil and gasoline prices will soar even higher than they did during the Arab oil embargo if the United States goes ahead with plans to become self-sufficient in energy in 1980, according to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Scientists at MIT's energy laboratory, writing in the current issue of the school's Technology Review, predicted the price of oil would jump another $10-$12 a barrel if the U.S. halts all imports of petroleum in favor of developing its domestic supplies.

"Thus the United States will face higher energy prices than those experienced under the Arab oil embargo if the nation pursues its current policy of seeking to achieve complete independence from foreign energy supplies," the article said.

Rather than a ban on energy imports, the authors recommend that "flexible tariffs or quotas" be used to hold oil prices "at a level that would reduce imports."

It said oil prices are already high enough to "extract the present domestic oil and gas reserves with high levels of efficiency.

"A still higher price would have only a marginal effect on exploration and production over the next few years within the United States," the report said.

It also said, "It would take more than a doubling of prices to provide additional significant incentives to the development of synthetic fuels.

Charge politics in imbalance veto

Liberals call Sargent "spineless"

BOSTON [UPI]-A bipartisan coalition of black and white House liberals yesterday criticized Gov. Francis W. Sargent for the "cowardly and irresponsible" way he vetoed a bill to repeal Massachusetts' Racial Imbalance Law.

Rep. Bill Owens, D-Boston, of the five-member Legislative Black Caucus, called Sargent "spineless."

Sargent Friday night went on statewide television to announce his veto of the repeal measure. The law is designed to achieve racial balance in schools.

At the same time, he pledged to send to the legislature - if they sustained his veto - proposals for bringing about school desegregation on a voluntary basis.

"It was cowardly and irresponsible," said Rep. Barney Frank, D-Boston. "He had to know what he was doing by being deliberately deceptive.

"Simply and briefly, it's a total political sellout."

Though the coalition vowed to fight to sustain the veto, some members acknowledge that Sargent's position on the law might have cost crucial votes needed to uphold the veto.

There was a behind-the-scenes move yesterday in the House to postpone action on the veto, a move Owens said was an indication the law's foes "don't have the votes yet to override the veto.

"We can no longer tolerate people who don't have any spine," Owens said, "and the governor is becoming more spineless every day. But we have enough votes in the black community and in coalition areas to determine who becomes the next governor."

In a statement read by Rep. Melvin H. King, D-Boston, the caucus accused Sargent of playing a political game with the state's school children.

"This is not a football game, and neither we, nor our children will be used as political footballs, kicked around at will to give each side extra points," the statement said.

"For too long, desegratation - the onus of it - has been placed on the black people of Boston," Owens said. If the state is unwilling to provide meaningful integrated education for minorities, "then we want 40 per cent of the education budget for the city of Boston for the black community and we'll run our own schools."

Fisherman asks protection against Russian trawlers

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI]-Massachusetts lobsterman Steven Goodwin yesterday asked the U.S. Senate Commerce Committee for help in his battle to make a living.

"On April 26, four Russian vessels went towing through my gear. I lost $17,000 worth of gear and I lost a catch. This is putting me right out of business," said Goodwin, 29, of Marblehead. He owns a 50-foot boat The Queen and goes "deep water pot lobstering" 100 miles off Newport.

"People don't understand that fishing in the United States of America is practically a small business," he said.

Goodwin testified in favor of a bill to extend American jurisdiction over ocean fishing from the current 12 mile limit to 200 miles on an interim basis, which co-sponsor Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R.I., said was designed to protect the American fishing industry and fishing resources from foreign fishing efforts.

"I have gear on the dock and I am afraid to put it in the water. I need this for my own livelihood and my family. I'm almost out of business now," said Goodwin.. "This is something that has got to stop. I was just getting ahead financially this year. We were coming on our best season and I start out losing 190 traps," said Goodwin.

The public hearing was one in a series of regional sessions for the committee to weigh citizen views on the bill.

Niels Rorholm, coordinator of the University of Rhode Island Sea Grant College program, said, "Extended U.S. fisheries jurisdiction could set the stage for the New England fishing industry again becoming an important economic force in coastal New England while at the same time improving our balance of trade in the national interest" because of the rising price for fish.

Coalition calls for abortion bill defeat

BOSTON [AP]-A coalition of lobbying groups called on the legislature yesterday to defeat a strict abortion regulation bill and asked Boston City Hospital to resume performing abortions.

The bill would ban abortions after the 20th week of pregnancy except to save the life or health of the mother. It would require abortions after the 10th week to be performed in a hospital and only with consent of the parents of minors or husbands of married women.

"The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that states can regulate abortions in the second trimester of pregnancy (12th-26th week) to insure the life and health of the mother - not her right to have one," said Mrs. Joan Tuttle, associate director of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts.

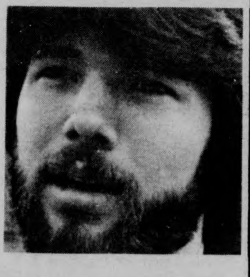
Campus Comments

Text by E. Patrick McQuaid
Photography by Chris Bourne

It was just about one year ago that headlines flashed with the scandal of Watergate and Richard Nixon became the number one target of a nation's fury. Yes, it's been one year now. In England, the people demanded change and there was another election. After the disclosure of the spy ring scandal in West Germany, Willy Brandt resigned within a week. One year. One long year.

The question: Now that "impeachment" hearings have started, do you see any chance for action after a year of talk? And are you bored with what has happened so far?



Dale Godard, from North Leverett works in Hadley and was passing through the campus when questioned: It (impeachment) shouldn't be dropped all together. Even if the impeachment doesn't get through, they should try to do it anyway. He's done something and he's hiding it. The only way this will be brought out is through a trial. It is the reputation of the office and what the man has done to this office, this country that's at stake here.

Nancy Olechna, Psychology major, senior, 21, commuter from Westfield: I don't think it's boring to hear about it, they keep coming out with more and more that's interesting. Nixon's slithering in his shoes now and I think he deserves that. I think the hearings should be open to the public, maybe on channel 57 or something like that.

James Fitts, School of Business Administration, sophomore, 19, commuter from Amherst: Yes, I am bored with it all. They should either do something about it or simply forget it. The country's getting nowhere right now. Congress is all screwed up and no one's getting anywhere.

Marianne Bridges, Nursing major, freshman, Springfield, Mass., Orchard Hill, 18: I don't think that this country has a very good standing in front of the rest of the world today. It doesn't make that much difference if he get's impeached or not in their eyes. I'm surprised he's still alive! Where are the assassins when we need them!?

Jim Lindsey, Business major, Graduate student, Southboro, Mass., Lincoln Apts., 29: The process of impeachment has started and there's no stopping it now. People may be bored in the cities and towns, but not around here. This community seems to be a little more involved than most. He should have resigned and I think he will. When you consider the assassinations of presidents you'd think he'd be prime number one on the list. I think the guy's been a bastard all his life and the people want to see him strung up.

Esther Arnette, Psychology major, junior, Fairmount, N.C., Smith college, 20: Nothing substantial yet, just talk. It's good that a lot of other Republicans are aware of it because it's really affected them. It might not make a difference to him what happens but if it ever happens again, Americans will be aware, and so must the rest of the world. Other countries will use this as a learning situation for more effective government. I feel no one gives a damn enough about the man to kill him. They'd rather have an impeachment.

Tit for tat - phooey

To The Editor:

I am not an emphatic candidate for the Women's Lib Movement. If a member of the opposite sex opens a door for me, I consider it an act of courtesy rather than an insult to my physical ability. I would likewise return the favor.

I must, however, draw a line when it comes to working with men. At the ripe age of 21 I am quickly realizing that the majority of employers are males; unfortunately the bold, aggressive, beasty type who exploit females by embarassing questions, penetrating eyes and unwarranted actions.

I have recently acquired a part time job and much to my dismay found that my boss expects fringe benefits. The man in question happens to be engaged so that destroys the "desperate, hard-up" image. What it all boils down to is his egotistical thrust of power over women. It's a frustrating situation as I am left with 2 alternatives: say no and lose my job or go along with him and lose my dignity.

Thanks Sue Hubbard

To The Editor:

As a former Chairperson of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate, may I take this opportunity to compliment the work that MDC Reporter Ms. Susan Hubbard for the work she has done in her coverage of the Faculty Senate on this campus.

Ms. Hubbard has done an excellent job in taking the complexities of the meetings and transforming them into highly readable prose: no easy accomplishment.

I, for one, think that this service is an invaluable one and I wish to thank Ms. Hubbard for her service to the University community.

Work for Quinn

To The Editor:

In a recent speech at the Boston College Law School Attorney General Robert Quinn recommended that students interested in public service "Jump right in". "Offer your youth and idealism to your country, which needs you now more than ever before," he said. Quinn noted that he had hired scores of people under 30 since becoming Attorney General in 1969. If anybody is interested in public service and would like to get Bob Quinn elected governor please contact me at 546-5410. This will enable me to give your name to the Quinn committee in your home area for the summer. Thanks.

Thanks for the blood

To The Editor:

The mens and womens service organizations, Alpha Phi Omega and Gamma Sigma Sigma, and the University Women, co-sponsors of the University Blood Bank, wish to sincerely thank those members of the academic community, in large part students, who volunteered their blood in the just completed record drive. We thank the 1,281 whose blood was collected, the 100 who were deferred for various reasons, and the undetermined number who would have contributed had the drive been longer.

We look forward to seeing everyone again in the fall. The dates will be November 11-14 with appointments made the preceding week November 4-7.

Woodbury wrong

To The Editor:

It is comforting to know that Dean Woodbury ranks the UMass graduate school among the nation's finest [the Collegian, May 8, 1974, p 2]. It is also encouraging to realize that, in all probability, this statement is made knowing full well that he is insulated by layers of bureaucracy between the average graduate student and his office. And knowing full well that he was not a graduate student at this University, and presumably that it has been quite some time since he last attended graduate school.

But were one to accept a very current school of thought, one would have to believe that being in a position of authority is synonymous with having full knowledge of everything that goes in within the domains of that authority....

It is also soothing to know that certain sections of this University — one of the nation's finest! — denounced the recent bill with the State legislatures that will make it mandatory for faculty to spend a minimum of 9 hours a week in direct instructional contact with student. [Which statistic according to Sen. Kelley is an average of 6 hours [MDC, May 6, p 1], according to Professor Beth is seven and one half hours [MDC, May 7, p 17], and according to Chancelor Bromery is 14 hours [MDC, May 6 p 1] per week.].

Those who can look beyond their small circle of selfish - personal - interests will remember a news item in the Collegian of April 29, p 15:

"Faculty work week at the University of Minnesota averages out to 35.4 hours of direct instructional activities, the Minnesota Daily reports. Also revealed is that all research work, administrative duties and discipline-related public services carried on by the faculty are done almost on an "overtime basis"."

It is more comforting, now, to know that there are still better schools than this "which is ranked among the nation's finest".

For the present I am a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts who cannot share Dean Woodbury's belief.

Ode to a pair of jeans

In these troubles times of fallen governments, failing economies, and flagrant misuse of the people's trust, it is nice to know that a pair of good dungarees will never let you down, provided, of course, that you have a good belt.

Lovers may come and acquaintances may go, but like a true friend, a good pair of dungarees will never leave your side. Or your backside. They'll always stay behind you. Like a true friend, a good pair of dungarees will tell you when your gaining or losing weight. They'll always stick to you. And like a true friend, a good pair of dungarees will remain true blue to you, providing, or course, that you go easy on the bleach.

Like a good foundation, a good pair of dungarees can be the start of something big. Although truly beautiful in their naked simplicity, a good pair of dungarees can be transformed into a walking monument. A patch here, an embroidered sunburst there, or some silver studs stuck everywhere create an art form from what was once, just a pair of denim coverlets.

Like a good wine, a good pair of dungarees mellow with age. Although quite rough at the beginning a good pair of dungarees will ferment through the soap suds and fabric softeners until they become effervessently unique, as only a good wine can.

Like a good car, a good pair of dungarees will always get you to where you want to go. For without a pair of denims on, you are as lost as though you were stuck out in the middle of nowhere without transportation. It would be indecent. Like a good car, if by chance something should go wrong, a good pair of dungarees can still be useful with some minor repairs. Switching from the long version to the cut-off style is comparible to switching from a Cadillac to a Toyota, it may be a shock at first, but they'll still get you where you want to go.

Like a good job, a good pair of dungarees will always support you. But like a good job, a good pair of dungarees are not always easy to come by. With the demand far exceeding the supply, a good pair of dungarees can be obtained only if you are different (in size) or clever.

Styles may come, and fads may go, but a good pair of dungarees will always remain the same. Whether flared leg, boot cut, straight legged or baggie, they are essentially the same. That denim cloth is reknown no matter what shape it's in. Or what shape is in them. Plaids, stripes, colors, and cords beware. Like a good security blanket, a good pair of dungarees will never leave you uncovered.

Adieu to Umieland

I arrived in Umieland towards the end of August; the sun blazing against the Massachusetts sky. It must have been at least 100 degrees out for most of those first days spent at Pierpont (Project 10) getting to know more about UMass, and the Amherst area.

Coming from Rutgers through the exchange program I really did not know anyone. I came for the experience; the adventures of seeing how I could adapt to a new situation. I came for the challenge; because there were certain things that I wanted to prove to myself. Yet while it was only nine months ago, in ways it feels like years; in others simply days. But there is no way that counting down the months does any kind of justice to my UMass experience.

And now it is time to say goodbye. I was thinking of transferring here for my Senior year, but Whitmore says that in the case of Exchange Students such a policy is a "no-no". So unless things change, or I get the energy to take my fight to the top on appeal it looks like I won't be back.

I have never before been in a position of writing a "last column". And while I hammer away at the keys, I know that there are so many things that I want to put down; yet I feel so limited at this moment in expressing these thoughts and feelings.

I've enjoyed my year here. Really. From the informal life at Pierpont to the 5:45 dinner at Bufferfield, and most everything in between. This shouldn't imply that everything has gone well. No way. There have been enough low points to keep me a realist, but more than enough good times to make me an optomist.

All the memories now run into each other. The first story that I ever wrote for Patrick Coffey, the Editor of Poor Richard's. Entitled "The New Kid on the Block" it was terrible, and I'm very lucky that Patrick had enough good sense not to print it; while someone had the decency to throw it away. The Hatch. The Blue Wall. Bantering with the ladies at Hampshire Dining Commons. Project Ten. The good times just hanging out.

Some of the best times and memories will come out of my all too brief association with the Collegian. My first column was about Spiro Agnew; I thought that he was a crook, and that the leniency of his sentence was a shame.

Writing for the MDC gave me the opportunity to work out a lot of my feelings and thoughts on paper; and in short helped me improve my writing skills. The paper needs you. The Editors want you. So if you like writing come on up and join the staff.

Yet as I write this I sense that what I feel just isn't coming through. As I leave I know that I will miss so many of you. I don't know how many of the 22,000 that go to UMass I have met, but so many of these encounters have been good ones.

So I've seen UMass in the Summer. The sun blazzing down on an empty "F" lot. I've seen the Pioneer Valley turn Orange and Red from the top of Mount Sugerloaf in the Fall. I've seen the snow, of winter and the sun and rain of spring.

I learned the unpredictability of New England weather the hard way. One day sitting by the Pond, watching the people go by. (The weather was in the eighties.) I wrote my column "Spring is Sprung". Yet by the time the column appeared on Tuesday April 9th, UMieland was covered with snow.

I came here with answers and I leave here with questions. And while the process seems rather backwards, nevertheless it is true. There are some people here that I want to see again. But perhaps there meetings will drift into the past.

Every emotion that a person can feel in a lifetime, I have experienced this year. So I leave here with a smile, and with hopes for the future as well as memories from the past. So farewell. If you have any comments concerning this column over the past year, please drop me a note. I'd like to read them. As far as I'm concerned this year will end just a bit too soon.

The reduction of the SGA

By MARK PAWLIK

When ever a group of people exist, a governing body becomes an essential part of that structure. Amherst or the University is no exception. Sometimes in the course of developing a ruling body we tend to go to an extreme and become overgoverned. This has occured here at the University that has an undergraduate enrollment of twenty thousand, the elaborate governing network that exists is far to extranious. Do we need all these representatives? It does give appearance of representation to all, but this is only achieved by number.

I would like to question the effectiveness of this group in respects to its size. People claim that it is effective and show examples of things that have been acheived. Fine, but I wonder whether these accomplishments were actually a product of the whole body, or was it actually a brainstorm of a few concerned and involved people that belong to these groups. I'll be the first to praise these efforts but I think it should be known who is responsible for them.

It is my belief that the usefulness and the effectiveness of the whole body seems to lie in the hands of a small group of motivated people, who are not necessarily egotistical or political, but simply involved. The remainder of the people that exist in these bodies are simply tokens of representation existing to make sure every dorm or group has a body physically present. What purpose does this serve other than bolstering statistics? Which group would work more effectively, a group of twenty people who could work together and communicate or a group of one hundred-twenty of which only twenty could work together? The answer is evident. This is because it does not have to deal with a number of people who are impediments.

The S.G.A. is composed of all the undergraduates of the University. There are several governing bodies that exist within the S.G.A. They are the area governments, Commuter Assembly and the Senate, which is the legislative arm of the S.G.A. The reason for the massive expansion of these bodies, lies not within the bodies, but within the students themselves. The S.G.A. evolved from a student council. However when this evolved students were more involved and were willing to get involved, but now apathy is ravaging our campus.

Starting at the area level this lethargy exists. I can personally attest this fact having been a member of the Central Area Council, I have observed that in the two years that I have been associated with this group that trying to fill their ranks was very difficult. It seems that very few people from the forms want to get involved. The spaces available for each dorm are left empty. Some of the people who are elected run unopposed. This does not always guarantee that the person elected is the most qualified. This situation is not particular to the areas, being that the Student Senate is plagued by the same problems. Every year the Senate advertises position openings without a rush response. What happens? Sometimes they receive positive results, but for the most part these seats are left open to someone who might be faintly interested in the whole process, what kind of choice is it in an election where there is only one name on the ballot?

This being the case, why should the various groups strive to fill their quotas when all they are getting our bodies to be physically present? I don't think we need any more impediments than we have now.

I would like to offer an alternative to the present system. Instead of having representation by dorms we should have it by area, not by city. This would add competitiveness to the seats available to each of the areas. At some point the Senate should decide how many seats each area had by population, and have a popular election. This is the way that the Greeks choose theirs. In the same respect the area governments could do the same. This would require interested people to be more representative of the whole area than just one dorm.

There is no exact answer to this problem. This is not meant as an answer but as thought for consideration. It is up to the students to find an answer or the situation will worsen.

Suggestions for film artists

To The Editor:

I suppose underground film-makers to be at once refugees from and underminers of commercial film. So "Great American Underground Cinema," the title of a series of two recent screenings, seems to undermine itself by its pretensions — almost like "classics of rage and despair." Aren't even moles safe these days? But if the Establishment [in the benevolent form of the Fine Arts Council] is determined to co-opt or appropriate the Underground, couldn't they do it in better style by taking to heart the following suggestions?

1] program notes, for the viewers' sake. Otherwise some of the films are incomprehensible and the program becomes a freak show instead of a group of serious artistic statements. Even descriptions such as the following, from the Film-makers Cooperative catalogue from which these films were ordered, would help locate them for us: "The Independent Film Award for 1964 is presented to Andy Warhol. We see Andy among his leading stars, Baby Jane Holzer, Gerry Malanga, Ivy Nicholsen, and we see the editor of Film Culture, Jonas Mekas, presenting the award: a basket of fruit — mushrooms, carrots and apples, bananas — which, then, they all eat with great pleasure." — J.M.

2] please, no more "great" old chestnuts: every underground film program here for the last 5 years has included "Scorpio Rising" and part of "Dog Star Man" [all without notes, of course]. And the non-chestnuts — how were they selected? Are they somehow important or representative of certain periods in these film-makers' careers?

3] start on time [the first screening started almost an hour late, and the 10 o'clock showing was cancelled.]

Mr. Feld, I still like Aerosmith

To The Editor:

I noticed in Monday's edition that one, Steve Feld, of the MDC Staff made some comments about the Spring Concert in the Cage that had to have been his and only his opinion of it.

First of all, when I turned to page three I couldn't help but notice some pictures of the concert that included the Elliot Murphy Band and Aerosmith, the group that Mr. Feld had most of his rude, inaccurate, and biased comments on. And when I read the caption under the picture of the drummer [which read "Does it really matter if the Aerosmith drummer keeps good time or not?"], I was enraged! Who are you, Mr. Feld, to go around maligning Columbia Recording artists, while you're just a pseudo-critic for a free, college-campus newspaper. Who are you to say that "Aerosmith brought caginess back to the Cage...", while over 5000 people had one of the best times there than ever before? Who are you, Mr. Feld, to call the audience "a peculiarly animalistic bunch intent on reaching the highest possible state of artificially-induced euphoria..." while you were part of that "animalistic bunch"? Who are you to say that the Elliot Murphy Band "easily outclassed the headliners", when everybody there came to see Aerosmith? And besides, was the Elliot Murphy Band asked back for two encores?

Are you supposed to be some kind of authority on this subject? Where is your proof? I can say that your opinion [and I do realize that this is your own opinion] is biased after reading your article on Real Tears in that same edition. Apparently your taste for music is limited to the sort of Real Tears. I happen to not only be an Aerosmith fan, but I also enjoy Real Tears immensely when they do play around campus. You should realize that there is no one set definition of music, and that one's right to play one's music should not be criticized as you have done so. Aerosmith's interpretation of music is different from Elliot Murphy's, and you should not compare the two.

Steve Feld is just an example of how the Collegian hires just anybody who can lift a pen once in a while, just so space can be filled. So the next time there appears a commentary column in the paper, and not just one of Mr. Feld's, that goes ahead and makes stray convictions like his, I'll let you know that there will be someone out there that is going to jump on your back for it.

A good way to sum this article up would be the same way Mr. Feld did his. It also sums up how I've felt about some of the slander that has appeared in the Collegian this past year, and that is, "It's been a helluva year, hasn't it?"

Something fishy about Pisces discrimination

To The Editor:

Over the past several weeks I have become aware of growing discrimination against a portion of the University community. As yet, I feel, neither the discriminators nor those discriminated against are fully aware of the magnitude of the problem; and that if firm and immediate action is taken the situation might be resolved without too extensive damage having been done.

Many of us rely [to a greater or lesser degree] on the daily Astrological Forecast appearing in the Collegian. We determine which classes [students] or committee meetings [faculty] will be worth attending, how much beer we may appropriately drink in the Blue Wall, how to handle our important social relationships — in short a myriad of major and minor decisions — on the basis of the Forecast. For eleven-twelfths of the campus, happily, this continues to be possible. However, due to the discriminatory practices mentioned above the Pisceans are being systematically denied access to this indispensible information. In effect we are being left to flounder about on our own.

Lest this deplorable situation divide the campus into hostile, but unequal camps, I would strongly urge your Astrological Editor to take immediate action in regard to the Pisces Forecast. In fairness he should run nothing but Pisces Forecasts for at least a full week — failing this we will settle for nothing less than full restitution of Pisces to the Zodiac — and if space is an issue, omit on a random or rotational basis any of the other eleven.

New minority moot

To The Editor:

In reference to the article by Steve Seche, "Non-Tokers: New Campus Minority Emerges", on May 8th, the article makes no mention of any such minority after the first sentence. He continually mentions what might happen to the 85 percent that do smoke. He even points out that marijuana smoking is on the rise which is averse to his title.

Dr. McBride overconfident in opinion

To The Editor:

Concerning the statements by Dr. McBride of the University Health Services in the article in Friday's Collegian, "Pregnancy drug cause of cancer", by Roberta Martone:

"...the number of women who have actually contracted adenosis is small."

"There are about 100 offspring who have contracted the disease." In that the "disease" that Dr. McBride seems to be referring to is cancer and not the precancerous state adenosis, let me cite from a letter by Kay Weiss in the May 1974 issue of Ms to clarify:

> "It is now thought that 90 per cent of DES daughters have undetected adenosis, which may be precancerous."

Dr. McBrides attitude seems typical of the "don't worry" philosophy cited by many women in their contacts with physicians on this issue. Too many are soothed into thinking that they don't need to find out whether their mothers took DES. Too many who even know this for certain are led to believe that the Pap tests all, and that the pill is harmless. Too many women are told "don't worry" when they might well be risking their lives.

Given the high incidence of DES administered to women during the years most undergraduate and graduate women were being born, I consider it not only reasonable, but imperative that the University Health Services make available and advertise the Schiller and Colopscopy tests. They might consider incorporating the tests as regular procedure in pelvic exams.

I urge all women to read the article in Nov. 1973 Ms, and to contact their reps on the Health Advisory Board. Since no woman can be sure that her mother did not take DES in pregnancy, I urge all woman to demand appropriate testing -- and soon!

Where are the ovens?

To The Editor:

Up on Orchard Hill recently elected president Larry Zellner is consolidating his regime through a series of purges which are carefully removing everyone who has a position in Area Government who does not live in his dorm, Webster. This "Dorm Nationalism" and political patronage is violating the spirit of Area Government and is turning it into a government of Webster rather than one of the entire area. Through the aquiesence of the area representatives he has managed to have nearly the entire executive board in his back pocket as well as allmost all other Hill committees. He has total control of the Hill newspaper to squelch any voices against his regime and clique. Therefore we urge that everyone support any bill or constitutional ammendment that would give area government veto power over presidential appointments.

Barbecue on campus

Three 35-foot barbecue pits will prepare half-chickens for 6,000 to 7,000 eaters at the eighth annual UMass all-campus barbecue tomorrow.

Also on the menu will be potato salad, tossed salad, dinner rolls, brownies, apples, ice cream, and milk. The meal will be served on the Southwest Playing Fields from 4:30 to 7 p.m., and all dining commons will be closed, except Franklin which will serve students who would rather eat indoors.

Students who do not have dining commons tickets may pay $2.30 for the meal. Entertainment will be provided by the musical group Aces & Eights.

European studies

There will be an orientation meeting for undergraduate students interested in the new Certificate Program in West European Studies tomorrow at 4 p.m. in Thompson Tower, 6th floor lounge. Refreshments will be served.

The Board of Trustees at their recent May meeting approved this program designed to provide students with a greater familiarity with West European history, politics and culture. Students will still be majoring in one of the traditional disciplines such as Anthropology, Economics, or one of the West European languages, but will have an opportunity to take a number of West European courses and new interdisciplinary seminars plus a minimum of one foreign language in order to receive a certificate. The Certificate Program may appeal primarily to students in the Social Sciences and Humanities as well as those enrolled in BDIC, International Education, and the School of Business Administration.

For further information, please call Prof. Gerard Braunthal, Department of Political Science, at 5-0410.

UMass press bash

In 1965 the University of Massachusetts Press began its second year with the publication of Come Out Into the Sun: Poems New and Selected by Robert Francis.

In 1974, its tenth anniversary year, the Press appropriately announces the publication of Like Ghosts of Eagles, Mr. Francis' second volume of poetry and his fifth book published with the Press.

To commemorate Come Out Into the Sun, Mr. and Mrs. Waterman of the Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop in Amherst and the staff of the University Press joined in giving an autograph party for Mr. Francis.

To celebrate the publication of Like Ghosts of Eagles, the staffs of the bookshop and the Press have once again collaborated to give an autograph party for Mr. Francis, which will be held Thursday from 10:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m., at the Bookshop, 55 South Pleasant Street in Amherst.

The public is invited to attend the party, and to meet Mr. Francis, one of Amherst's best known and well-liked poets.

Two unusual programs will complete this semester's series of Women's Weekly Happenings. On Thursday, a group of three actresses and an actor will present the play Adam and Even at 11:30 a.m. in the courtyard at Whitmore Administration Building.

The players, Judi Loeb, Jenifer Tener, Genie Zust, and Richard Robbins, are all from the Lenox area.

Women's Weekly Happenings are an on-going program of the Everywoman's Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst. Further information is available at the Center, or by calling 545-0883.

Aquatic therapy

Beginning in Sept. swimming lessons will be offered to disabled students in the North P.E. Bldg. Any student with a temporary or a long-time disability may take the lessons regardless of the level of swimming ability.

This information has been given to the Handicapped Student Affairs office, 229d Whitmore. Call (5-0892) or visit the office for further information on this swimming program.

Black journalist

Professor Sam Yette, author of the award-winning book, The Choice: The Issue of Black Survival in America, will speak at 12:30 p.m. in the Marks Meadow Auditorium on May 14 at the School of Education.

Professor Yette is currently teaching journalism in the communications department at Howard University in Washington D.C. Formerly, he was a Washington Correspondent for Newsweek.

Professor Yette was fired by Newsweek in 1972 following publication of his award winning book. The Choice, after a Newsweek editor, according to Yette subjected him to racial slurs and told him the book embarrassed the magazine.

Organ and trumpet

An organ and trumpet concert of baroque music, featuring William McCorkle and Walter Chesnut, will be presented at 8:15 p.m. tomorrow in the Buckley Recital Hall of the Amherst College Music Building. The event is open to the public without charge.

The concert program works by Corelli, Couperin, Martini, Soler, Telemann, and Viviani. The two musicians have performed together frequently, and have recently been invited to participate as guest artists with the University of Massachusetts Chamber Singers in their 1974 summer tour of Italy, Austria, Germany and Switzerland.

Dear Aggie:

Get involved - it's good for you!

Dear Aggie,

Next Friday is kind of an anniversaRy for me. It will be exactly two years that my boyfriend and I have been together. The problem is that at this point in time we are not all that together. There is a fantastic lack of communication involved. I would really like to spend next weekend together with him, you know, dinner and the works. I want to avoid the fact that he will think we have nothing to celebrate. The last two years have meant a lot to me and I want to show him that this is true. Should I go ahead with my plans or say goodbye and move on?

Upon the My oh My

Dear My oh My,

If this is the end of your relationship, then it's not really an anniversary. It's more of a commemoration. Instead of suggesting anything as a celebration of anniversary, suggest it as a farewell celebration. How could he not appreciate such a gesture? Too often, people break up close relationships, only to have it result in a permanent separation - severing all communication. Just think of how foolish it is not to ever talk to someone who, may not just have been a loving lover, but a best friend as well. It's like saying, "Well, we're not going to be lovers anymore, so we can't be best friends either."

Sex does very strange things to relationships. Usually, it confounds things. Take the platonic relationship. By definition, (Webster's Unabridged) Platonic love is "a spiritual comradeship or love, in which there is no element of sexual desire, especially between persons of opposite sex." Now, think back to any platonic relationship you've ever had. Didn't you even once look at your "friend" and wonder what it would be like if you got together sexually? Did you ever even consider it? Or one step farther, did you ever yourself, or someone you know, get even slightly involved with a very close friend? It's a nice thing, right?. . . if handled correctly. But when you think of it, have you ever ruined a relationship by bringing sex into it? Oh, oh, it's the he-she - likes - me - more - than - I - like - him-her syndrome setting in. You start to act differently. You can't let your feelings out, all of a sudden. The relationship becomes stigmatized, and oh, how those complications start to develop - all because of sex and those wretched emotions which usually come with it.

But getting back to the topic at hand. Let's say the relationship was a good one, but something happens, and it comes to an end. What happens to those two people? From what I've experienced and seen, there seems to be an adjustment period. They can't turn from boyfriend-girlfriend (whatever that relationship encompasses) to just friends right away because usually one of the two can't handle it. So they have to wait a time until they can even talk to each other because it's too awkward at first. Granted, there are those people who decide mutually to part and each can handle it, but, then again, there are those couples whose break up is so violent that they never even see each other again.

Got a problem? Tell it to Aggie, the Collegian's exclusive advice columnist. Bring any and all letters to the Collegian Office, Student Union Bldg., U.Mass.

Stomach trouble

By ELAINE ORPHANOS

Dearest Umie;

Hi, this is your stomach speaking. I've been engaging in a monologue for months now and you've refused to listen. So, the nice people at the Collegian have given me the opportunity to air my complaints.

Just who do you think you are anyway, Euell Gibbons?? Even Kung Fu couldn't destroy the infinite number of ghastly concoctions you so inconsiderately order me to digest.

Last night, for example, I encountered "Mystery Meat", potatoes au "rotten", scullion salad (Ohhhhhhh!!!), followed by two pound of M&M's, poop-corn, and a midnight snack of two peanut butter and cucumber sand-witches.

DO YOUR EYES ENCOMPASS YOUR BODY, PERSON! ! !

And how about the time you nearly overdosed on beer at the Blue Wall? Yeah, that was me trying to knock some sense into you, the next morning. I yelled so loudly, I almost burst my lining. But, did you care? No, you kept on eating and drinking yourself into oblivion.

More M&M's, more beer and more poop-corn. What are you, some kind of Food-Aholic? I can't take it, I tell you, I'm going to resign. Pretty soon, they're going to have to take me away to that Big Formaldehyde Bottle in the sky!

But I do try to keep clam. Pass the Pepto-Bismol, please.

So what, if McManus' is open 24 hours a day, that doesn't entitle you to permanent residency. Oh, and while we're on the subject, wait till you feel the attack I've planned for the Saturday morning ritual when you inhale four pancakes smothered with chocolate-chip ice-cream.

Don't you have a heart? Look, I'm on your side. I hate to use a Monte Hallism, but let's make a deal, O.K.? If you eat sensible foods in moderation (see Food Science 101) and, henceforth, cause me no distress, I will stop interrupting your pleasurable rendezvous with your lover. (Embarassing, isn't it? Te, he, he.)

However, if, on the other hand, you insist upon pursuing your obese hobby, I will be forced to embark upon my strategic counter-plan. Bombs Away! !

Think about it, Umie, all the gastronomic forces are at my disposal. You haven't got a chance.

I remain,
Forever yours [unfortunately],
G.I. Stomach

On learning to play tennis

By GAIL BERGER

Once you have the determination, all you need is the drive - the forehand drive, that is.

Thinking I too could become sleek and athletic, I decided to try my hand at playing tennis, this Spring. I had heard so many slenderizing reports on the effects of a good tennis season that I knew my time had come.

But my determination wavered with the discovery that nobody wants to play with a beginner. Somehow, it is considered an insult to play with someone who isn't half as good. My first experience told me so. I challenged an athletic type.

Like most beginners, I don't own my own racket. So I borrowed one from a friend. He recommended it as "perfect" for a beginner.

With the tennis courts conveniently located outside my bedroom window, I didn't anticipate any trouble in getting a court. Little did I know that with the first rays of dawn the courts fill with tennis freaks. During the 40 minute wait, the players glared at us as my partner continuously pointed out their good and weak points.

Once I got onto the battleground, dressed in my tidy white gym outfit, I felt I could really get into the swing of things.

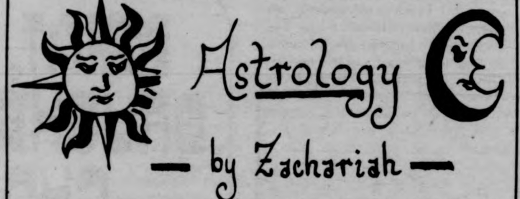
Much to my dismay, even my forehand could barely get the ball over the net. If by chance it did go over, it was always a fly ball. I knew I should have stuck with softball!

My partner was humiliated. He had already given up his favorite nine o'clock class in order to please me. I spent the next 25 minutes running after the balls I had hit. My partner refused to keep running into the street and up to the net to fetch my errors.

That didn't stop me, though. I considered the running was doing for my figure what my forehand wasn't doing for my game.

After 45 panting minutes of this mockery, a small crowd had gathered around our court. Not to admire my grace and skill, you understand. They were waiting impatiently to take our place on the court. I felt their smirks as I pranced gamely, to and fro, from net to street and back to the service line again. My partner was no help, either. For he made it obvious he had given up all hope for a challenging game.

My determination got me nowhere on that court. But I'm not discouraged. if practice makes perfect, I can't think of anyone starting out with more drive than myself. A forehand, yet.



On April 20 the sun passed from the sign Aries to the sign Taurus. Aries is the birth of spring in fire and Taurus is springs warm earthy form. We saw the Arian warrior ride upon the dark forests of winter and lay open the secrets of those depths to the sun. So forests became fields and so our thoughts turned to fields, pastoral occupations. The earthy Taurus warms the seeds that spring planted and so in May (May 21) the sun becomes Gemini and this is the sprouting of the crop and the vitalization which is the forerunner of the suns final triumph at summer solstice. Gemini is the pursuit of all experience and the synthesis thereof in mind and skill.

It is good to think of this in terms of the way in which these seasonal tides are reflected in the moon. It is easy to be aware of when new and full moons are and great use can be made of this simple knowledge. New moons are times of inception. They mark periods of inspiration or the beginnings of enterprise. As the moon reaches first quarter the energy is faced with some critical life-death turning point. This is the time to bring the matter forthright into activity. From first quarter the energy and growth should build rapidly in proportion to the growth of the moons size, reaching the culmination of the matter at full. The waning part of the cycle should be used for reorienting and making better, or wrapping up the affairs of the old cycle to prepare for the next inception at the next new moon.

The last full moon was May 6 and the next new moon is the day the sun passes into Gemini, May 21. Considering the academic calendar, it is easy to see the inspirations, adventures and occupations of the summer life beginning with that coming new moon.

The waning cycle now, for most of us, is concerned with wrapping up the cycle of the semester before the new moon and vacation are suddenly born.

Lucretia Borgia's Kitchen

By R. A. OCHS

"One squeeze tells you we're the fresh guys." (Squeeze me and discover another definition of fresh.)

"It's batter whipped." (By a sado-masochistic baker?)

"Butter-topped for flavor." (Now that's a perversion I've never tried.)

Stop buying these insulting ads and their spongy breads. Try baking your own. Home baked bread is a wonder drug. It warms the kitchen, brightens the table, fills the belly and sublimates aggression.

So your room-mate has you so pissed off that you want to punch them in the mouth? Don't do it. (At least not yet.) Instead, try baking a loaf of bread. You can knead it, punch it, karate chop it and call it every kind of (inaudible) on earth. Sini Foskett gave me this recipe several years ago and I haven't hit anyone since then.

SINI'S BREAD
2 cups lukewarm watter
1 pk. dry yeast
1 tblsp. sugar
1 tblsp. salt
4-6 cups flour

Sprinkle the yeast, sugar, and salt into the water and stir. Now add the flour one-half cup at a time (kneeding it in) until the dough is soft NOT STICKIE. Put the dough in a large bowl covered with a damp towel and let it rise for 1 hour. Then dump in onto a large cutting board (or the floor if you're a better housekeeper than I.) Punch the dough then cut in half. Shape the loaves (circular or oblong), slash them lightly on the tops and rub with ice cold water. Put them on a greased and cornmealed floured cookie sheet. Place the loaves in a cold oven along with a pot of boiling water (the steam keeps the bread moist) and bake at 400 degrees for 15 minutes then at 375 degrees for 25 minutes. The bread is done when you can lightly tap the bottom and hear a hollow sound.

Serve the bread hot or cold but be sure to smile. If you are still angry punch your partner in the mouth while the bread is being eaten.

ENJOY!

DURFEE CONSERVATORY
VISITORS WELCOME

by Gina Starodoj

Nestled between the infirmary and Stockbridge Road Durfee conservatory is passed by, overlooked, and disregarded by many students everyday as they negotiate a short route to Van Meter or the Orchard Hill complex. I know, I ignored the place for nearly two years. Well, to make a long story short I turned over a new leaf and went inside to see what it was all about.

What I saw can be partially seen here, but the friendly atmosphere created by Alex Montgomery, the man who watches over everything growing in Durfee, can only be hinted upon in writing. He believes that a botanical garden will be merely a collection of plants unless there is a certain human friendliness to compliment the visual beauty. Alex is just that-a beautiful person. He gives advice on plants, care, names, or just conversation. He admits he doesn't know every plant in the greenhouse. "I'd be a liar if I said that" says Alex. The most interesting plant he said is the Catalia Orchard with sixteen flowers on it. He brought this plant with him from the McKee Jungle Garden in Florida where his interest in these plants first started.

Durfee--a beautiful place in more ways than one--must be experienced to be appreciated.

The law and you

1971-74; services rendered

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

I wish that I might make some resounding "Adieu" which would speak for four years and some fifteen or sixteen thousand "services rendered" to my clients. But I am not a poet.

As with any lawyer, not all one's clients will agree on the quality of service and surely it varies within some human limits. As with most professions, the vast majority of clients don't seek help when all is well. Particularly in law, the client is usually in trouble of his own making or ignorance before help is sought. Its easy to impute one's predicament to one's lawyer and blame him or her for not curing the problem. My motto is the physician's "Primum non nocere" - "First, Do No Harm", and I aspire to that.

In the future I hope that the Attorney for Students is a program which will inspire confidence in the systems of laws, but not necessarily in any particular system or law. I hope that as citizens we will recognize the opportunities to fashion systems and laws to achieve definable goals or merely to aspire to perceivable ideals. When the system, the law or other people frustrate personal ambitions or wants, I hope that as citizens we will recognize the non-violent remedies that are available. Those who discover and accept political leadership will, perhaps, grasp the subtle difference between regulation and oppression and will sacrifice the former to avoid the latter. It would be very gratifying if some who came in contact with my office carried a part of these ideas away.

As a parting reflection, it is worth remembering Lord Acton's famous remark to Professor Creighton in an 1887 letter:

> "Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Great men are almost always bad men, even when they exercise influence and not authority; still more whn you superadd the tendency or the certainty or corruption by authority."

That observation is a warning to all who would aspire to influence or authority; no one is exempt.

We should really be very skeptical of any law and the motives of those who would enact it. By being skeptical you examine the rule in depth. If it does not measure up to its promise, discard it; do the same with people in authority. If this were the practice of our citizens, President Ford would be explaining himself rather than the present state of despairs.

Minority Health Careers Project formed

The Health Careers Project (H.C.P.) is an effort by several brothers to establish a mechanism whereby Black students here at the University, who have a serious interest in the fields of Health Administration and-or Planning as a future career, can obtain valuable experience in these areas while undergraduates.

We are in the process of finalizing plans for an internship program that will involve several qualified students in employed positions at University Health Services. These positions will introduce the students to the various aspects involved in operating a health care delivery system from the administrative perspective. We are in the process of establishing academic credit and financial stipends for participants in the internship.

Students in the Health Sciences, Physical Sciences, and Biological Sciences interested in this internship program are urged to attend a meeting at New Africa House, tomorrow at 6:30 p.m.

Next time you see someone polluting, point it out.

It's litter in the streets. It's air that smells.
It's a river where fish can't breathe.
You know what pollution is.
But not everyone does.
So the next time you see pollution,
don't close your eyes to it.
Write a letter. Make a call. Point it out to someone who can do something about it.

People start pollution. People can stop it.

You're serious about photography. So is the Canon F-1.

To you, photography is more than a hobby. You may never want to become a professional. Yet, your photography is as important a means of self-expression to you as your speech. You demand the same excellence in your photographic equipment as you do of your photographic skills.

The Canon F-1 is the camera that can fulfill any photographic task to which you put it. It can stand up to your ability in any situation.

Naturally, a great camera like the F-1 won't ensure great results. That's up to you. Yet—it's nice to know that your camera can grow with you as a photographer.

Part of the reason for this is the F-1 system. Since it was designed in totality, it offers total performance. There is nothing "added on" in the F-1 system. Everything works as it was designed to, and integrates superbly with everything else. You'll spend less time worrying about operating the camera than in shooting. And that's what creative photography is really all about.

Controls fall into place under each finger. It's no accident. Professionals who depend on a camera for their livelihood have a deep regard for the F-1's handling. It's amazing how much a comfortable camera can improve your work.

Sharing these lenses and many of these accessories are the new Electronic Canon EF, with fully automatic exposure control, the FTb, now improved with all exposure information visible in the finder, and the TLb, great for a second camera body or for getting started in Canon photography. Canon. For serious applications. For serious photographers.

Isn't it time you got serious?

Hate award for sale

By TONY GRANITE

HATE AWARDS FOR SALE at Washington State, according to a headline in a recent Daily Evergreen.

Seems that the Young Republican's Club held an election for the "Most Hated Person or Thing on Campus." True to Republican tradition, the Club sold votes for a penny apiece. Each voter could stuff the ballot boxes with as many votes as he could pay for, the story said.

Funds raised would be used by the Club to bring speakers to the campus and to pay for coffee hours for them.

A NEW TYPE WATERBED is apparently being touted at Western Connecticut College. A classified ad in a recent Echo offers for sale, "Old fashioned bathtub with claw feet plenty big for two. $20 and I will deliver."

BRUNSWICK, MAINE: Until last month Joan Stillwell, had been employed as a waitress at Brunswick's famed, Stowe House, the home where Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote, "Uncle Tom's Cabin". Manager Robert Mathews replaced his women waitresses, some who had been at the job 15 years or more, with men waiters. Matthews claims the women were getting two old to wait on tables, now Joan has an outdoor job, washing down large cement and gravel trucks, and there the matter rests.

Engineers to go metric

The length of the average pencil is 200 millimeters, a five mile hike is 8 kilometers, a bathtub full of water holds 250 liters and a telephone receiver weighs 250 grams.

These and more esoteric metric concepts will be part of the learning process for students next fall in the Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering Department here.

M&AE students and faculty will be the first engineers on the Amherst campus to officially adopt the metric system in all courses and labs, according to department head J. Edward Sunderland. The department is probably one of the first few engineering departments in the country to make the step, he added.

The metric system, a decimal-based array of measures, was first adopted in France in 1799, then spread through Europe and the rest of the world except the U.S. The change to metric is called metrication; two bills calling for a metrication program in the U.S. over the next ten years are now before Congress.

The system used over most of the world and the one to be adopted next fall by the M&AE department is called metric-SI, the SI coming from the French phrase Systeme International d'Unites. Metric-SI is an inter-related system of measures and symbols that can be applied to weights, measures, temperatures, velocity, stress, temperature, flow and so on.

Mechanical Engineering Professor Geoffrey Boothroyd, who taught and worked in industry in Britain during that nation's change to metric, is coordinating the M&AE department's changeover. A major reason for the change is the department's changeover. A major reason for the change is the department's heavy involvement in manufacturing engineering and the need to keep pace with metrication in industry.

"The fact is that many industries in this country are now in the process of converting to metric and the universities are lagging behind," according to Boothroyd. He sides with those in industry who favor a rapid conversion over a short period.

For the students, the change will mean learning a whole new system but "apart from having to get used to the new terms it's a much simpler system to work with," Boothroyd said. "They'll not only be working with the system everybody else in the world uses but they will be free of the ambiguities and inconveniences of the old system."

The M&AE department's metrication program follows a trail broken by another UMass engineering professor, Klaus E. Kroner, who over a year ago developed an all-campus UMass Metric Committee to promote an orderly change to the metric system, not only in departments on campus but in business and industry in Massachusetts.

Magic prison film

"Magic Prison", a half hour color fim on the dialogue between Emily Dickinson and her literary tutor, W.T. Higginson, will be shown in the Burnett Gallery of the Jones Library, Amherst, at 3:30 p.m., Wednesday afternoon, May 15th, and repeated Thursday evening, May 16th, at 7:30 p.m. A second film on this program, "New England Folk Painter: Erastus Salisbury Field" explores the folk portraiture of an artist born in Leverett, Mass. and a contemporary of Dickinson. Both film showings are open to the public, free of charge.

Special research materials from the Library's Emily Dickinson Room are now on display on the first floor, and a table of reading materials on Dickinson's life and work is in the Adult Room of the Library.

Slave market talk

A lecture on the Slave Markets of Egypt 1772-1773 will complete the lecture program in Near Eastern Studies at 4:00 p.m. on Tuesday in 601 Herter Hall. Terence Walz of the American Research Center in Ciro Egypt and Boston University will be the Speaker.

Didja have a good time at the Spring Concert? Huh?

by Dennis Conlon,
Joe Martins
and Kevin Mack

Well, we smoked this really fine dope, then some dude was giving away free beer, and that got us really 'faced. Then we did the THC we brought from home, and that made things kinda mellow. You wouldn't believe how high we were.

The show was late starting, so we hadda wait outside in the rain. I never knew rain could come in so many different colors!

The THC was wearing off by this time so we did the mescaline we bought off this guy and his old lady.

We got seats up real close and hadda fuckin' listen to Chris Rhodes and Elliot Murphy, or something like that, and, I mean, they really sucked.

By the time Aerosmith got on, we were peaking on the mescaline, and it even sounded better than the time we ate windowpane and saw Alice Cooper at the Music Hall. Like, you wouldn't believe the moves Tyler was getting into. Jagger ain't got nuthin' on this guy.

We were finally coming down as they finished their second encore. That place looked like shit, with all the beer cans and booze bottles everywhere. Some people can be real pigs!

She really ain't a groupie, she said so in a movie, at least that's what she said to me.

FINAL BUDGETING NOTICE

ALL ORGANIZATIONS who have requested funding for next year (FY '75) are requested to attend the Student Senate meeting of Wednesday, May 15, 1975. Due to overbudgeting, a plan to reduce all budgets will be voted on by the Senate.

After a reallocation proposal is approved, the Senate will accept the Budget Act 74-S1). This will establish the final amount to be allocated to the applicants. All SATF organizations should pick up a personalized copy of this proposal in the RSO office before Wednesday night's Senate meeting.

This is the last meeting on the Budget Act.

Probe of boisterous police started

By WILLIAM CASEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON [AP] — Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. deGrazia launched a department investigation Monday into charges that some of his officers ran naked and stole liquor at the Ramada Inn in Portsmouth, R.I.

The motel's owner and manager claimed that about two dozen policemen took part in the disturbance late Friday night. Some of them ran naked through the motel's night club, rifled a liquor cabinet, disturbed guests and caused an estimated $1,000 damage, the manager said.

The commissioner commented, "We do not know for sure whether these were Boston police officers. I would hope they were not.

"It is this type of action that reflects badly on law enforcement officers everywhere; the few who spoil the reputation of the many," diGrazia said.

Motel officials said 100 Boston police and 30 New Yook police were staying at the Rhode Island motel the night before a large Police Day parade on Aquidneck Island.

No Boston police officers were officially representing the department at the parade, diGrazia said. However, at the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, some officers had been allowed to switch days off so they could attend the Police Day activity, he added.

Mrs. Jean Lawler, the motel's manager, said she called local police twice and state police once about the incidents, but no arrests were made. State police said they went to the motel on a complaint of loud noises about 3:30 Saturday morning, but only found some men drinking in their rooms.

UMass gets federal grants

WASHINGTON, D.C., — U. S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., and Sen. Edward W. Brooke today announced that a total of $282,045 has recently been awarded by various federal agencies to UMass at Amherst.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has awarded a grant of $39,000. The grant will provide support for six Higher Education Personnel Fellowships. The fellowships are for graduate level study and are designed as a means of increasing the supply of well-prepared teachers, administrators, and educational specialists in areas of critical need for junior-community colleges and four-year colleges and universities. Project director will be Dr. Silvia Viers.

The National Science Foundation has awarded the following grants:

—$40,000 to support a 12-month study on the "Structure of Protein Binding Sites in Ribosomal RNA." Principal investigator will be Robert A. Zimmerman of the Department of Microbiology.

—$34,900 to support 24-month theoretical studies on the "Compton Profile, Scattering Factors, and Momentum-Space Quantum Chemistry." Principal investigator will be Paul E. Cade of the Department of Chemistry.

—$14,300 to support a 12-month study of "Flows and Random Measures." Principal investigators will be Donald Geman and Joseph Horowitz of the Department of Mathematics and Statistics.

—$50,000 to support 24-mongh project involving "Mineralogical and Chemical Studies on Sediments Obtained by Deep Sea Drilling Project." Principal investigator will be Edward A. Perry Jr., of the Geology and Marine Science Program.

—$35,700 to support a 24-month study of "Population Structure and Variation in Acer Saccharum." Principal investigator will be David L. Mulcahy of the Botany Department.

—$33,000 to support a 24-month study on the "Interaction of Platelets, Bacteria and Macrophages." Martin S. Wilder of the Department of Microbiology will be the principal investigator.

The National Eye Institute has awarded a $40,745 research grant to support a project entitled "The Fovea, Anatomical and Behavioral Studies." Dr. Katherine Fite will serve as project director.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Perceive motives. Friendly gesture could be coverup for ulterior motive. Be ready and willing to initiate changes. Member of opposite sex could be romantic but impractical. You succeed now if mature enough to eschew false flattery.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Build toward goal. Your natural qualities surge to forefront. Persons in positions of authority are interested in you. Be receptive, diplomatic. But also insist on knowing where you are going--and why. Another Taurus and a Libra figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What appeared solid may actually be elusive. Know it and do some double checking. Perceive meanings, motives. Deal with Pisces, Virgo persons. You receive communication which fortifies beliefs and morale.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This is pressure point--the chips are down and money is in escrow. Indications are that you win, gain, elevate position. You have extra burden or responsibility, but you'll love every minute of it. Capricorn figures prominently. Money affecting partner, mate is also featured.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You find out things which ordinarily would escape your attention. You can get rid of burden not rightly your own. You will observe and learn. Aries, Libra persons are drawn to you. This is time to complete project.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New approach to work and health is featured. You improve relations with associates, those who share your interests. Much that had been considered lost is recovered. Dynamic person with fresh ideas wants to share. Be receptive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What had been repressed is released. You have more freedom to create, to imprint your own style. Follow through on hunch. Don't let conscious mind get in way of inner urge. Aquarian could play significant role.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Study Libra message for valid hint. What appears to be a restriction is due to bomerang in your favor. Conservative associate concedes major point. Be a gracious winner. You will be on more solid ground, more secure emotionally-and financially.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Relative could prepare sensational dinner. Enjoy yourself. You've earned the repast! Frank discussion will pay dividends. Truth will set you free. Know it and act like you are aware of it. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Change is profitable. Guard possessions while in transit. Fast-talking individual may be trying to "pump" you for information. Tell what should be told--no more, no less. Message will become increasingly clear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Bright colors are favored. Be conspicuous. Assert yourself--express opinions in direct, positive manner. Lead rather than follow. Family member is ready to make peace. Be receptive. Strive for greater domestic harmony.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Hospitals, institutions, clubs and organizations are featured. Cooperate in project designed to aid special charity. Visit persons confined to home. Avoid brooding. You are on brink of self-discovery--if you heed inner voice.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can write and speak in compelling manner. You have insatiable curiosity. April was a very important month. June will see you beginning a new project. Gemini and Virgo persons play key roles in your life. You are an active person, aware of current events and a good reporter.

Down memory lane with former NY star Dave DeBusschere - a profile

By BOB ESTELLF

With the recent defeat of the New York Knicks by the Boston Celtics in the semi-final round of the NBA playoffs, professional basketball has lost one of its top players.

Yes, Dave DeBusschere has played his final game for the Knicks or for anyone else. He has retired to become the new General Manager of the American Basketball Association, New York Nets.

A native of Detroit, DeBusschere played both high school and college basketball in the Motor City.

After he graduated from the University of Detroit in 1961, he turned professional, signing to play in the NBA with the Detroit Pistons. He also signed a professional baseball contract with the Chicago White Sox. For three seasons, DeBusschere saw double duty as a forward on the Pistons and a pitcher in the White Sox system. While he established himself as an up-and-coming star with the Pistons, he was just another pitcher with the White Sox. He did make the Sox in 1963 and 1964 but he found that it was impossible to keep playing two sports. Finally, both the Pistons and White Sox told him to choose either basketball or baseball. He chose basketball and has never regretted it.

Dave looks back on his short career as a pitcher and says that his two experiences in the baseball limelight were: being kept on the White Sox when they let Denny McLain go (McLain later won 31 games for the 1968 World-Champion Detroit Tigers.) and being the losing pitcher when all-time great Early Wynn won his 300th game in 1963.

DeBusschere's success in basketball far outweighed his notoriety as a baseball pitcher. By 1964, he had established himself as an all-pre forward as he became one of the top defensive players in the game. By this time, he had acquired such knowledge of the game that the Pistons appointed him as their head coach for the 1964-65 season.

His two and one-half seasons as a player-coach were disastrous. The Pistons didn't win and DeBusschere's play wasn't as sharp.

Halfway through the 1966-67 season, the Piston management relieved him of his coaching duties. Dave's quality of play rose immediately after the burden of coaching was lifted. Yet, Detroit hadn't won any titles in the Boston Celtic-dominated NBA and it looked like it would be a long time before they would have a team capable of winning the championship.

Meanwhile in New York, the Knicks had been building. A strong nucleus of center Walt Bellamy; guards Walt Frazier and Dick Barnett; and forwards Willis Reed, Bill Bradley and Cazzie Russell had taken the Knicks out of the doldrums of last place and into contention. But something was missing.

With the Pistons needing a rebounding center and the Knicks needing a defensive forward, it was no surprise that in December of 1968, the Pistons sent DeBusschere to the Knicks in exchange for Bellamy and guard Howard Komives.

DeBusschere's arrival jelled the Knicks. After a slow start, they finished third in the NBA East in 1969. They surprised everyone by beating the Eastern champion Baltimore Bullets in four straight games. The Knicks, decimated by injuries, then lost to the Celtics in the semi-final round.

But 1970 was something else. With DeBusschere's defensive play, Reed's play at center and the work of Frazier and Barnett in the backcourt, the Knicks rallied to the Eastern Division title.

"Defense" had become the rallying cry at New York's Madison Square Garden and Dave DeBusschere had become part of the reason. It got them by the Baltimore Bullets and Milwaukee Bucks. It also got them by a rough seven game series with the Los Angeles Lakers. In the last three games of that series, Willis Reed was out with a hip injury and DeBusschere was able to stop Wilt Chamberlain in the fifth game, sending the series to seven, and the Knicks' first NBA title.

DeBusschere's play helped lead the Knicks to playoff berths again in 1971, 1972 and another title in 1973.

Then came the surprise. DeBusschere announced that he had signed a ten-year contract with the ABA Nets as their general manager effective July 1, 1974. The 1973-74 season would be his last with the Knicks, his last as a player.

When some players announce their retirements ahead of time, they tend to have a lackadaisical year. Not Dave DeBusschere. His twelfth season has been one of his best. he took a team without a center to the semi-finals of the playoffs, losing to an old enemy — the Celtics.

He had personally lead the Knicks to two consecutive years of beating the Celtics in the playoffs but he couldn't do it alone. Even with a painful leg injury, he was still giving 100 per cent, even though the odds were against him.

His career as a player is over. For twelve years, he was one of the NBA's top stars, possibly even its most consistent defensive player. There were various "days" in Dave's honor in a few NBA cities as he made his last trips there. He has taken on a new venture as the Nets' general manager. And he should do well.

The city of New York has viewed many stars in the past. While most of New York's stars in basketball were DeBusschere's teammates, New Yorkers who witnessed the Knicks in their prime will remember Dave DeBusschere as one of the best.

BKP advances to IM semifinals

By RUSS SMITH

TB stands for Tom Burke, the pitcher for BKP. BKP is short for Beta Kappa Phi.

I don't know what they're like without each other, but together they form a softball team that seems destined to become the 1974 intramural softball champs!

In the quarterfinal round, they put it all together, and came up with a convincing 6-1 win over the Dodos, who previously had won games by scores of 6-2, 7-0, 3-0, and 7-1.

This game though, wasn't a matter of the Dodos being unable to score runs, but being unable to get hits (You can't score if you don't hit).

The flame-throwing (I thought this was supposed to be slow-pitch softball) Burke of BKP allowed only two hits, walked one, and struck out three through the five inning game, for his sixth consecutive victory this season.

And now, the game...

1st inning: Beta Kappa Phi was at bat first. Leading off was George, who drew a walk. One out later, Keith hit a windblown single to left field. Dave came up and singled to load the bases. Up stepped pitcher Tom Burke, who preceded to help his own cause with a two-run double, and the early lead. But Scott Bial, the pitcher for the Dodos from JFK, worked out of the inning.

Bottom of the 1st: With the Dodos at bat, Jimmy led off. He was thrown out by the shortstop. Mark struck out. John was out, short to first.

2nd: BKP-Carl bunted, but was out at first. Rico flied to left. Rob was called out on strikes (two pitches).

The Dodos closed to within one. Steve led off with a single. One out later, Mike drew a walk. Another Mike then singled for the Dodos only run. Kevin's bunt attempt popped to the pitcher. Chuck struck out (No. 2 for TB).

3rd: BKP - picked up two more singles, but they were sandwiched around outs, and didn't hurt the Dodos any.

The Dodos were hurt though, when they came up and went down in order.

4th: This inning sealed the Dodos fate, as BKP put the game out-of-reach. Tom harmlessly drove one to centerfield for an out. The nnxt ball was hit hard to the shortstop, who couldn't handle it, and the frat team was on its way again. Chuck singled. Rico doubles for one run. Rob then doubles for two more runs. After Steve grounded out, George reached on an error by the shortstop, and another run was in. Neal ended the ordeal by grounding to the second baseman, but four runs had crossed the plate, and it was 6-1 (the final score).

In this, the last inning, BKP again threatened to add on to its lead with two more hits, but Scott got out of the inning without any trouble.

The Dodos last shot — their last chance went by the boards ... Bill (put in the game late, probably for defensive purposes) knocked the ball to ... guess who ... TB, for another easy out. Mike fouled out to the catcher. And Kevin became TB's final victim by striking out to end the game.

Final:

BKP	2-0-0-4-0---6-11-0
Dodos	0-1-0-0-0---1 -2-2

JV's defeat SC twice

By BILL DOYLE

Revenge was sweet Saturday as the UMass JV baseball team swept a doubleheader from Springfield College 1-0 and 6-1 to avenge a twinbill loss to Springfield last week. Two route going masterpieces by UMass pitchers Dave Tewhill and Chris Kirby keyed the double victory.

In the first game, Tewhill, a lefty freshman, pitched what Coach McKay called, "an extremely smart game" by changing speeds often and keeping Springfield off balance. Tewhill allowed only four hits, all singles, and two walks. He struck out four.

UMass, who only had three hits in the first game, scored their only run in the second inning when Jim Cullen's double off the left field wall scored Tom Shilale from first base. Both of UMass' other hits were by Paul Abramowicz.

Chris Kirby in his first start this season struck out fourteen Springfield batters while allowing seven hits. Kirby pitched completely opposite of Tewhill as he went with speed instead of finesse. Kirby struck out five in a row in one stretch. Springfield scored their only run all afternoon when a two-out fly ball was lost in the sun.

The hitting hero in the second game was Jim Cullen again as he hit a three run homer over the left field wall. Bill Tremblay added a double and a single.

The team was really up for Springfield and revenge came through with sparkling success. The scores, 1-0 and 6-1, were the same scores UMass lost by last week to Springfield.

The Minutemen are now 10-3 on the season with two games remaining. They host Harvard tomorrow at 3:00.

Bruins not working Guidolin wants change

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

PHILADELPHIA [AP] — Boston Bruins' Coach Bep Guidolin is angry at his team. He told the players. He told reporters. He told anybody who would listen.

"We got talent on this team," snapped Guidolin, "but when talent doesn't work you're in deep trouble."

The deep trouble is that the experienced, star-studded Bruins trail 2-1 in their best-of-seven National Hockey League Stanley Cup final series to the hustling, hungry Philadelphia Flyers going into Game No. 4 here tonight.

Guidolin, of course, hasn't given up.

"If we win tonight we'll win the Stanley Cup," he said.

"Bobby Clarke is great and so is Bernie Parent," said Guidolin of the Flyers' center and goalie. "But if two hockey players can beat us, we don't deserve to win."

When asked if the Bruins were motivated, Buidolin retorted: "Twenty thousand dollars is enough motivation. It's enough for me."

The NHL honored the two teams at a luncheon Monday and Guidolin remarked during a short talk: "I see the Flyers are here. It's nice to see my team is at the track."

Guidolin noticed Marcel Pellitier, Flyers' personnel director, taking a picture of the Stanley Cup.

"You haven't won it yet," Guidolin told Pelletier.

"Well, this is in case we don't" Pellitier responded.

Guidolin told his team after Sunday's nationally-televised 4-1 defeat that they were badly outhustled. He told them second effort and sometimes third was necessary to beat the Flyers.

"Only about six of my guys were working," said the chagrined Boston coach.

The Boston players didn't argue their coach's point.

"The Flyers are hungrier than we are," commented a downcast Bobby Orr.

"It's not us. It's them," said veteran Dallas Smith. "They're all over us."

Guidolin got upset when it was suggested that maybe a good fight on the ice would start the Bruins' adrenalin.

"I thought the war in Vietnam was over," he snorted. "I'm a Canadian. We have only one gun in the whole country. We don't fight. This is a hockey game, not a war. We've got enough talent to win."

Guidolin said he's stirring up his team.

"But once they're on the ice what do you want me to do, go out there with my shoes on?"

UMass ninth in nation

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. [UPI] — Despite a weekend loss to no. 2 Johns Hopkins, the University of Maryland retained by a narrow margin its season-long hold on first place in the major college rankings released Monday by the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association.

The Terps went into Saturday's game undefeated and a unanimous selection for the top spot, but Hopkins upended them 17-13.

Washington & Lee, 14-0, gained three first place votes in the standings to take the no. 3 position.

UMass finished ninth.

THE WORD...
CELTS ARE BACK

UPI Wirephoto

JOHN HAVLICEK, MVP in the playoffs, is presented a Celtics victory hat by his 1-year-old daughter, Jill, much to the delight of his son Chris (4) and wife Beth.

Boston honors Celtics today

BOSTON [AP] — "The Celtics Are Back," proclaims a poster in team president Red Auerbach's office, and for Boston, the new National Basketball Association champs are back as heroes, with the city planning a full-dress welcome today.

Barry Brooks, press aide to Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, said Monday the Celtics would be "one of the best sights in the city" when the Hub honors the squad at noon in City Hall Plaza.

For the Celtics, the element of surprise may have been the key to their 102-87 triumph over the Milwaukee Bucks Sunday night for their 12th NBA title in 18 years.

"We caught them by surprise," said coach Tommy Heinsohn. "It was beautiful, they didn't know what was happening."

Heinsohn's shock therapy for the Bucks meant double-teaming 7-foot-4 center Kareem Abdul Jabbar to keep him from getting the ball — and to keep him distracted when he had it.

"All we wanted to do was to keep him from getting too many shots in this game," Heinsohn said. It worked. Jabbar was kept to 21 shots and managed to score only 26 points.

Jabbar looked at the situation a little differently. He said it was not exactly surprise which did in Milwaukee in the seventh game of the series.

"Victory or defeat is in the hands of the Creator," he said. "I just play."

"I have learned to accept whatever happens," he said. "I do my best and all that I can to see that what I would like to have happen comes about. But when it doesn't, I just have to accept it."

Besides surprise, smooth teamwork also sent the Celts on their way to winning the Walter A. Brown Trophy.

Boston forward Paul Silas said the Celtics came out on top because "we operate on a team concept."

"No one player dominates our team. When one player is having an off day, someone else just steps in to help out. Just like Sunday when John Havlicek was having trouble scoring. Westy (Paul Westphal) and myself came up with some hoops."

So Tuesday, after the team has net the city again, and after the private luncheon with the mayor is over, then the celebrating will die down. Right.

Wrong.

Havlicek's wife, Beth, figures, "we're just going to stay here for a week and party."

Washington freakball year ends

By MDC Staff

The fourteenth floor of George Washington Tower completed its freakball season last week, with the traditional All-Star balloting bringing to a close the 39 game schedule.

Pete Pettengill dominated the voting by the players, winning honors as best offensive forward, and the most cherished of all awards, MVP. Senior Rick Clifford was the league's best goaltender and Scott Hayes was voted best defensive forward for his first year efforts.

Three teams took part in the semester-long season, and the Company captured first place with a record of 18-13. Los Armadillos finished 3½ games back with an 18-20 record, while the Derelicts wound up in the cellar with a 3-6 mark.

Did these guys really play 39 games? You can bet on it, and they have the statistics to back them up. Larry Munn, a deceptive competitor, finished atop the league in scoring by hustling his way to 126 goals. Mike Hegh, Munn's rock-ribbed teammate, was the only other player to surpass the prestigious 100-goal mark. Hegh outmuscled his opponents and put the ball in the nets 109 times. Towering Pete Pettengill played in just 14 games, but had the opposition baffled as he boomed short that no goalie could stop. Pettengill finished with 85 goals and the league's best goal-scoring average of 6.07 per game.

Scott Hayes, the smallest player to score more than 50 goals, frustrated foes all season long with his patented sprawl-in-front-of-the-ball defense. Hayes was on crutches because of a bone bruise in his foot and missed a few games, but the fiery forward still managed to score 70 goals. Mike Edison earned 50 goals with his bullish play and John Heald just missed the 50 goal plateau, finishing with 47 tallies.

Other goal scorers included Fran "controversial" Brady, who tallied 22 times, G. Steinberg, who managed to pull himself away from WMUA long enough to score 10 goals. Earl Brown, who wore number 25 at the Alumni Stadium field, appeared in three games and scored 12 goals.

Rick Clifford played his last season at UMass and although he just barely beat John Heald for lowest goals-against average, he was stalwart in the nets all season long. Clifford finished with a 7.44 GA avg., an 18-14 record, two shutouts and 27 goals from his crease. Heald took second with a 7.45 average, a 6-5 record and 13 goals. Barry Everson was spectacular at times for Los Armadillos, and wound up with a 7.61 average. Emerson's win-loss record was 11-7 and he scored three goals.

It was a season to remember. Seniors Rick Clifford and Ge. Steinberg will be missed next season, but with the cooperation of newcomers, freakball will flourish on the fourteenth.

The UMass baseball varsity is doing imitations. Of Helen Keller.

The Minutemen are a startling 0-8 in YanCon play, and a dismal 6-14 on the year, a far cry from the shining marks of previous seasons.

To gain some insight into the sudden downturn, this intrepid asked several well-known literary figures to analyze the baseball situation. There was some trouble in contacting these correspondents, especially the dead one, but after such details were dispensed with, it was just a short while before the stories came pouring in.

– – – – –

Edgar Allen Poe had some revealing quotes from both the manager and the players:

AMHERST – I recently talked with coach Dick Bergquist concerning his team's plight. The ghastly pallor of the mentor chilled my spine as he explained that at least some of the fault is his team's, but also that the umpiring has not been too good. He was especially irked by one ump whom he said had an Evil Eye.

"I think it was his eye! Yes, it was this," the coach morbidly explained, "He had the eye of a vulture – a pale blue eye with a film over it..."

He also said the same umpire had wrongly kept accusing one UMass pitcher of throwing a spitter, until the abashed hurler could take the badgering no longer.

"Villians", the pitcher shrieked, "dissemble no more! I admit the deed!"

A veteran cathcer I asked to describe the fall of the team from glory: "My brain reeled as I saw the mighty walls rushing asunder – there was a long tumultuous shouting sound like the voice of a thousand waters – and the deep and dark tarn at my feet closed sullenly and silently over the fragments of the 'House of Bergquist'".

I asked an outfielder the same question. He was less articulate: "Da guys an' me ain't doin' nuttin' right."

Finally, this wretched scribe questioned an infielder as to whether he's like to go through another spring like this one.

Quoth the baseman, "Nevermore".

– – – – –

Jack Anderson wired in his investigative article from the nation's capital:

WASHINGTON – The latest Boyden Gym leaks indicate that the UMass baseball team's troubles are not only on the diamond. Equipment men and team managers have been hinting for weeks that a scandal is about to break, involving at least seven members of the squad. Coach Dick Bergquist has flatly denied that any of his players are involved in shady dealings.

Lorden Field rumors have been spreading that the seven, all lefties, have been pilfering practice balls. In addition, four may have been involved in a fix of eight different games. One player is being investigated for an alleged part in a gangland slaying.

– – – – –

Euell Gibbons, noted nature author, seems to know what's wrong with the backstop boys:

STICKS, N.D. – The Minutemen are undernourished. They're not playing well because they're not eating well. Why, just the other day I saw pitcher John Olson eating a steak. Blehh! No wonder he's having arm problems.

People say it's too bad the team is biting the dust. That's not bad, in fact, they should do more of it. Dirt is very nourishing. And tasty as well.

Did you know that many parts of second base are edible? The taste of its plastic cover reminds me of the flavor of fresh brook boot and ocean tire I often catch while fishing.

Yes, yes, every Minuteman who gets a double should have a little snack right then and there.

– – – – –

Finally, I asked Alfred E. Neuman, whose philosophy appears regularly in that distinguished literary magazine, Mad, to give his views:

BLUE WALL – What-Me worry?

By STEVE SARACENO

They won't recognize 'em.

Harvard invades Lorden Field today, and faces a team that is drastically different from the one they eliminated from the playoffs a year ago at Fenway.

Drastically is too light a word.

The 1974 Minutemen won in their eight YanCon games about as many as they would in eight contests against the 1927 Yankees. Zip. They're a far cry from the tough post-season ballclub the Crimson battled last year.

The Harvards haven't changed much, though. They're in contention for the Eastern League crown, and last Sunday bombed Navy, 9-0.

There was a positive side to the UMass double-drubbing Sunday at the hands (and bats) of Connecticut. (There was also a positive side to the bombing of Hiroshima) Freshman hurler Jeff Reardon impressed in the nightcap (for six innings, before the detonation), and Gus Bedard (just up from the JV's) slinged for five fine refuse-time innings after the game was decided.

All seventeen fans are expected to turn out for the 3:00 match-up.

Sox beaten by Cleveland

CLEVELAND [UPI] – John Ellis belted a three-run homer in the first inning and Jim Perry, with relief help from Tom Buskey, posted his 32nd career victory over the Boston Red Sox Monday night in pitching the Cleveland Indians to a 4-1 victory.

Ellis, who has now hit safely in 14 of the Indians' last 15 games, drilled a 3-2 pitch into the leftfield stands following a single by John Lowenstein and an error by second baseman Dick McAuliffe on Buddy Bell's grounder.

Perry, making his seventh start of the season, held the Bosox to four hits over the first seven innings before being replaced by Buskey in the eighth after the first two Boston batters got on base.

Rick Miller was safe on an error and Cecil Cooper walked. Buskey came in, got Carlton Fisk and Carl Yastrzemski to fly out and struck out Bernie Carbo.

The Red Sox scored their only run in the second on Carbo's double and McAuliffe's run-scoring single.

Gymnastics issue has a time limit

By BEN CASWELL

"The urgency in the need for speed in reviewing the decision," is what Senior gymnast and gymnastics committee member Steve Scuderi related twice to dean of the School of Physical Education Bischoff. Speed, because if the decision review is delayed then it really will not matter to the gymnastics team because the freshmen that were supposed to come here next year will not and the present freshmen, or all gymnasts for that matter including Gene Whelan, will look elsewhere to take their gymnastics talents.

That same idea of quickness was also related by Scuderi and Gym committee member Jay Aronstein to Chancellor Bromery and University president Wood in a somewhat unexpected, henceforth certainly impromptu meeting last Thursday in the lobby of SBA. Wood and Bromery were leaving a Faculty-Senate meeting when they were approached by Scuderi, Aronstein, and Captain of the Women's gymnastics team Anne Vexler. Both of the upper echelon university officials were quite uninformed about the gymnastics situation. Bromery asked for a quick briefing on what the three gymnasts were dealing with and then he and the president accepted copies of the 12,000 petition signatures that the gymnastics committee had gathered.

Chancellor Bromery said that he would soon be briefed on the issue by his assistant for athletic affairs who is none other than Dean Bischoff who had received the petition signatures earlier in the afternoon in a formal ceremony in Whitmore. It does seem strange that an issue that has warranted petitioning and has caused much controversy has not reached the Chancellor as of yet in the form of a report of some kind. President Wood expressed the fact that he had been notified by some of his neighbors, obvious gymnastics supporters, about the issue but at this time he was fairly unclear as to exactly what was happening. He later said that, "Now that I have been exposed to the issue Chancellor Bromery and I will not forget the topic."

What this little encounter could mean in the long run remains to be seen. President Wood does not really have much to do with a decision of this kind on the UMass campus but his being aware of the situation certainly does not hurt. Chancellor Bromery, on the other hand, could definitely have an effect on the decision if he so desired. His not being familiar with the issue as of yet is just another example of the communication gaps in the Athletic department. It only adds to the indecision of whose decision the final say actually belongs to. McInerney, Bischoff, Bromery or the Athletic Council? The first two do not really seem to know and if they do then they are not telling. An Athletic Council meeting at 4:00 today in Boyden could and hopefully will shed some light on that question.

These follies could be only the beginning of many more to come. The crew team seems to be having very similiar troubles. The women's gymnastics team has obvious reasons for concern themselves. Anne Vexler, graduating captain of the team says that, "Of course the women are concerned. We have heard from freshmen that say they are not sure about coming here because of what is happening, on our own team. Also we feel a part of the decision in that we (the men and women) have always worked out together and the success of each of our teams relates to the success of both."

The next two weeks will be the extent of any influences that students will have on any decisions that will either stand or change. It is only one week for the COLLEGIAN as the last day of classes is the last day of print. The issue at hand is more than just gymnastics. It is an issue revolving around how much say we as students of this university really have. The Athletic department has functioned long enough without being questioned. Now is the time to change that for the present and for the future.

Smaller SAT increase proposed

By KATHY SHEEHAN
MDC Staff

A group of student senators will present a proposal to the Student Senate tonight for the allocation of Student Activities Funds for the Fiscal Year 1975.

The purpose of this proposal is to prevent an increase of $9.82 per student in the Student Activities tax for next year caused by the Senate's over-allocation of $170,320, in Student Activities Funds.

The proposal calls for a $5.75 per student increase in the Student Activities tax. This includes a $2.50 per student increase in funds to be allocated to RSO groups and a $3.25 per student increase for Area Government.

According to Paul Hamel, Student Senate Treasurer, however, students living off-campus and commuters will be reimbursed for the Area Government tax.

In planning the proposal, the Budget Committee reduced the initial budget request by $600,000, and a group of Senators, including Treasurer Paul Hamel, plan to reduce it to a sum total of $790,658,75.

The proposal lists 3 adjustment processes in which reductions in allocations to organizations for Fiscal Year 1975 will be made. Organizations were listed in groups of priority levels by this group to facillitate the adjustment processes.

First, no organization funded with SATF monies this year will receive an increase in their allocation ecxept those organizations employing personnel entitled to cost of living raises or increases in wages due to promotions. In addition, no organizations in Priority Level No. 1 will be cut in this adjustment process.

Second, organizations in their first year of funding, in low priority levels will be deleted in those cases where they are either: 1. Not providing an alternative service not already funded through SATF monies; 2. Where there is the potential of other sources of funding; 3. An organization in which there is an increase greater than that required for normal program maintenance, and which is in a high priority level (Level No. 1).

Third, when all these adjustments have been made, all organizations will have their SATF allocation reduced according to a percentage determined by the organization's priority level.

For instance, the RSO Student Activities Budget in Priority Level No. 1 would be adjusted in accordance with the proposed processes. This group is requesting a $38,506 increase in funding from last year ($213,883 to $252,389). Their budget would not be cut in the first adjustment because the group is in Priority Level No. 1. Under adjustment No. 2, however, $3,000 would be cut; and a 3 per cent reduction in their budget would be made according to adjustment No. 3. Consequently their allocation would total $241,907, $10,482 short of their initial request.

If the proposal receives approval at the Senate meeting tonight, students will begin paying $55.25 a year in Student Activities Taxes beginning next fall.

'DC food quality better' say students in survey

By JUDY FRIEDLAND

Dining Commons food is pleasing more students, according to a survey taken by Food Services in April. Marie Cappadonna, Assistant Director of Dining Commons, interprets the survey results as student approval of a new program to gradually use more "conventionally-prepared" foods and less "convenience" food.

According to Ms. Cappadonna, there was an increase in all but two categories in April's survey as compared to a similar canvas made in November by ARA, a catering service. ARA reported its findings in a consultant's report of the Administration, who is expected to decide in the near future week whether or not to dismiss the present independent Food Services and to instead contract a catering service.

The two areas in which student opinion declined was DC hours and employee courtesy. Ms. Cappadonna said that the figures for the latter decreased 1 per cent, and labelled it "insignificant".

According to the survey conducted in April, there was a 37 per cent increase in the number of students who liked the quality of the food - the figure rose from 8 per cent in the fall to 45 per cent in the spring. 28 per cent of those surveyed also approved of the food's flavor, as compared to 11 per cent in November; 48 per cent felt that there was variety in the menus, whereas 37 per cent held this opinion; and an increase of 13 per cent from 17 per cent were satisfied with the way in which the food was prepared.

Ms. Cappadonna is proud of these figures, many of which exceed nation-wide student evaluations of ARA's service, considers them to be a vote of confidence."

"Maybe students feel that the Dining Commons are more worth going to," said Ms. Cappadonna. "They perceive what is happening there."

What is happening is a re-evaluation of priorities resulting in an increase in "conventionally-prepared" food wherever possible on the menus.

"Conventionally-prepared" food is prepared by DC cooks as compared to "convenience" food, which is bought prepared from commercial enterprises.

According to Ms. Cappadonna, the DC serves a convenience food at each lunch and dinner. These are basically heat and serve items, such as meatballs and stuffed peppers. She explained that this practice began several years ago, in efforts to keep labor expansion at a minimum.

"We discovered, however, that we can make many of the dishes better ourselves," said Ms. Cappadonna. "We must consider all factors, such as available labor and cost of food, though, before we decide to switch."

According to Ms. Cappadonna, preparing more foods at DC will defray the increase in cost.

"Food Service fees will increase," said Ms. Cappadonna, "although not as much as they could rise if we purchased all convenience foods."

The staff is adapting well to the new system, according to Ms. Cappadonna. The cooks are receiving "refresher courses" on how to prepare food in quantity and how to use machines such as a Vertical Cutter Mixer, which can cut up 10 heads of lettuce at once.

"The cooks are delighted at having a chance to actually cook," said Ms. Cappadonna.

Menu variety can be increased and new dishes experimented with now that the DC is preparing more food itself, according to Ms. Cappadonna, who explained that using base foods gives one "a lot more flexibility" in preparing meals.

The program, which began on a limited basis this semester, will continue in the fall. The DC has started to prepare itself other items; beef stew, sweet and sour sauces and tossed salad, and has added such new dishes as Greek lamb and squash.

Ms. Cappadonna feels that "monotony breakers" help the students, and plans to include more specials, such as "do-it-yourself" ice cream cones and Hawaiian night next semester.

Passing bad checks may mean administrative withdrawal for students.

Bank may be coming to campus

By DAVID BOYSON
MDC Staff

Faced with an increasing bad check situation, the university will probably have a bank on campus in the near future to take the check cashing service out of the hands of the administration. Until then, the university will probably resort to legal action if students do not respond to collection attempts.

According to Craig Stewart, Campus Center Business Manager who is investigating the bank proposal, having a bank on campus to handle the financial needs of the university would accrue a savings of $35,000.

The proposal has been suggested to relieve the university of the hassles of cashing checks and trying to collect on the ones that bounce. Many other universities already use this procedure.

Stewart reports that the banks "will have to come on our terms. It must be able to fill the needs of the community." One of the criteria is to provide night and weekend check cashing services.

The bank will most likely be located in the Student Union. John Denyse, Director of Financial Affairs, feels the bank "will be the best thing that could happen to the situation.", and thinks it might be established next semester.

The bank will solve the problems the university is now experiencing with check cashing.

Currently the university provides check cashing services for students at two locations. The Bursar's Office at Whitmore will cash checks up to a $100 limit. The Campus Center, through its tellers in the Student Union, will cash checks up to a $25 limit.

UMass provides the service entirely as a convience service. DeNyse said "it's an inconvience to have to go downtown to cash a check. The university is a small city, and must provide some services for the student." DeNyse reports that no profit is made on the service, but that the opposite is true.

Both the Campus Center and the Bursar's Office have been faced with a high amount of cashed checks that the banks return for lack of funds. The Bursar's Office cashes approximately $720,000 checks a year. This figure only includes personal checks for cash, not the checks used to pay tuition bills.

Of the $720,000, about $5,000 will be returned from the banks.

The Campus Center accepts 2 million dollars worth of checks for cash in a year. The figures for how much will be returned were unavailable in time for this story.

Collecting those outstanding bad checks is the major problem both offices are now facing. Both send out notices to the students informing them of the situation and demanding payment. The Bursar's Office has an 80 per cent collection rate. This leaves $1,000 a year in outstanding debts.

Voluntary Income Tax Assistance report to be submitted within two weeks

By FRANK FAULKNER
MDC Special

Increased productivity and professionalization are expected to be the main themes of the UMass VITA report to the Internal Revenue Service. The 1974 report of the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) division of the Outreach program should be submitted to the Federal government within two weeks.

Ninety students participated during the past tax season to assist 2,441 people in completing and filing some 3,544 state and Federal tax forms. The students earned academic credit through Outreach while serving at 24 tax outlets at UMass and in surrounding communities.

"This year we managed to aid more people while utilizing fewer student volunteers", said Rich Sockol, director of the annual program.

He said, "Outreach was fortunate in having many SBA students in the program this year and we were able to tighten the schedule and yet serve many more people at a greater number of locations."

The VITA program is aimed at aiding students, low-income people and the elderly in completing the various government tax forms. The VITA service is free.

"Tax assistance is a $600 million business in the United States", said Sockol, "and a large share of that market goes to H & R Block. In the local area this year we saved the people almost $30,000 by providing free assistance."

The Outreach program has been called "one of the best in the nation" by William E. Williams, New England Director for the IRS. Last year the UMass final report was circulated to universities around the country as a model program.

Students may receive up to three academic credits for participating in the VITA program and the satisfaction of helping others.

"It's much more than a gut course", asserts Sockol. "The volunteer experience requires real commitment. It's not like an ordinary course — you can't 'cut' the people you are serving because you are on a very personal basis. The VITA student learns to deal with individuals very closely because the volunteer is privy to many very personal aspects of people's lives; such as paychecks, medical expenses and personal debts."

UMass students earn one credit from Prof. John Fitzgerald of the SBA's Accounting Department for participating in the VITA training session which usually begins in late October and runs for approximately seven weeks. The VITA volunteers are trained by Federal IRS agents and officials of the Massachusetts Department of Taxation during the fall semester.

From mid-January until the tax filing deadline in April, the VITA volunteers work either two or four hours per week at the Outreach office in Goodell or at one of the other outlets in communities surrounding the University. In addition to credit for the training session, students earn one credit for participating two hours per week and two credits for serving four hours each week.

Dick Tuck speaks tonight on "Watergate Wasn't All My Fault: Or 23 Years With Richard Nixon."

Dick Tuck lectures tonight in Ballroom

Political prankster, writer and philosopher Dick Tuck will speak on "Watergate Wasn't All My Fault: Or 23 Years With Richard Nixon," tonight at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom. The lecture is a presentation of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

"Keep Tuck away from me," Nixon ordered his staff. But since Tuck began his pranks in 1950, they have been seldom able to oblige.

Tuck's pranks include:

—At the 1968 New Hampshire presidential primary a band leader asked Tuck what Nixon's favorite song was. Tuck told him what he tought it might be. When Nixon and his caravan arrived the band struck up "Mack the Knife."

—The Chinatown Caper: At a televised Nixon rally in Los Angeles' Chinatown Tuck made up signs in Chinese reading "HOW ABOUT THE HUGHES LOAN?" — a reference to the $205,000 unsecured loan Howard Hughes had made to Nixon's brother Donald. Chinese children held the signs up behind Nixon as he stood smiling in front of TV cameras.

Time Magazine has said, "It may be that Dick Tuck has angered Richard Nixon as much as any other man alive...as surely as a snowball seeks a top hat, Prankster Tuck stalked his quarry from one campaign to the next. Ultimately, Nixon paid his adversary the highest tribute: in the 1972 campaign the White House decided to employ a Dick Tuck of its own. As H.R. Haldeman testified, "Donald Segretti was hired to adopt Tuck's techniques and use them against the Democrats.

Construction worker killed at Tillson

A construction worker for the Mackin Construction Co. was killed early yesterday afternoon when a trench collapsed at Tillson Farm, according to UMass spokesmen.

Lenny Currier, of Turners Falls, a backhoe operator, was killed around 1:30 p.m. when the 7-8 foot deep trench he was working in collapsed.

The trench was related to construction of a new town fire station on UMass land off East Pleasant St.

A spokesman said no one saw the accident itself, and that Currier was found in the ditch around 1:30.

No further details were available.

Shor found guilty on 16 of 23 counts

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
MDC Staff

A panel of three SGA judges last night found former Collegian Business editor, Michael Shor, guilty of sixteen of twenty-three violations of SGA conduct codes.

In the sanctions imposed by the panel, Shor is required to reimburse the Collegian the $405.90 received from falsified ad commissions. Shor is prohibited from holding any executive office of position of trust in any RSO group. And in a move with only three historical precedants, Shor is immediately suspended until September l, and will receive no credit for this semester's courses pending the final suspension decision subject to a Board of Discipline headed by the Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage.

Following the judges' decision Shor stated, "In retrospect, let me try and repeat that in no way did I attempt to defraud the Collegian and I am extremely sorry for any inconvenience which I may have put the Collegian through as a result of my action and policy as business manager."

Shor was convicted of five counts of misuse of purchase orders in which he used multiple purchase orders to buy campus center parking spaces for Collegian editors. In addition, he purchased personal items which were credited to the Collegian business account. Defense witnesses acknowledged Shor's "intent" to pay but none could testify that the money was actually reimbursed.

On five counts of illegal hiring practices, Shor was convicted of hiring and paying at least one ad representative a flat salary of twenty dollars per week in violation of RSO regulations which prohibit a salaried ad rep position and specify a top limit of 15 per cent ad commission on all sales.

Shor was found guilty on five counts of falsified ad commissions in which he received $160 in commissions which other business employees had sold.

In addition, Shor was convicted of one count of violations of SGA general laws stemming from his overall conduct as Collegian Business manager.

It was incorrectly reported in yesterday's Collegian that Shor pleaded guilty to misappropriation of funds. However, he pleaded guilty with extenuating circumstances to one charge of misuse of multiple purchase orders.

In its closing summary of the trial the defense accused prosecution witnesses of carrying personal vendettas against Shor. "There are people who have sat in that witness chair who have absolutely no right to be there, who have done everything that Michael has and more." But following the verdict, and the sanctions, the defense counsel commented, "considering all our evidence we firmly believed what we said and especially seeing how the sanction came out, it was the way we wanted it to be. I'm really glad it turned out the way it did."

Students diet ; raise $

By KRIS FLETCHER
MDC Staff

Dieting has paid off for winners Bob Rossman and Leslie Shubin. These contestants of the annual Diet Marathon made the most money for pounds lost during the three-week period.

The Marathon was created to improve accessability for mobility-disadvantaged persons on the UMass campus. The money collected for the dieters from the dieters will be placed in a trust fund intended for the elimination of architectural barriers to the handicapped.

Specifically, this means that curbs will be cut at intersections and crosswalks allowing an uninterupted passage for wheelchairs and bicycles. It also includes ramps into buildings, braille letters on doors and elevators and much more.

Winner Rossman lost 28 pounds and collected the most money (figure not released) for the cause. According to Rossman, the trust fund is a very important cause.

During his three years here, he has had a few broken bones and says he knows just how difficult mobility is on the UMass campus. He says he is glad that he can improve the plight of anyone who has to encounter these difficulties permanently.

Rossman, who over the past three years has lost more than 80 pounds, is proud of his "new look" and says, "the 100 bucks doesn't hurt."

If the second prize winner had matched Rossman's 80 pounds, she would weigh 35 pounds. Shubin said she was pleased with the two-fold purposes of her diet. Initially she had hoped to lose a few pounds and make a little money for the cause.

However, as the sponsors added up, she felt a commitment to lose as many pounds as possible to add money to the trust fund. And with the prize incentive, her motivation increased she says.

While it was somewhat difficult for the 80-pounder to talk between bites of her chocolate ice cream cone, it seemed evident she was happy with her win. And of course, her freedom to eat again.

FRELIMO: revolutionary liberation

This is part two in a four-part series detailing the liberation struggles of emerging African nations. The articles emanate from student papers written for a course, PAN AFRICANISM: Liberation Struggles in Africa, offered by Prof. Dovi Afesi in the W.E.B. DuBois Dept. of Afro-American Studies.

By CYNTHIA M. JACQUES
Black News Service

The FRELIMO Liberation Force in Mozambique is without doubt one of the most progressive of all African liberation groups. In the readings we have dealt with thus far, involving freedom fighters in Azania, Namibia, Zimbabwe, Angola, factionism has emerged as a divisive factor which allowed the colonial administrations to gain strength both internally and internationally. The exception to this problem in, terms of a liberation group's success in liberating African lands, is Guinea, under the leadership of Cabral. FRELIMO had also been plagued by factionism but, has finally established itself as a united revolutionary liberation force.

Mondlane, in his book "The Struggle for Mozambique", clearly explains why the FRELIMO forces have been so effective in organizing the peoples of Mozambique and liberating the northern areas of Niassa and Cabo Delgado. So successful were these campaigns that in 1968 a new offensive was launched in Tete. The success of FRELIMO can be described by the actions of the army. In order to generate support and membership for the army, political education is carried out in every possible form, thus giving the people a deep understanding of the nature of the struggle and motivation to carry on the struggle in their daily lives. It is this aspect of the struggle that FRELIMO recognizes to be of prime importance if stagnation is to be avoided and the efforts of the PIDE, (The Portuguese equivalent to the CIA) and the Portuguese army are to be counteracted.

Other policies of FRELIMO common to most other liberation organizations throughout Africa also serve to advance its efforts. The education of the rank and file and the peasantry in reading and writing and the history of their country contrast sharply with the failure of the Portuguese government and the Churches in their poor attempt to "educate" and "civilize" the people. The army Is also self-sufficient in that it grows the food it needs whereever it goes. By doing this the army does not put a burden on the people of the area they are fighting in and it provides a good example for these people in helping them to realize the strength and capability of the FRELIMO forces.

The most important result of the day-to-day personal contact of the army with the people has been the development of the peoples' militia. The militia is in effect the link between the civilian population and the army. And since the army is just as political as it is military, the civilian population is politically educated. "In this respect the army leads the people, but more important yet the army is the people". The militia has been the key reason for the success of FRELIMO in that it allows the fighters to move on to another area without being tied down to an area once it has been liberated. FRELIMO has been successful in providing the essential daily needs of the people in the liberated zones in the areas of health, education, cultural development and to some extent representation in the developing govermental structure.

Factionism, as was noted, is an ever present problem in all liberation organizations. I would like to address myself to a few of the dynamics behind the factionism in FRELIMO.

The most obvious factionism results from ethnic plurality and regionalism, and lack of clear and detailed sets of goals and of agreed and relevant strategies. Because of this there has developed two factions in FRELIMO. The first of these is that group that retains conventional nationistic perspectives. These people are elitist in their attitudes and as in the early beginnings of FRELIMO persisted in the notion of an exiled struggle. The second group consists of those who had successfully committed class suicide, by completely identifying themselves with the needs and apirations of the African masses. The revolutionary liberationists are those progressive people who finally brought the struggle to the people and successfully organized and intergrated people of different ethnic and regional backgrounds.

The revolutionary leaders, in contrast to elitist nationalists, were able to consolidate organizationally and ideologically and thus provide direction and force in a positive direction to the energy that had been newly released among the people. By recognizing the limitations of a solely nationalistic line these leaders exposed those who held petty bourgeoisie ideologies and used tribalism and regionalism in order to further their own interest.

Progressive leaders (i.e., Samora Machel), are responsible for carrying out many of Cabrel's beliefs. They are committed to fighting regionalism, tribalism, elitism, opportunism and stradification within the movement itself.

Student faculty bargaining role in jeopardy

By PHILIP W. SEMAS
Chronicle of Higher Education

The "Massachusetts experiment" with student participation in faculty collective bargaining in the state-college system appears to be in danger.

Students have sat at the bargaining table at state colleges in Fitchburgh, North Adams, and Salem.

Although they have no formal right to prevent the faculty and administration from reaching agreement, both sides have sought their support.

The three colleges are the only institutions in the country with that much student participation in collective bargaining.

In addition, all the contracts negotiated in the Massachusetts state colleges so far have provided for extensive student participation in campus governance.

However, in recent developments:

—The faculty union at Lowell Technological Institute refused to let students participate in contract talks. Although Lowell Tech is not part of the state college system, its union, an affiliate of the National Education Association, is the same one that agreed to student participation on other campuses.

—The faculty union at Firchburg State, the first college to allow students to take part in negotiations, refused to guarantee that students would be at the table when contract talks reopen in July. Although the union left the possibility open, the students will probably be excluded.

—The faculty of Salem State voted 148 to 66 to reject a contract that included extensive student participation in governance, including a student vote on faculty hiring, promotion, and tenure. Student participation in bargaining was also an issue in the voting.

Two major reasons appear to underlie the growing faculty reluctance to have students at the bargaining table.

One is that faculty negotiators originally agreed to student participation because they thought students would support them. Instead, the students have been singularly independent and have frequently supported management.

The second reason is new collective-bargaining legislation passed earlier this year by the Massachusetts legislature.

The new law, which takes effect July 1, permits bargaining over salaries, something that was not allowed under the old law.

Because wages were not negotiable, collective bargaining in Massachusetts had concentrated on governance. Students were able to make a legitimate case that the negotiations would affect them, and faculty members appeared willing to have students at the bargaining table.

Now that salaries will be at issue, some faculty members are having second thoughts.

At Fitchburg, where negotiators had just about completed their work when the new law was passed, they decided to finish the contract on which they had been working and include in it a clause calling for new negotiations on wages when the law takes effect.

St. Clair reasserts fullness of evidence

WASHINGTON [UPI] – On the eve of House Judiciary Committee consideration of a second subpoena for White House Watergate tapes, President Nixon's attorney, James D. St. Clair, rejected the move yesterday and chided the committee for not utilizing all the evidence it already has.

The committee spent about five and a half hours yesterday listening to evidence the panel's impeachment inquiry staff was presenting to background the 38 members on the June 17, 1972, Watergate break-in and Nixon's possible involvement in it.

The committee set an open meeting for 9 a.m. EDT today to vote on special counsel's John M. Doar's recommendation that it serve another subpoena on the White House, this time seeking 11 tapes allegedly pertaining to the break-in and Nixon's possible prior knowledge of it.

Doar played two other tapes of presidential conversations and then presented a brief justifying the committee's April 19 request for 75 Watergate-related conversation. St. Clair also presented a five-page argument against another subpoena, but mentioned only the April 14 tape.

"It is respectfully suggested that if the special staff had utilized all of the evidence available to it, no evidentiary gap would exist," St. Clair said in his brief, a copy of which was made available to UPI.

St. Clair's confidential report said Nixon's statements previously available to the committee "recount his shock upon first learning about the break-in" and those statements are "conclusive."

The April 14 tape contained, a conversation involving Nixon, then Attorney General John N. Mitchell and White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman, shortly after Mitchell allegedly approved a plan for spying on the Democrats. It was that plan which apparently resulted in the Watergate break-in.

St. Clair's report to the committee gave a lengthy explanation of the background of the Liddy plan and related spying activities by the Committee to Re-Elect the President CRP.

"Furthermore, this analysis supports the contention of the President that he has indeed submitted to the committee all of the evidence that is relevant to his activities in the Watergate matter," the St. Clair report said.

"Finally, if the committee has some remaining questions concerning this event, the President, as he has previously offered, stands ready to respond under oath to written and oral questions," the report concluded.

House unit proposes limit on presidential residences

WASHINGTON [UPI] – A House committee, completing a year long study of public spending on President Nixon's private residences, proposed yesterday that Congress limit government spending on presidential homes.

Stopping short of criticizing the administration, a compromise report adopted by the Government Operations Committee blamed the Secret Service and the General Services Administration (GSA) for excessive spending on the homes.

The report, adopted 36-0 with two members abstaining, detailed $17.1 million spent on Nixon residences in San Clemente, Calif., and Key Biscayne, Fla., and homes he used including the Maryland residence of his daughter Julie and the Bahamas estate of his friend Robert Abplanalp.

The report was a compromise version of one originally approved on partisan lines by the government services subcommittee which conducted the survey. The original report was severely critical of administration aides who ordered major government expenditures on the homes.

The final report was not made public, but subcommittee chairman Jack Brooks, D-Tex., outlined the findings for the committee.

The major proposal, Brooks said, was to limite government expenditures for executive support facilities, such as separate office buildings, to only one private presidential residence. This would not diminish protection of the President, Brooks said.

Committee sources said one recommendation not released was that the government attempt to recover "any improper expenditures" made on Nixon's homes. The expenditures were not detailed.

D'Estaing receives crucial support

PARIS [UPI] – Conservative candidate Valery Giscard d'Estaing won important new support yesterday when the opposition Radical Socialist party swung behind him for the French presidential run-off election to be held on Sunday.

Radical chief Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber told a news conference that party leaders had decided to support Giscard d'Estaing against the Communist-backed Socialist candidate, Francois Mitterrand.

Servan-Schreiber, member of parliament and publisher of the weekly newsmagazine "Express," said he would have preferred Mitterrand, but he opposed his program of nationalizing major companies.

Servan-Schreiber said he had received a pledge from Giscard d'Estaing, the outgoing finance minister, to reform public finances and taxation and decentralize the government.

Servan-Schreiber, 50, predicted that 70 percent of Radical Socialist party members would follow the leadership's recommendation and vote for Giscard d'Estaing. He said the other 30 per cent can be expected to vote for Mitterrand.

The Radical party's close ally, the Democratic Center party, already has declared itself for Giscard d'Estaing. Together, the two parties poll around 10 per cent of France's 30 million voters.

In the neck-and-neck race for the presidency, the Radical and Democratic Centrist vote will be crucial. One public opinion poll indicated as few as 200,000 votes could decide the election.

The Radicals' decision will increase Giscard d'Estaing's appeal in rural areas and among uncommitted voters.

DeSpinola to be appointed president of Portugal today

LISBON [UPI] – Gen. Antonio de Spinola, leader of the coup that ousted a half-century of rightwing dictatorship, will be installed as president of Portugal today.

A spokesman for the junta headed by de Spinola, in announcing the ceremony, said the names of the civilian provisional government's members would be revealed tomorrow.

Among those present at the installation of de Spinola will be law professor Adelino Palma Carlos, the spokesman said, an indication that the 69-year-old liberal law professor would be named prime minister as previously rumored.

Diplomats said Spinola seemed to have succeeded in juggling Portugal's new political parties to form a leftist government acceptable to rightists.

Military officers are expected to remain in control of defense and internal security.

The junta that toppled the government of Prime Minister Marcello Caetano on April 25 has decreed that presidential and parliamentary elections will be held a year from now.

De Spinola, a popular 64-year-old former cavalry officer, will assume the presidential office at the ornate, pink-walled palace of Queluz eight miles west of Lisbon.

The junta spokesman said Spinola "will not be sworn in by any person, but will assume the duties of president."

De Spinola, ousted by the Caetano government as deputy chief of staff only two months ago for asserting Portugal could not win its African colonial wars, is faced with a determination by the rebels to continue fighting for independence.

Kissinger reports no progress in talks; may return home soon

JERUSALEM [UPI] – Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger shuttled between Jerusalem and Damascus yesterday for the fourth time but still failed to win enough concessions to get a cease-fire and a military disengagement between Israel and Syria.

Nearly 500 demonstrators jeered Kissinger last night with slogans and placards saying "beware America - Kissinger breaks your last ally", as he met with Prime Minister Golda Meir in Jerusalem to report on his four hours of talks earlier Tuesday with President Hafez Assad in Damascus.

A high U.S. official told newsmen on the flight back to Jerusalem there was still a gap between the two sides on the central question of where the cease-fire line should be on the Golan Heights.

Kissinger met with Mrs. Meir shortly after his return to see if there was any further give in the Israeli position before he flies back to Damascus today for what could be the last time on this trip.

The high official aboard his plane said that Israel has given a little on the question of where the cease-fire line should lie, and Syria has given a little, but that a gap still remains.

The official said that Kissinger will decide in the next 36 hours whether a cease-fire line is attainable now or whether Kissinger must let both Israel and Syria reflect for several weeks before he returns to the area to try again.

Portuguese coup brings fear to white African governments

By PHIL NEWSOM
UPI Foreign News Analyst

Self-preservation being one of man's basic instincts, it is natural that Portugal's European and African neighbors are looking toward the storm cellars.

It is ironic that the coup that overthrew the Portuguese dictatorship should have come at almost the same moment that South African Prime Minister John Vorster's Nationalist party was winning another mandate to pursue his policy of apartheid, or separation of the races.

The announcement by Portugal's military junta that it intended to keep Portugal's African territories only partially relieved the uneasiness that South Africa was about to lose the buffers that had protected it from the hatred of black Africans to the north.

Vorster conceded the possible tremendous consequence of the coup, which had as one of its origins the great weariness of the Portuguese people with a war which took 40 per cent of the country's budget, the energies and lives of its young men, and which its topmost military men believed it could not win.

Even more closely involved was the white-supremacy government of Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith.

Rhodesia faced the possible loss of its access to the Indian Ocean through Portuguese Mozambique as well as mounting violence from guerrilla groups striking from southern Mozambique and from Zambia and Tanzania.

Smith retained his calm, but it was he who in a television interview recently conceded that Mozambique's security held the key to Rhodesia's well-being in the fight against the guerrillas.

Spinola, the military hero who wrote a book saying Portugal could not win a military victory in Africa, proposes to retain Portugal's African territories but apparently in a loose federation with considerable autonomy. If such a proposal were to be placed before freedom fighters in Portuguese Angola, Guinea or Mozambique today, Spinola's proposals obviously would go down to defeat. So the military campaign in Africa is far from over. At home, Spinola has turned loose political forces which may not be satisfied by the slow pace of reforms.

American Indian Movement (AIM) leader Russell Means is handcuffed as he is led from Minnehaha County Jail here by Sheriff's deputies yesterday. Means was arrested earlier while boarding a plane to St. Paul on charges stemming from a courtroom fight two weeks ago. In St. Paul, the District Judge issued a writ of habeas corpus to bring Means back to trial there.

Court delays attempt by IRS at Vesco tax

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The government has suffered a setback in efforts to collect more than $833,000 in back taxes and penalties from fugitive financier Robert L. Vesco.

A U.S. Tax Court judge has ruled that the Internal Revenue Service was too vague when it charged Vesco with receiving "certain payments" totaling about $1 million from International Controls Corp. (ICC) and failing to report them on his 1971 income tax return. Vesco was chairman of ICC at the time.

According to the IRS, most of the income came from Vesco's use of ICC-owned jet planes for pleasure trips. Vesco has contended he flew the aircraft only for business.

In a motion to the court, Vesco's lawyers argued they could not properly defend their client, now residing in Costa Rica, unless the IRS specified which trips were in dispute and how the government valued the airborne mileage.

Senate cuts back clean air standards in energy move

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday voted an easing of clean air standards as part of the national campaign to conserve energy and sent the measure to conference with a much more far reaching House-passed measure.

The Senate, on a voice vote, passed the bill which also would delay for two years — from 1975 until 1977 — the effective date for auto manufacturers to reach prescribed emission standards. This brought favorable comment from two auto industry spokesmen.

Provisions of the Senate measure are similar to those contained in the emergency energy act vetoes by President Nixon earlier because he objected to other parts of the bill.

On the automobile provision of the measure, Herbert L. Misch, vice president for enviromental and safety engineering for Ford Motor Co., said:

"We have been strongly advocating such action by the Congress and it is absolutely essential that we be given a carryover of the present standards at least through 1976.

We hope the Congress can finish its work on the bill quickly and that' the President can sign it into law promptly."

A spokesman for Chrysler Corp. added:

"While we continue to question the wisdom of going beyond the 1974 standards at this time, an extension of the interim 1975 standards through the 1977 model year would at least avoid some of the more immediate pressing problems of the current law. Taken in that sense, and for that reason only, Chrysler Corp. supports a carryover of the 1975 interim standards."

Newark vote heavy, as Gibson eyes new term

NEWARK [UPI]-Voting was heavy under sunny skies yesterday in an election that tested black Mayor Kenneth A. Gibson's record of rebuilding the city of Newark from the ruins of one of the nation's worst urban race riots.

Gibson, 42, an engineer by profession and the first black mayor of a major Eastern city, predicted his record would carry him to victory over state Sen. Anthony Imperiale, 41, who built a reputation as a militant leader of the city's whites in the predominantly black city.

Despite the background of racial tension since the 1967 riots that left 26 persons dead, the chief issue in the Gibson-Imperiale race was the quality of local government since Gibson's defeet of former Mayor Hugh J. Addonizio in 1970.

Addonizio was under federal indictment at the time for corruption. He was later convicted.

Both candidates sought support from all races, and Imperiale won the endorsement from a group of black clergymen.

Imperiale, an ex-Marine who runs a karate school and a public relations firm, charged Gibson failed to reverse the exodus of business from downtown Newark and has not reduced the crime rate, among the nation's highest. Imperiale also said Gibson failed to improve housing, an area in which Newark ranks lowest on a list of 30 American cities.

Strip mine bill OK'd

WASHINGTON[UPI] — A strip mining control bill was approved, 26 to 15, yesterday by the House Interior Committee.

The Senate passed similar legislation last October and final congressional approval is expected later in the year.

The bill would require land that is surface mined for coal to be returned to the approximate original contour by coal operators.

Food stamps expand

BOSTON [AP] — Between 110,000 and 150,000 Massachusetts households including many not now on public assistance, will be eligible for the state's expanded food stamp program July 1, Welfare Commissioner Steven A. Minter said yesterday.

Minter said the new program, costing about $5 million annually, will replace the federal food surplus plan, which is being phased out by order of the Congress.

Italy celebrates

ROME [UPI] — Jubilant demonstrators yesterday celebrated the landslide victory for Italy's divorce law in major cities throughout Italy. But the Vatican said the vote was a "sad event" for the nation.

Socialist deputy Loris Fortuna, architect of the divorce law, called for overhauling the 1929 Corcordat between Italy and the Vatican, under which its international status is governed.

Sargent backs 200-mile limit

Fishermen complain of threats to industry

BOSTON [AP] — New England fishermen complained at a U.S. Senate hearing yesterday that their industry faces extinction unless the government does something to keep foreigners out of their traditional domain.

Already, some species are almost gone and others are endangered, the fishermen told the Senate Commerce Committee.

The committee members — Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.; John O. Pastore, D-R.I., and Theodore F. Stevens, R-Alaska — all said they supported a bill that would extend United States' jurisdiction over fishing waters from the present 12 miles to 200 miles.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent, who once headed the state Division of Fisheries and Game, said, "The reckless exploitation of George's Bank has continued for far too long. It has reached the dimensions of an international scandal."

The governor said New England fishermen are being pushed out of business "by the highly mechanized government vessels of 19 other nations."

At stake, he said, are 27,000 jobs, $27 million in annual payrolls and $160 million in ships.

Witnesses said that fish landings at the Boston Fish Pier have dropped from 115 million pounds in 1961 to 22 million in 1972. Now, 72 per cent of all the fish eaten in the United States is imported.

Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., a sponsor of the 200-mile limit bill, said, "What we are rishing losing now is not just a New England tradition, it is a major source of protein for the people of the world."

Studds' district includes the fishing port of New Bedford and other coastal communities in southeastern Massachusetts.

"We may find outselves with the last cod on the Great Seal of Massachusetts," he said.

"Because of continued unbridled massive foreign fishing effort, we have seen our haddock catch reduced to two per cent of what it was, our herring stocks reduced to 10 per cent of what they were and our yellowtail flounder stocks on the same road to depletion," said Salvatore J. Favozza, executive secretary of the Gloucester Fisheries Commission.

Refinery company seeks new sites

ROCHESTER, N.H. [AP]-Officials of Olympic Refineries Inc. and Mayor John Shaw of Rochester will meet next week in this eastern New Hampshire city to view possible refinery sites.

Spokesman for Olympic and the mayor's office confirmed the meeting yesterday afternoon.

Mayor Shaw said he was contacted yesterday by Olympic and another oil company. He said he would reveal the name of the second company in the near future and declined to give any other details.

Nicholas Papanicolaou, a vice president of Olympic said this meeting sould be "a courtesy call."

He said, "We do not want to do anything in New Hampshire until certain conditions change." Those conditions were outlined at a recent meeting with selectmen from the town of Newmarket.

At the meeting with Newmarket selectmen, Papanicalaou said Olympic would require an offshire terminal facility. Permission to construct the facility must come from the state and federal governments.

Papanicolaou said it would not be economical to build a refinery without a tanker temminal.

Newmarket and neighboring Durham have been mentioned as prominent sites for a 400,000 barrel-a-day refinery proposed by Olympic.

Durham rejected the proposal, but Newmarket voters said they would support construction of a refinery.

Old Saybrook bans refinery

OLD SAYBROOK, Conn. [AP]-The town's selectmen voted unanimously Monday to oppose a $600 million oil refinery proposed for the Long Island shoals off nearby Cornfield Point.

The proposal was made by PEPCO International Inc. of North Chelmsford, Mass.

The selectmen, acting in emergency session, urged the tovernor's task force to keep area officials "appraised of any proposed uses of off-shore or on-shore locations being considered for any purposes".

Judiciary wants Kopechne records

BOSTON [AP]-The office of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said yesterday that the senator had no idea why the House Judiciary Committee requested a full set of records from the closed inquest into the death of Mary Jo Kopechne.

Miss Kopechne was killed in July 1969, when a car driven by Kennedy went off a bridge and into a tidal pool on Chappiquiddick Island off the Massachusetts coast.

A spokesman for the Docial Law Library at the Suffolk County Courthouse here said a member of the committee's staff telephoned a request that copies of the records and lawyers' briefs from the inquest be sent to Washington immediately.

A spokesman for the committee, which is considering impeachment proceedings against President Nixon, declined to comment on the request.

"I don't know if we have, and I couldn't comment if we had," the spokesman said in response to a query on whether the request had been made.

No reason was given to the library for the request, and Kennedy's spokesman said the senator was not informed. The records requested were made public in 1970.

Conte-backed beef price study begun

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An investigation has begun into the failure of retail beef prices to decline despite a price drop on the wholesale market, according to Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.

Conte said yesterday the probe was initiated by the Federal Trade Commissions Bureau of Competition. Conte had urged such an investigation in a March 29 letter to Lewis A. Engman, FTC chairman.

The investigation will involve analysis of farm-retail price spreads to "determine whether retail prices are a consequence of the operation of a free market or whether they are affected by some anticompetitive intervention by those involved in the marketing process," Commission Director James Halverson wrote.

Owner of isotope not found

NORTHAMPTON [AP]-Police were unsuccessful yesterday in finding the source of a radioactive isotope discovered near the banks of the Connecticut River Saturday.

The isotope, found in a small metal box, was turned in Monday night, police said.

Thomas Marhefka told police he had found the box Saturday.

Police said experts told them the isotope, which was valued at about $100, was a sample used in classroom instruction.

Oickle: confessor, father, bullshitter, friend and advisor

By BOB SCHEIER

There are some people who turn a university from a collection of buildings and courses into a place where you can find understanding challenge, and good advice.

Al Oickle, the Collegian advisor, who is giving up the post this week, is one of those people. Al is not as well known (or notorious) as Collegian columnists or the editors, but anyone who has worked on the Collegian for any length of time knows the man in the office around the corner.

Al's official title for the past ten years has been advisor, to the Collegian and the other campus publications, but he was more than that. He was unofficial historian, father confessor, counselor, editor, bull session partner and friend for ten years to Collegian staffers.

Whenever any of the editors would go running into Al frantic because someone was going to sue us for libel or take over the office or cut off our funds, Al stayed calm.

Despite the fact he worked on the Greenfield Recorder all day (first as managing editor, and now editor) he was usually able to back off, cool down, and take a calm look at whatever the problem was. And the hyped-up editor would eventually get him or herself back under control and realize the problem wasn't the end of the world.

And he was able to do the same for staffers with personal problems. Al has heard both sides of more romances, career hassles, personality conflicts, academic quagmires, and just plain cases of panic than most counselors at Room To Move.

Every night around six, Al would sit down with whoever happened to plop into the couches in his office and critique the paper — analyzing and criticizing everything from the captions for the pictures to how many columns a story ran over.

Al made both the editors and the newest unsure layout person think about not only what had been done wrong, but what the paper could be, and he did it with tact, good humor, and creativity.

Along with a sensitivity to the fine points of writing a headline or laying out a page, Al taught the staff responsibility. Once, I was sitting in on the critique when the managing editor walked in and said they had a report someone had jumped from a tower in Southwest.

Before saying anything else, Al made the editor promise to keep the coverage of the death subdued, because playing it up big just might encourage someone else...

I don't know about anyone else, but one of the things that made me decide to try journalism was seeing that someone like Al could have the hard-bitten professionalism to get out a daily newspaper during the day, and the sensitivity to genuinely care about a bunch of often obnoxious college journalists that evening.

As Al often said, no one is indispensable, and the paper will get out without him. But he will be missed.

Thank you, Al.

Bob Scheier is a former Managing Editor of the Collegian.

Letters to the editor

Estelle not worth 5¢

To The Editor:

This is a comment on Bob Estelle's recent article "A Crash Is Coming" [May 10, 1974]:

It's too bad that you have resorted to "scare tactics to make a point about inflation. You certainly spent enough words on revolutionaries and a coming "big brother" world; but not many on facts about the Federal Reserve Board and why you believe it to be responsible [in part?] for the present inflation. Such articles aren't worth 5 cents [I am a graduate student.] For in the end, aren't "scare tactics" what "big brothers" are made of?

Diana M. Presz

Concert Comm. crass

To The Editor:

I would like to address myself at this time to the Concert Committee in regard to the record played at Spring Concert in the interval between Elliot Murphy and Aerosmith. The explicit sounds of varied sex acts were not exactly appropriate in the Cage, as crowded as it was with hot, impatient people. On the contrary, I found it crass, insulting, and in completely bad taste. For a while it was amusing, but enough is enough.

Betsie Duncan

Concert not a zoo

To The Editor:

This letter is being written in response to Steve Feld's account of the Spring Concert. I frankly don't think that it was even worth my time here at the typewriter, but I am so disgusted by his ignorance that I am writing anyway.

To begin with, if Mr. Feld was supposed to be reporting the concert, he should learn what the role of a reporter is — to give the readers an objective account of whatever went on. Obviously, this was not done. Did you, Mr. Feld, even notice that the Chris Rhodes Band played? A lot of people liked them more than Elliot Murphy, who you said stole the show, if you recall who got an encore and who did not. Secondly, as one who worked on the Concert in both the planning stages and on security there, I can tell you that the stage crew did an excellent job of fast preparation and set up having already constructed one stage at the Stadium to the Cage and the reason why the music started late was not due to any confusion whatsoever. I find it amazing that the concert got going by three since it would have been easy to cancel it altogether.

I would also like to challenge Mr. Feld on the "animalistic bunch" who was there. There were many, many people from all around the state gathered to see a free outdoor concert. When the news broke that only UMass students would be allowed into the Cage, which was changed minutes before the doors opened, people became angry, having been told that the concert was open to all. Considering the age bracket of those in attendance, a large percentage of which were high school kids, I think that the crowd was great. Everyone stayed peaceful and there were no major problems.

All of this was written to tell those who were not in attendance at the Spring Concert that it was not the zoo that Mr. Feld inferred. Most of the people there had a good time. That's what the Spring Concert is supposed to be all about.

Felicia Mode

Feld, MDC, irresponsible

To The Editor:

This is in response to Steven Feld's article of May 13th. We are disturbed that the article concerning the Spring Concert in the Cage was found on page three instead of on the editorial page where it belonged. His article was clearly an opinionated observation rather than an objective overview. We assume the Collegian knows that opinion belongs on the editorial page and news throughout the rest of the paper.

As far as the content of the article is concerned, Mr. Feld's reference to the crowd at the concert as "a peculiarly animalistic bunch intent on reaching the highest possible state of artificially-induced euphoria" is not only a textbook example of poor writing, but is also an irresponsible generalization. The huge crowd had waited patiently up to three hours in the rain before squeezing into the Cage. Before, during and after the concert there were almost no incidents.

Furthermore, Mr. Feld passes off in one sentence the events leading up to the switch in location. It is a miracle that we were able to make the move at all, let alone do it with a mere two-hour delay. A lot of credit is owed to those who worked for four straight hours moving out of the stadium and into the Cage. Yet another example of Mr. Feld's lack of sensitivity towards the situation.

Our point is this: we are seeing less and less responsible writing in the Collegian. Mr. Feld's article is a prime example of the continuing trend.

WHERE WAS THE WAR?
For my eyes are full and no tears cry
And my throat is dusty and dry.
From her poem:
Margaret Walker, "JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI"

Mourning stillness accorded to by flightless birds under veil of shadow laces
and tall women, nobly walking, cortege of faces bearing mute mouths and talking eyes, remembering reminded by assasinated windows replaced with plywood casket lids bullet pocked cement walls a tombstone chiseled by pick-sharp glares as guilty as projectiles.

Mourning stillness
severed by a wide, dusty trajectory channeling an incessant peregrine procession of suspicious cars on by car-less perpendicular streets, streets
of sun baked and sweat packed earth sidewalked with xylophonic planks contiguous to quadricentennial fences, fences
of warped, veined shanks and hushed gates separating streets
of sun baked and sweat packed earth from swamp-brown, hang-down stoops.

Mourning stillness
midday motionless
save the earth evaporating to dust
and bony couples in umber shadows under stoop roofs rocking their aching chairs, old stiff wood
squaking
incising the mourning silence, an audible fissure of quadricentennial ebullition zigzagging under xylophonic plank walks
and tall women, remembering Phillip L. Gibbs
and
James Earl Green while incessant peregrine patrol procession is backed up to pillar shadows cast by mausoleum mansions.

Mourning still unceasing sepia bruises on magnolia
bloom.

the dying.

Hail and good riddance

Oh! I think I could just cry! Its the middle of May and the semester is just about over. Oh! I don't think I can take three months away from this cheery campus that has meant so much to my introspective speculations, my intellectual rambling, my philosophical discourses, my libido. I'm being cast unmercifully and without the protection of my Head of Residence to the wolves of the "Real World" to wallow in the quicksand of its degeneracy. Ah but who can protect me from the Watergates and inflation, the near extinct job market and the rising cost of living, the Harry Reasoners and Emma Peels, the Carl Yastrzemskis and pervasive moral decay that lurks out there awaiting many an unsuspecting Umie. Beneath every bridge lurks a troll and behind every bush outside of Amherst looms a hideous beast feasting on the remains of Joe College.

Oh Well! This year has been just that - another year. But to make it all relate, if you can dig it man, it behooves me to say goodbye, au revoir and possibly good riddance to those that have made it happen. The following have made it all possible and they can rest assured that if there's any way in the world that I can get them back, I will. Me and my good buddy Paul Lazzaro.

Goodbye Central Area Government and all the fine people in it. May you all come to realize what a Hot Vicks Enema feels like. I wish you love, realization, and a one way ticket to Argentina.

Goodbye Doc Nasal, my School of Ed T.A. You always thought we called you Doc out of affection, but you were wrong. Behind your back we called you "The Drip". That surprise final in Frisbee 210 you threw at us last week insured your spot before the All-University Firing Squad (headed by David "Armed to the Brink" Johnston of the University Pigs).

Goodbye Franklin Dining Comons. I don't know how I'll be able to live without your Polish Night and Picadilly Circuses. What will become of me without spaghetti and potatoes three times a day not to mention Barf on a Bun (without the bun), is almost frightening to speculate.

Goodbye Ralph Cramden - the Ace UMass Kamikaze Bus Driver whose motto is "I didn't see anybody standing there, did you?" and whose goal in life is to win the Pelham 500.

Goodbye Richard Nixon. Your lessons in morality and speech have been most enlightening. I'll try to remember them and put them into practice this summer. Let's hope that by next September we won't be in the same cell.

Goodbye Godot - for whom I and 9,000 other Umies wait for when we try to cash a check in the Student Union. I can't wait any more.

Goodbye Scuzzy and Pinko, Spike and Hot Phartes, my drinking buddies. Wednesday nights at the "Wall" just won't be the same without the Bruins and a few heads and tables to smash. But we had some good times. Bunny at the infirmary won't forget us for a while.

Goodbye Wizard of Oz, who moonlights as the Director of Elevators at the Library. You know I was only kidding when I said I wanted to get off in Kansas...It took me and the mutt two weeks to hitch back.

Goodbye Frank Rizzo. I'll miss taking a cheap shot at you every week. Once again you prove to America how to run a city while having congenital Rabies.

Goodbye Josherina Toughcookie. Your heart-warming personality can only be matched by a giant iceberg. But I have several things to remember you by. One is an autographed picture of you stabbing some poor derelict (male) in the neck after he asked you for a dime to buy a cup of coffee. The other is a nice scar near by adams apple.

Goodbye Henry Ragin. You didn't really think that the Senate was smart enough (or foolish enough) to elect you President. Maybe we'll get 'em next year, if you live through the verbal diarrhea from now 'til then.

Goodbye Bob Dylan, who once said something to the effect of: Politics is like a harmonica, you keep blowing and it still sucks!

OH! THE INTENSIFICATION OF PAIN!! THE PAIN OF IT ALL!!!

Steve Anderson

Hail and Fairwell

Well chow hounds, the end is in sight. After this you won't have Steve Anderson to kick around anymore. It's finally come to the point where I want to or at least must graduate. So what can I say?

When I first came here it seemed that everyone is a reject from another school. Some of them would have prefered to be at Holy Cross, Boston University, Williams, Middlebury, etc. but for various reasons we were all here. For some the reasons were academic; for others they were financial. Now, as strange as it may sound I think people are actually choosing UMass. Our reputation as a party school is probably based on two things. First, there is the freshman year. Outside of those in the hard sciences and especially for those in the humanities and social sciences freshman year was little more than a repeat of high school so studying was not really reqqired. Second, people tell you that this is a party school and since you'll probably never go to another school there's no way to tell if we party more than other schools. BU, UConn or any other school the same size is probably just as rowdy.

As far as the Collegian is concerned and the gems I've written such as "Bail and Corruption," "To Vote or Not to Vote," and "Father, Son and Lucky Host," Roger Saulnier said it best, "they all suck." Now one must admit that his statement is true but an adequate reply would be to paraphrase Bob O'Halloran, blow it out your ear. On the whole I think the Collegian has improved under Steve Tripoli and Karen Lynch.

Seriously, where else in the world could someone get a degree in political science and not be able to get a job with Star Market, the Census Bureau, Decater & Hopkins, etc. etc.? UMass has some good points like the TOC and the Bluewall but if I can get serious for a minute the school has changed. Four years ago thousands of us traveled to Washington to demand the end of the war and draft. We struck over the mining of Haiphong Harbor and campaigned for Georgie McGovern. Now we streak and complain about the poor quality of concerts (no matter what the Concert Committee says the concerts we've had in the last three years have really stunk.) I would suggest that because people don't participate in much of anything (including planning concerts) life has become a little less enjoyable.

I think this is the time when I ttank the people who made this possible. First and foremost is my Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary. Second a lot of credit for the way I spell and write goes to my sixth grade teacher, Sister Frances Theresa; I hope she can sleep at night. Next thanks to all the people who have helped write or misspell columns: Greenbert, Doc Parker, Weasel Jim, Bill, Hunich, Waynge, Bob, John, Robby, Drug City Cliff, Karen W., Jim, Stillwagon, Karen, the Zub, Panda, Steve, Mad Dog Clement and the rest of you know who you are or you're pretty goddam stupid. Good Luck to the people I've met at the Collegian especailly the leaders of the Editorial staff, Steve, Jerry, Dean and Mike. To the Administration it's been real.

Study Nukes
It could mean life

The Coalition for Environmental Quality is currently sponsoring a petition-by-newspaper drive urging Congress to activeiy involve itself in a major program in support of alternative energy sources, such as solar and wind power, and to call for the phasing out of nuclear fusion power plants.

The petition was originally devised by the Task Force Against Nuclear Pollution and reads as follows:

> I petition my representative in Congress to sponsor and actively support legislation to develop safe sources of clean energy (especially energy from the sun), instead of nuclear fission, and to phase out the operation of nuclear power plants as quickly as possible.

The statement has received endorsement from such notables as Nobel Lauriates Linus Pauling, Harold Urey George Wald, and James Watson. Other supporters of the petition include Paul Erlich, Lewis Mumford, UMass professor of Physics David Ingilis and former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark.

Thus far the drive has been successful, as is evident in Governor Sargent's speech here recently where he said that no further action would be taken until all the alternatives are weighed.

The Collegian supports this measure in view of the apparent danger of nuclear fission and the increasing viability of alternative power sources.

Unsigned editorials in this space represent the opinion of a majority of the board of editors.

On Thursday night at eight o'clock there will be a "get together" for the editorial department. All columnists, commentators, cartoonists, layout artists, or any sombies who worked for the editorial office are requested to be prompt, clean, and sober. Meet in Dean Tucker's office.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Asia internships

Students with interest and experience relating to one or more Asian country may apply through the International Programs Office to intern with The Asia Foundation next fall or spring semesters. Headquartered in San Francisco, The Asia Foundation encourages economic, social and educational development in a number of Asian countries, including Thailand, Philippines, Pakistan, Vietnam, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Korea and Japan.

The Foundation works with universities, government agencies, law centers, community organizations and many other public and private bodies, and through small grants to individuals and organizations fosters leadership development in Asia.

UMass students interning with The Asia Foundation will work in its San Francisco Office on a full-time basis, earning 15 academic credits if their advisor in their major department approves. They will have the opportunity as interns to expand their knowledge of contemporary Asian problems, to gain inside understanding of the operation of a small foundation, and to help develop programs aimded at Asian development. Although the foundation cannot pay a stipend to interns, the cost is not expected to exceed costs for a semester on campus.

To qualify for the internship a student must have some background on Asia, at least a B average, writing ability, and upper division or graduate status. Interested students should apply as soon as possible to the Director of International Programs, 239 Whitmore.

Sarge and friends at Bluewall (via TV)

This year's candidates for governor will be in the Blue Wall this afternoon and tomorrow (2-4) - on video-tape.

WUMV, the student TV station will present a first in campus media with its "Telopolitics" special on "The 1974 Massachusetts Gubernatorial Race."

Chris Sophinos, station manager, says the WUMV is currently negotiating arrangements for the one-hour program to be aired on cable TV throughout Western Massachusetts.

The show is a compilation of half-hour press conferences with Gov. Francis W. Sargent, Atty. Gen Robert H. Quinn, Republican candidate Carroll P. Sheehan, Democratic Candidate Michael Dukakis and Socialist Party candidate Donald Gurewitz.

Highlights include the candidates' views on human services, education and public disclosure of personal finances and campaign expenditures.

The show was produced and directed by Sophinos and moderated by Mark Vogler, Collegian political reporter.

According to Sophinos, the "Telopolitics" special is the best WUMV production of the year.

"Because of the sensitive political overtones of television, as witnessed in Michael Dukakis' recent request for equal time to rebut Gov. Sargent, WUMV's complete coverage of the 1974 Gubernatorial Race is receiving exceptionally good reception, he said.

"Also the universality of the piece makes it valuable right up until the Nov. 5 election. While our production might be dated several months from now, the material is extremely valuable. Politicians should be judged not only in their present stands - but also in past considerations."

Vogler says the show should "at least enable the students to get a look at the candidates before leaving campus for the summer."

"Unfortunately, only one of the four chose to address the students here on campus. But WUMV did go out and take the initiative to get all of them on tape.

"Our show is probably more relevant to a student audience; the press conferences were conducted by a team of Collegian journalists with college oriented issues in mind.

"It's the first time anything like this has ever been attempted like this, but WUMV has done a creditable job in putting the show together."

Who gets your tax $?

Sweat, toads and Zlotnika pigs

By DONALD LAMBRO

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The average American taxpayer has some difficulty, understandably, in comprehending President Nixon's proposed $304 billion budget in all its enormity and complexity. So do a lot of people in Congress, the government — and the news media.

Perhaps a brief examination of some of its respective parts might bring home where all that money goes. Well, not all of it, but some of it.

Rep. John B. Conlan, R-Ariz., issued a report to his constituents recently which listed some examples of seemingly wasteful government spending.

Here are a few examples:

—$6,000 to look into the bisexual behavior of Polish frogs.

—$375,000 to determine if Frisbees might be used to carry flares.

—$121,000 to find out why so many people say "ain't."

—$70,000 to conduct research on the smell of perspiration from Australian aborigines.

—$20,324 to study the mating calls of Central American toads.

—$70,000 to classify and determine the population biology of Indo-Australian ants.

—$20,000 to study the blood groups of Polish Zlotnika pigs.

—$203,979 for the city of Los Angeles to extend travelers aid to migrants who get lost on the freeways.

—$19,300 to try to figure out why so many children fall off tricycles.

"These projects," Conlan told his constituents, "are sadly not just the product of someone's fertile imagination. They are actual federal studies, commissioned by federal agencies and paid for by taxpayers."

The Arizonan continued: "Unless taxpayers get more friends in Washington ... Congress will continue the squanderous waste and misuse of tax dollars that take place here.

"With this year's gigantic tax haul, they may go bananas altogether."

Conlan went on to say that "it is little comfort to any of us as we send in our tax returns to the Internal Revenue Service, that the average cost of federal programs for every man, woman and child in the United States is about $1,500 — more than double the cost per person in 1965."

There's a fungus among us

DENVER [UPI] — The Rocky Mountain Farmers Union plans to file an official protest with the Army over the burial of 70 tons of a biological substance which kills wheat.

The Army has admitted it doesn't know where on the 17,000-acre Rocky Mountain Arsenal the wastes containing biological warfare fungus are buried. Arsenal officials said, however, they thought they had narrowed the search down to a 30-acre tract.

John Stencel, RMFU president, said the protest would center on whether the Army has followed the best procedure in the best interest of the people.

"It's rather appalling to bury it and not know where," Stencel said. "They might find out later it might still be alive. It's ridiculous to play with something like that and not take further precautions."

The arsenal, on the east side of Denver, has been criticized for its keeping of inadequate records of chemical and biological warfare material which it disposes.

The Army admitted in a report released last February that no records were kept on the nature and amount of wastes disposed of through most of the facility's 30-year history.

"Nobody kept any records then but things are different today," said Col Gerald Wood, arsenal commander. "We're trying to bring ourselves into the modern world, and we're trying to protect the environment. We do that religiously."

The 70 tons of wheat killing wastes were buried between 1965 and 1969. Stencel said he and other farmers would argue in the protest that the Army did the wrong thing in burying the fungus in shallow trenches.

However, Wood said he was "reasonably sure" the fungus was dead because it didn't have anything to grow on underground.

Trouble at Wounded Knee trials

Part one of a three part series.

By GAIL SULLIVAN

Currently the American Indian Movement (AIM) is being forced to fight court battles on three different fronts. Wounded Knee trials are proceeding in both St. Paul, Minnesota and Sioux Falls, South Dakota. There is also a more violent battle occurring in Sioux Falls at the "Custer trial", moved there to escape the prejudice of Custer County.

The case involves five people: David Hill, Sarah Bad Heart Bull, Robert High Eagle, Delalah Beane and Ken Dahl, who are now on trial for riot charges stemming from the demonstration held at the Custer Courthouse on February 6, 1973, in which the courthouse was burned.

AIM had gone to Custer to protest the dual system of justice in South Dakota, and as the people arrested for the Custer incident face trial, including the mother of the man whose murder precipitated the incident, the racism of that system is evident, once again, in the treatment of the Indians by the Court.

Believing it impossible to receive a fair trial anywhere in South Dakota, the defense has attempted to remove the Custer cases from State to Federal court. They hoped, then, to move the trial out of South Dakota. Seventeen different pre-trial motions have been filed as well, including motions to dismiss charges based on such issues as the Treaty rights of the Sioux Nation and the prejudice of the all white Custer grand jury which indicted the nineteen Custer defendants. Presiding Judge Joseph Bottum has fought the removal of the case from his jurisdiction and has categorically denied all defense motions of substance.

Recently, tension began to build when Bottum refused to allow the defense a continuance of trial for two days, pending an appeal before the State Supreme Court on a decision he had made.

Defense Attorney Ramon Roubideaux, a Rosebud Sioux from South Dakota, told the court he could not intelligently take part in the challenges to the jury before knowing the decision of the Supreme Court as to the number of challenges allowed.

Feeling it would be denying his clients rights, Mr. Roubideaux refused to move on, calling Bottums' Court an attempt at a "legal lynching".

Supported by his two co-counselors, Jack Pratt and David Allen, Roubideaux said he would not participate in the railroading of his clients to jail.

Bottums held Roubideaux in contempt of court, threw him in jail for a day, and fined him $100. He suspended the two white, out of state lawyers from practicing in South Dakota courts, a move the defense called typical of the racism apparent in S.D. courts: jailing the Indian and setting the whites free with an admonition.

Following an all night vigil outside Roubideaux's jail cell, the defendants, their families, and all spectators refused to stand up for the judge as he entered court. Said one defendant "if he has no respect for my people, or my attorney, why should I show him any respect"?

Judge Bottum refused to enter Court unless people agreed to stand, which is a Court tradition but not a law. Bottum ordered over fifty Indian children, women and men removed physically from the Courtroom, and there was fighting or outbreaks.

When court resumed the following Tuesday, over two hundred Indian people from around the state had arrived in Sioux Falls to show support. However, Judge Bottum had ordered a limit of twenty Indian spectators. Again, the defendants, their families, and the spectators refused to stand for the judge who then deployed the South Dakota Tactical Squad to remove all spectators.

The ensuing fight in which the Tactical Squad fought with defendants, legal workers, and spectators, was not filmed because all media persons had been ordered out of the courthouse by the sheriff.

Many Indian people were hurt--David Hill, having been hit all over the head and body, was brought to the hospital. It is still unsure whether he will ever be able to see with his right eye.

One of the Lutheran bishops who witnessed the scene said the police action was "like using a shotgun against a flea."

The defense has demanded that Judge Bottum remove himself from the trial because they feel that by jailing Roubideaux and calling the Tactical Squad into court, he has demonstrated prejudice against the defendants.

David Hill, who had to be wheeled into court on a hospital bed 3 days after the fight, told Judge Bottum: "If I were in good health I would not stand for you. I have nothing but contempt for you. I think that you're a racist and egotistical man."

The tension in the courtroom has moved to the city of Sioux Falls where police wear riot gear and carry shotguns on patrol; and where many Indians from around the country have gathered in support of the trial. One AIM member said:

"I went to Custer to protest injustice against my people. It is the same struggle here, And I will continue to fight it. We will not let the white courts be used against Indian people any longer."

Gail Sullivan, former UMass student, is presently a legal worker for the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee.

Conn. inmate may undergo sex change

HARTFORD [AP] — Karlton W. Hudson may become the first inmate in the nation to have a sex-change operation as a form of rehabilitation, says Connecticut's Corrections Commissioner John R. Manson.

Hudson, 25, is serving a six year sentence at Somers maximum security prison on two counts of indecent assault. He began taking the female hormone, estrogen, through a physician at Mt. Sinai Hospital last year and now has fully developed breasts, rounded hips and a high pitched voice.

The other inmates think of him as a woman," said Manson, adding that Hudson's appearance and actions are disruptive to the rest of the prison population. Hudson is segregated from the other prisoners, he said.

Hudson, who lived as a female under the assumed name of "Tina" most of his life, said the segregation is unfair because he can't participate in most prison programs.

"I can't be put into the population because I'm Tina Hudson, a transsexual, and they don't know what to do with me," he said.

Hudson claimed four years ago in an unsuccessful federal suit that his classification as a "homosexual psychopath" caused prison administrators to discriminate against him.

Hudson's request to marry another inmate in 1972 was denied. Both were paroled briefly last year and shared an apartment but are now in separate prisons serving out their sentences as parole violators.

"My mother brought me up as Tina. I'm Tina now and I'll always be Tina. I was born a freak of nature, I guess. My sister is a lesbian, just the opposite of me. She should have been born a man and I should have been born a woman," Hudson said in an interview.

"I have this problem, like all women do. I flirt a lot, with guards and inmates, but it's playful. I don't mean anything by it. I'm not here to find a man. I just want to serve my time and get out." he said.

Prison psychologists have determined that Hudson has a female personality but some agencies which perform sex change operations are unsure whether the operation would curb his antisocial behavior, the commissioner said.

"Basically, what they said was the operation might simply result with us having a female sociopath on our hands instead of a male sociopath," Manson said.

Manson said, however, that one agency has not yet "given up" hope that the sex change could help Hudson become a responsible citizen.

The operation, which would be financed with private funds, would be only one step in rehabilitating Hudson, Manson said.

Manson has consulted with the state attorney general's office about transferring Hudson to the Niantic state women's prison.

Manson added that "besides the operation, we have tried to place Hudson in a group home, but nobody want to touch him because of his sexual problem."

Robberies

The weak and the aged are most vulnerable

DAVIS, Calif. [UPI] — In any given year there are more than 300,000 robberies in the United States.

They occur on dark, poorly lit streets in the core of the nation's cities, during daylight hours in suburban shopping centers and in America's gasoline stations, banks, walk-in diners, liquor stores and chain drive-ins.

The victims of these robberies often are the most vulnerable in our society, the weak and the aged.

That was among the findings of a three-year study of 93 robberies in Oakland, Calif., just released by the Center of Administration of Criminal Justice at the University of California at Davis.

University researchers, who interviewed hundreds of robbers and their victims, reported that victims were predominantly female. Half the female victims involved in street robgeries were over the age of 55, while 33 per cent were over the age of 65.

Most of the women subjected to the sudden attack of a robber, or a band of them, were out of their homes because they were shopping or doing other necessary chores such as paying bills.

Researchers also found that 66 per cent of the victims had been subjected to some kind of force. More than half the incidents resulted in injury to the victim, but of these less than half required medical treatment.

In the sample, seven victims required hospitalization. All of these were over the age of 61. They remained in the hospital for a period of time ranging from overnight to more than 90 days.

Victims said they were in contact with the robbers only briefly — from 30 seconds to more than three minutes.

Eighty per cent of the victims reported that the robber got less than $50 and 25 per cent said they lost money or property valued at less than $10.

"Physical resistance," researchers wrote, "such as trying to hit the robber, struggle or hold onto property, generally led to more injury."

But yelling and screaming, the study revealed, generally brought no adverse reaction and occasionally helped the situation.

In interviews with 113 adult Oakland robbers, researchers found that a majority of the criminals said they needed money for food and shelter, while others said they needed clothing, a car or a place of their own to live.

"Two had been involved in other crimes and wanted to leave the state to avoid arrest," the study showed. "Several of the adults said they were attempting to recover money which they claimed was either theirs or owed to them."

Seventy-five per cent of the adult robbers interviewed said they were not working at the time they committed the crime.

"Less than half said they were looking for work," researchers said. "Many of those not looking for work were 'hooked' on heroin. Others had tried to find work for six months."

Researchers — headed by professors Floyd Feeney and Adrianne Weir — said 25 per cent of the robbers interviewed reported being high on drugs or a combination of drugs and alcohol when committing the crime. Another 13 per cent said they were drunk at the time. According to the study, half of the robbers did not plan their holdups, strong-arm robberies and purse snatches. More than 50 per cent said they never thought of getting caught by police.

"A number hadn't even started out to do a robbery," the report said.

A majority preferred doing their "work" in their hometowns, while 42 per cent of them "worked" their own neighborhoods.

"People Are Afraid"

"When guns were used, they were generally used to beat the victims rather than shoot them," the report said.

The study of the Oakland area showed that 30 per cent of all adult robbery suspects caught are released without being charged. In addition to those not charged another 20 per cent of the adult suspects are not convicted.

The study summed up the robbery situation saying:

"In a country which we like to think of as the greatest in the world, the government is failing miserably in the most important task of any government — that of protecting the lives and property of its citizens.

"People are afraid of muggings, yokings, street assaults, stickups and other ways in which criminals seek to take property face to face by the use of force and fear.

"Robbery affects both the young and old, white and black ... and particularly the weak and the vulnerable."

FINAL BUDGETING NOTICE

ALL ORGANIZATIONS who have requested funding for next year (FY '75) are requested to attend the Student Senate meeting of Wednesday, May 15, 1975. Due to overbudgeting, a plan to reduce all budgets will be voted on by the Senate.

After a reallocation proposal is approved, the Senate will accept the Budget Act 74-S1). This will establish the final amount to be allocated to the applicants. All SATF organizations should pick up a personalized copy of this proposal in the RSO office before Wednesday night's Senate meeting.

This is the last meeting on the Budget Act.

Work for foreign students

The Boston district office of the U.S. Immigration Service has decided to let foreign students get their summer work permission locally from the Foreign Student Office in cases where the foreign student is to be employed on-campus. The earlier ruling this year, that summer work permission would have to be sought from their Boston office, only applies off-campus.

The Foreign Student Office reports that it is still bundling off-campus work permission requests to be sent to Boston in packets, and that the next group of request forms (I-538) must be ready by 5:00 p.m. Thursday, May 16th, in order to be mailed out Friday.

Foreign Students seeking on-campus work permission should stop by the Foreign Student Office in the same manner they have in previous summers.

Center survey ends this week

The survey that has been conducted for one week by the Student Development Center on the post-graduate plans of the class of 1974 is ending this week. All survey cards should be turned in to the major department of each senior, or turn them in to the Student Development Center in Berkshire House. A representative from the Center will visit each department within the next two days to pick up the returned cards. The Student Development Center wishes to express its thanks to all seniors who took part in the survey as the results will be tremendously useful to other classes in making their future plans and in developing curriculum.

UMass prof authors book on structural stability

A new Prentice Hall book by UMass engineering Professor Alexander Chajes deals with buckling and how it affects structures.

"Principles of Structural Stability Theory" includes the analysis and design of structures that fail by buckling. This mode of failure results when the structure loses its internal equilibrium and becomes unstable, the author says. Buckling differs in this respect from other types of failures which arise when the material of the structure is stressed beyond its capabilities. Most commonly encountered structures such as columns, beams, trusses, arches and domes are susceptible to this type of failure and this fact must be accounted for in their design, according to Prof. Chajes.

Alexander Chajes is associate professor of civil engineering at the University. His experience includes six years of structural analysis at the Grumman Aircraft Corporation and consultation to the American Iron and Steel Institute.

Hester here

Miss Eva B. Hester, candidate for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, will speak in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union tomorrow at 7:00 p.m.

For the past 13 years, she has served as administrative assistant to the Chairman, House Ways and Means Committee of the State Legislature. She is vice-chairwoman of the State Democratic Committee and a member of the National Democratic Committee.

Hester served for five years as an Assistant to a Congressman and for the House Committee Investigating Lobbying in Congress. She was a Price Specialist in the Office of Price Stabilization, and also served as an Aide in the General Assembly of the United Nations.

If Miss Hester is successful in her attempt, Massachusetts will be the first state in the nation to ever elect a woman as lieutenant governor.

75 years of experience to be honored tomorrow

Three faculty members who have served here for a total of 75 years will be honored at a retirement reception Thursday, May 16.

Prof. Vernon P. Helming has taught English at UMass for 41 years, Prof. Mary E. Helming has taught nursing for 20 years, and Mrs. Virginia D. Grahame has taught English for 14 years. Their reception will be from 3 to 6 p.m. in room 1009 of the UMass Campus Center.

Prof. Vernon Helming began at UMass in 1933 and from 1961 to 1962 was acting head of the English department. Through the years he has taught a variety of English courses, including freshman and sophomore courses, Chaucer, Milton, prose fiction, and Greek classics in translation. He had earned his bachelor's degree at Carleton College in Minnesota and his doctorate at Yale University, and had taught at the American University of Beirut, and Knox College in Illinois. From 1954 to 1955 he was a visiting professor at Amherst College and from 1960-61 at Smith College.

Prof. Mary Helming has taught nursing at UMass since 1954. She studied at the Schools of Nursing of Massachusetts General Hospital, Simmons College, and Catholic University of America. Before beginning at UMass, she taught at Massachusetts General Hospital and Boston College. In 1973 she was named director of the UMass division of nursing, School of Health Sciences. She has been active in several professional organizations, including the American Nurses Association, and the Council on Education, Massachusetts Nurses Association.

Friends wishing to attend the reception may contact Ms. Nancy Flavin of the UMass division of Nursing, Morrill Science Center.

Government, UYA officials meet

Federal government officials and University Year for Action officials will meet on the campus Wednesday and Thursday, May 15 and 16.

The "Educational Staff Seminar," a Ford Foundation program, will bring to campus employees of Congress; and of the Departments of Health, Education and Welfare, and Housing and Urban Development.

University Year for Action (UYA) is a student volunteer project and is part of the federal Action program, which also includes Peace Corps, Vista, and other helping programs. UMass UYA students, who spend a year working for various community and public service agencies, earn academic credit and a living allowance.

Participants in the Educational Staff Seminar will include former UYA volunteers, and UMass officials.

Associate Provost Robert Woodbury, Dean William Darity of the UMass School of Health Sciences, UMass UYA Director Ruth Burgin, and Sharon Enright, assistant director of the seminar, will speak at a dinner Wednesday night in the Campus Center. Thursday morning speaker will be Mike Gaffney, one of the first UYA volunteers who later became a staff member in the Washington, D.C. Action office and is now an employee of the U.S. Joint Committee on Appropriations. Panelists in a session, "Exploring the Field," will be: Albert G. Rosenberg, executive director of SCOPE, a six-county anti-poverty agency in Dayton, Ohio; Al Alessi, former UYA volunteer and now program director of Friendly House, Inc., a multi-service community center in Worcester; and Alice Gerritson, another former UYA volunteer who worked on adult education at Belchertown State School.

Officials will then visit 15 area agencies staffed with UYA volunteers and return to campus for a dinner and a talk on the "Relationship or Importance of Federal Programs in Public-Community Service to Experimental Education." Speaker will be Dr. Preston Bruce, special assistant to UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

Rubber checks

Stewart estimates his office has a 30 per cent collection rate which leaves approximately $3,500 outstanding each year. The figures for the Campus Center are deceiving because the office gives the student a week to get money into his account before they start collection procedures. Thus, a lot of the checks are already made good by the time they start collection.

After two notices are sent to the student, stricter means must be used. It is here that both offices have faced legal blocks.

The Campus Center was having a great deal of difficulty in collecting on bad checks. Over the past three years, they have approximately $11,000 still outstanding. This semester they instigated a policy of sending a notification to parents as well as the students, when a check was returned. John G. Tilley, Office Manager of the Campus Center, said the notification of parents was "a Campus Center policy. We will chase in every direction possible to collect on the checks." Tilley felt that the notice to parents was "not a liability, but just advising them of the situation."

The notice did, however, charge that "Issuing a fradulent check is a serious offense... and you are urged to immediately make payment so that legal action will not be necessary." Attorney for the Students, Richard Howland, felt the notification of parents, when not involved with the check, was illegal. "It's possible libel, invasion of privacy, and in violation of the Fair Credit Reporting Act." When the Business Office was made aware of this and confronted with possible litigation, they decided to terminate the policy.

In a subsequent interview, Manager Craig Stewart took "complete responsibility for the action. The policy was just to notify the parents", he explained. "We thought the parents would pay, although we couldn't hold them legally responsible. We just wanted the money."

The Bursar's Office has not been sending notices to parents, but it has also hit some legal snags in its attempts to collect on bad checks. The office has always maintained the option to apply an "administrative withdrawal" to the student who does not take care of a bad check. Administrative withdrawal means the student ceases to be enrolled. He must return ID, meal ticket, etc., and leave the campus.

Bursar Robert Mishol reports that administrative withdrawal is used in the case of a person who pays a tuition bill with a bad check. He said it is also used in "exceptional cases of flagrant violations of personal check cashing."

The legal question is whether the office has the right to use an academic penalty to enforce misuse of the check cashing service. The regulations concerning administrative withdrawal allow for its use in cases of "financial indebtedness to the University which is overdue, following unsuccessful collection attempts." The rule does not elaborate as to what debts it includes.

Howland suggests "it could very well be illegal, and is definitely improper. I would advise against using it."

Staff Attorney Sidney Meyers feels "it would have to be tested. I won't say it is illegal, but I wouldn't use the administrative withdrawal in that situation. I would resort to the courts instead."

DyNyse, who has final say in the matter, said "until it is decided legally, we will not use that policy."

The decision of its legality will have to be made soon. Bursar Mishol is currently interviewing persons for a job that will be in charge of collecting the money for bad checks. What pressure and enforcement structure the new man will be able to use is yet undecided.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be on brink of obtaining what is needed. Meantime, make peace at home. Give special consideration to one who is temporarily confined or handicapped. Taurus, Libra persons could figure prominently. You receive home appliance gift.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Friend with romantic notions could also have extravagant tastes. See persons, situations as they actually exist. Avoid fooling yourself. Pisces, Virgo individuals play significant roles. Cloud of suspicion is removed if you speak in direct manner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Promised agreement or contract is subject to revision and delay. Be responsible enough to seek viable alternatives. Older individual is set in ways and tends to fight progress. Cooperate in civic projects. Benefits that accrue will more than make up for time, effort involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): What was attractive tends to loose its glitter. You will be rid of burden. Know it and plan future project. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently. Spread influence. Write and communicate. Submit manuscripts, formats. Re-establish special relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Burst of creativity surges to the surface. New starts in new directions are featured. Strive for greater independence of thought, action. Illustrate meanings. Be graphic in descriptions. Mark your style in indelible manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Joint efforts are emphasized. Contracts, agreements, relationships of a permanent nature command attention. You may be drawn between new venture and old obligation. Go slow enough to be thorough. Study fine print. Be aware of subtle nuances.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You have too many irons in fire. Some refuse to take you seriously. This can be corrected by displaying seriousness of purpose. Rediscover sense of direction. Fulfill resolutions concerning work, diet and health. Gemini, Sagittarius persons play key roles.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Check money sources. Take cash and let credit go. Those who whisper sweet nothings have just that to offer — nothing. Romantic interests could distract you from ultimate goal. Strive for balance. You can have fun without sacrificing principles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Property values should be reviewed. Make inquiries and wait for answers. You may be seeing through rose-colored glasses. What seemed solid could be built on structure of sand. Dedication is not enough. Further investigation is necessary.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): There could be plenty of sound and fury, but little substance. Review source material. Go by the book, not by mere whims. Taurus, Libra individuals appear to be involved. Relative expresses doubts behind your back.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid chasing rainbows. You may be spending too much for too little — draw in financial reins. Study Taurus message for valid hint. Don't mix money and friendship. If you do, you risk losing both. Romantic interlude is in picture.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Professional superior expresses doubts but is really on your side. Win your way by accepting added responsibility. Room will be made for you at the top. Know it, and deal in confident manner. Cancer, Capricorn persons figure prominently.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY your voice is an outstanding part of you. December could be one of your most significant months of 1974. Persons born under Taurus and Libra play important roles in your life.

Council favors gymnasts

By BEN CASWELL

Yesterday the Athletic Council made an endorsement in favor of the gymnastics committee and their efforts to persuade the Athletic department to provide a position for a full-time gymnastics coaching position after next season.

The unanimous decision came after a formal presentation by gymnastics committee members Steve Scuderi, Jay Aronstein, Betsy East, David White, Mike Casavana, and Gene Whelan. Aronstein presented the Council with background to what has been going on and why exactly the committee was in front of the Council. East then reiterated some of the written aims of the university regarding the objectives of the committee to the Council and Whelan stated his own feelings regarding the program and his possible transfer. Scuderi stressed the time factor involved and then Casavana summed things up in a unified statement.

Athletic Director Frank McInerny was present at the meeting but contributed almost nothing to the discussion that followed the presentation. Council chairman George Richardson controlled most of the discussion on the issue and it appeared that most of the Council members were uninformed about a decision that McInerney had said he received their approval of.

Once the discussion of the gymnastics issue began there were many discrepancies that the Council members were concerned with. The actual motion that they voted on was that the "Athletic Council would recommend to AD McInerney that the present quality and level of competition of gymnastics be retained and all possible actions be taken to keep it as such." Some Council members were concerned with what the implications of that statement would mean. Would it have any real effect on the decision or not? Others were concerned with whether or not different wording might change the impact of the motion. Chairman Richardson maintained the motion as one that was giving the gymnastics team special preference with regard to an out-of-New England schedule, but he then withdrew that statement when his misunderstanding of the motion was pointed out by another member and statements from the floor.

After the discussion was over and the vote was taken the general consensus was that this had been a token effort on the part of the Council and it was something that would not really hold that much weight.

Committee members plan to meet with Chancellor Bromery later this week and also plan to present their case before the Faculty Senate in a Thursday meeting. The time factor has come up time and again and it is something that must be taken into consideration by the Athletic Department. After the meeting AD McInerney was fairly non-commital, saying that he did not know when any change or affirmation would come.

Hopefully this meeting was more than just a token effort and the implications of the Council's vote will be felt by AD McInerney when he reviews the decision.

Its Thatcher vs. BKP in IM softball finals

By RUSS SMITH

It'll be the Redwoods from Thatcher and a team from BKP in the campus finals for the IM championship in mens softball.

While BKP easily handled Brotherhood, shuting them out, 7-0, the Redwoods knocked off the Spiders in the same fashion, 8-3.

The championship game will be on field No. 1, today (Wed.). Starting time is 4:45.

Because I've already seen the BKP's play, it wouldn't have been fair to ignore the team they have to beat to gain the title. So, I watched the Spider-Redwood game instead.

The Spiders won the toss, and took the field.

The game was close for the first three innings, with Thatcher holding a slim 3-1 lead. But that was it.

In the fourth, Thatcher sent ten men to the plate, and came up with five runs via only four hits, two errors, and a walk.

The Spiders got something of their own going in the bottom half of the inning, but some weird base running hurt them.

The started their attempted rally when the leadoff man, Steve, hit the ball over second base for what seemed to be an easy single. But, the Redwood second baseman dove and stopped the ball, even though he didn't have a play. One on. Jimmy then doubles to put two on with no outs. Now, here it is-George steps up. He hits a slow ground ball to the third baseman. He picks up the ball and throws to first for one. The Spider-runner on third faked to home to draw a throw. He also faked his own man on second who also thought he was going home (I knew he wasn't gonna run!), so he raced over to third. After arriving and seeing it already occupied had to go back to second. It took awhile, but he was finally tagged (while the run scored) for the Redwoods second double play of the game. It also hurt them because the next four men got hits, with only one run crossing the plate (a foul to third ended the inning with the bases loaded).

The Redwoods had the 8-3 lead going into the last inning, and they held it. When the Spiders came up for the last time this season, they were out on four pitches. Final: Redwoods 8-13-0; Spiders 3-10-4.

Colts seek kicker after rule changes

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Give a football man a rule and he'll not only learn how to live with it but how to overcome it, too.

So just when the National Football League is trying to discourage place-kicking to boost the offensive game, here's Joe Thomas of the Baltimore Colts in Europe looking for soccer players "who can really boom the ball.

"We are looking for a player to kick off and to kick the long field goals," said Thomas, the Colts' vice president and general manager. "We hope we find our man in Europe."

Thomas said Tuesday he had about 20 players under consideration, all playing soccer now in Yugoslavia, England, Scandinavia, Germany, Austria and Italy.

His immediate aim is to bring the best prospects to a try out in Vienna in about a week, then choose a kicker to take back to Baltimore.

About five European kickers are now playing in the NFL, and in fact it was their accurate, soccer-style booting that helped bring about the rules changes for the coming season.

The rules are meant to discourage field goals by returning the goal posts to the end line of the end zone, as in college football, and having missed field goal returned to the line of scrimmage, if it is beyond the 20-yard line. Kickoffs are to take place from the kicking team's 35-yard line, rather than the 40, in an effort to produce more running returns, always an exciting play for fans.

Gorillas face Dartmouth in season finale

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas will wrap up a very successful season tomorrow, when they travel to Hanover, New Hampshire to challenge the Big Green of Dartmouth College, starting at 2 p.m.

Garber's Gorillas now have a 10-2 record and a New England Championship. However, they must win tomorrow to prevent Brown from tying them for the championship.

This has been a very fruitful campaign for Coach Dick Garber and his squad. The high point in the season was the 10-9 win over Brown, last Wednesday. Coach Garber called it his "best win" and was very pleased with his team's overall tremendous performance. The Gorillas played excellent defense and offense and finally "realized their potential."

Although the Brown win culminated a great season, there was a big letdown on Monday morning when the national rankings came out. UMass was ranked ninth in that poll (the final one of the year), behind Rutgers University. UMass had been ranked ninth for several weeks and just before the Brown game were only six points behind 8th placed Rutgers. After the win over Brown there was a slight chance that the Gorillas might squeeze into the number eight slot. However the lacrosse ratings committee apparently decided that because Rutgers played a big-time schedule, that they would be the best choice. In that poll, UMass actually lost ground to Rutgers. They had originally trailed Rutgers by only six points but the last poll put them ten points behind. This seems hard to believe and leads one to suspect a little politics and prejudice on the part of the Southern, five-man, selection committee.

The game against Dartmouth, tomorrow, is not only the last game of the season but also the last game in a UMass uniform for six seniors: goalie John Rutledge, defensemen Rich Lally, and Russ Incorvia, and midfielders Hirsch Seidman, Bruce Sibson and Jack Moran. Rutledge, Seidman, and Lally were tri-captains this year. All six players will be ending brilliant careers.

Dartmouth is 3-7 on the year and is ranked seventh in New England. They have defeated Yale (12-7), Holy Cross (12-1), Middlebury (7-4), but were beaten by William's (8-7), Brown (19-6), and Cornell (22-3). Dartmouth should give UMass more competition than M.I.T., but they shouldn't be any tougher than the other teams the Gorillas have beaten.

LACROSSE NOTES — UMass didn't qualify for the NCAA tournament and they won't be going to any other tourney... Harry McVey leads the team in scoring with 77 points on 35 goals and 42 assists. Jeff Spooner is the leading goal scorer with 43 (he also has 21 assists).

Staff Photo-Joe Martins

Jubilant Gorillas Ben Pearson (30), Tim Murphy (6), and Andy Scheffer (10) rush onto the field after UMass's last second win over Brown a week ago. The victory, although quite satisfying was no help to the Gorillas in their quest for an NCAA tourney bid. They finished ninth in the nation. The top eight teams made the tournament.

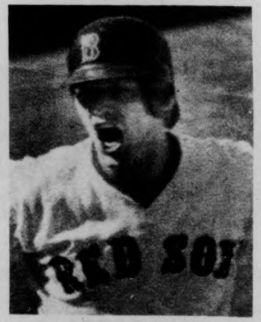
Boston 000 110 000 — 2
Cleveland 020 121 00X — 6

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Home runs by George Hendrick and Frank Duffy and the five-hit pitching of Gaylord Perry Tuesday night sparked the Cleveland Indians to a 6-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Perry, who now owns a 9-1 career mark over Boston, struck out two, walked four in posting his fifth victory against one loss and fifth complete game of the season. The veteran righthander has now pitched eight straight complete games against Boston, dating back to his only loss against the Red Sox on Aug. 9, 1972.

The Indians grabbed a 2-0 lead in the second inning on a run-scoring single by John Lowenstein and Jack Brohamer's sacrifice fly and added another run off Boston starter and loser Reggie Cleveland without the benefit of a hit in the fourth



CARLTON FISK

Hendrick drilled his sixth homer of the season following a walk to Charlie Spikes in the fifth and Duffy smacked his fourth homer over the left field fence in the sixth.

The only Boston runs came on solo homers by Carlton Fisk in the Fourth and Dick McAuliffe in the fifth.

Women end with loss 9-3

UMass wrapped up their regular season in a disappointing manner yesterday at the North Campus Field, by dropping one to Bridgewater State 9-3. The game was a close one for six innings but in the seventh the visitors teed off and sent the game out of reach.

Up to that point the game was neck and neck and thoughts of yet another extra inning game were flourishing. Micki Locke was pitching well, allowing just five scattered hits and four runs (two of those unearned). And her counterpart, Pat Hurley was pitching well, just allowing three hits and three runs. But with Bridgewater leading by a slim one run margin, in the seventh they suddenly exploded.

Bridgewater bombed Mick for five hits and three runs. And with no outs and the bases full, Vic Lentine relieved the UMass starter. Bridgewater greeted the reliever with a two-run single to center and UMass was down by six before the fire was finally extinguished. In the home half of the seventh Biz Bradley tried to spark a rally by singling to center and driving Terry Kennedy, who had walked, to second. But the damage was irreparable.

UMass goes out of the 1974 softball regular season with a record of 5-3. Each one of their losses was at the hands of clubs presently sporting 7-1 records, which is no embarrassment. But the club doesn't hang up the cleats just yet. On Thursday the team heads toward Kennedy Airport where they will board a 747 destined for Omaha, Nebraska. There, the UMass softball team will represent the East in the College World Series.

Best of luck team. It's been fun.

Crimson conquered by comeback

By STEVE SARACENO

Mark Fontaine's tenth-inning single capped a massive comeback that gave the Minutemen as 11-10 win over Harvard in a wacky slugfest yesterday at wind-ravaged Lorden Field.

Though trailing 10-4 into the eighth, the Minutemen managed to send the game into extra frames. Jerry Mondalto, a late-inning replacement, slammed a frozen-rope out as UMass tallied two in the eighth, and then hit another homer in the ninth, a dramatic three-run shot that evened the contest.

Rick Hansen - 2 homers

The next inning Fontaine hit his bases-loaded bounder into right and sent the Crimson into shock.

The early innings moved along at about the pace of Man's evolution. Then it got slower. Harvard, building up a ten-run total, disdained the big-inning and preferred to score one, two or three runs a frame, with batters repeatedly taking (mandatory?) three-and-two counts before walking.

To the horror of both side's hurlers, the wind was blowing out to center at gale-force all afternoon. Subsequently, wildlife in the undergrowth beyond the outfield fence was subjected to cowhide artillery, as six round-trippers were hit. Besides Mondalto's duo, Rick Hansen parked a couple, and so did Harvard's Rick LaCivita.

LaCivita (thy name is Swat) powered what looked like a sure rout with his five hits and seven RBI's, but alas, it was not to be, as that valuable player, Moe Mentum, was suddenly traded in the ninth after a disputed DP call went the Minutemen's way.

First-sacker Ron Beaurivage was almost seated in the dugout when he took Fontaine's relay bid to double-up Ed Durso. The field ump ruled Beaurivage's leg still on the bag, the Crimson took a fit, the fans laughed, and Dick Bergquist must have shielded a smile. But the call stood, and it inspired the ninth and tenth inning theatrics.

BUSTED BACKSTOPS — "John Olson, Mike Koperniak, Ron Beaurivage and the others on last year's team have a score to settle with Harvard", said Bergquist prior to game, referring to their feeling toward the team that eliminated them a year-ago in the New Englands... consider it settled...

...The two diehards sitting next to this agent who kept insisting there would be a comeback were not so crazy after all... John Olson pitched one abortive inning... Ron Beaurivage actually broke a base (no lie!)... Steve Blass must have snuck out on the mound yesterday—there were seventeen walks...

...Pitching patter: John McManus got the win, holding the previously pounding Crimson scoreless in the late going... Jerry Erb relieved Olson after the two-run first, and got in a lot of work... perhaps the rest of the Harvard staff was in suspended animation, because Crimson reliever Tom Bura stayed in a long time... despite being bombed...

...Coach Bergquist plans to bring up several JV's soon... Bob Hansen (Rick's brother and former UMass star) was recently promoted to the Milwaukee Brewers from Sacramento to (AAA)... He was hitting .325...

Jerry Mondalto - 2 homers

...Tens of thousands are expected to flock to tomorrow's game at Northeastern (slight exaggeration)... game time (write it on your hand) is 4:00...

Bruins Cup dreams dimmed at Philly, 4-2

By MARTIN LADER
UPI Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Bill Barber and Moose Dupont struck with electrifying quickness in the final six minutes of the game to power upstart Philadelphia to a 4-2 victory over the Boston Bruins Tuesday night and give the Flyers a commanding 3-1 lead in their Stanley Cup final.

The game was tied 2-2 when the Bruins had overcome a two goal deficit in the opening period when Barber took a desperation pass from Ross Lonsberry and fired a hard drive from the left faceoff circle that beat Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert at 14:25 of the final period. Lonsberry had set up the play when he outdueled Bobby Orr for the puck near the Boston blue line.

Dupont then iced the game two minutes and 15 seconds later when he took a cross ice pass from Bobby Clarke and beat Gilbert from about 30 feet out.

The Flyers, who now have beaten the Bruins three straight times after winning only four games from them in seven years, can become the first expansion team to win the Stanley Cup with another victory when the series resumes at Boston Thursday night.

Until Barber's climatic goal, virtually all the action was concentrated in the opening period when each time scored twice and a total of 21 penalties was called, including six majors for fighting.

Showing the same brand of hospitality they received in Boston when the Bruins on both occasions scored the first two goals, the Flyers this time spurted to a 2-0 lead in the first five and a half minutes of play. Rick MacLeish, the leading scorer of the playoffs, started it with a power play goal of 4:40 and burly Dave Schultz, not known for his fancy footwork, followed just 50 seconds later after carrying the puck up ice by himself.

But the dormant Bruin power play, harshly criticized by Coach Bep Guidolin, got Boston back into the game at the 7:12 mark. Phil Esposito, benched for most of the third period in Sunday's third game, broke in behind the Philadelphia defense to beat Bernie Parent with a short poke and Andre Savard then tied the score at 11:24 as both teams had only three skaters on the ice.

Until Esposito's goal, Boston had converted only one of 18 man-power advantages in the finals.

MacLeish got his 12th goal of the playoffs, but only his first in the final round, when he deflected a drive from the right point by defenseman Tom Bladon. Schultz then thrilled the sellout crowd of 17,007 at the Spectrum when he took a pass in his own zone from Don Saleski and lumbered up ice by himself. His shot went between the legs of Boston defenseman Carol Vadnais and beat a surprised Gilbert on the stick side from about 30 feet away.

There were 60 penalty mimutes whistled in the opening period, 31 against Boston and 29 against Philadelphia but only seven minors were called the rest of the way.

The Flyers' inspirational recording of Kate Smith's "God Bless America" was sung before the game and Philadelphia now has a 36-3-1 record in the five years that the record has been used on selected occasions.

JV's finish with 10-3 win

By BILL DOYLE

"As far as I'm concerned, we're the best J.V. baseball team in New England. We've won the mythical New England J.V. baseball title," Coach Jeff McKay exclaimed after his team shellaced Harvard 10-3 yesterday.

The Minutemen did indeed play as if they were unbeatable as they pelted Harvard pitching for 18 hits which included 2 homeruns, 4 triples, and 3 doubles. UMass got at least one hit in every inning except the eighth. Every UMass starter except one had a hit.

After two were out, Harvard erupted for their three runs in the first inning off UMass starting pitcher Jim Witherell. A bases loaded double was the big blow. From then on, Witherell and reliever Gordon Smith shut out Harvard, limiting them to 6 hits.

Steve Wright hit a solo homer in the bottom of the first and after Jim Cullen singled and Bob Moore hit a long ground rule double, Tim Foltz brought UMass even at 3-3 with a two run sigle. UMass scored 2 runs in the third to go ahead for good. Tim Foltz scored the winning run on a wild pitch.

In the seventh, UMass put the game out of reach with 5 runs. Tim Foltz tripled and scored again on a wild pitch. Paul Abramowicz singled, Bill Tremblay tripled, John Kearney reached on an error and Steve Wright completed the scoring with another towering home run.

Tim Foltz and Jim Cullen had three hits each to pace the Minutemen attack. Bob Moore had a double and a triple. John Kearney, Paul Abramowicz and Art Weinslaw each had two hits and of course Mr. Wright had his 2 home runs.

The J.V. team completed its season with a fine 11-3 record. Many J.V. players look as if they have a shot at playing varsity ball next year. Coach McKay cites catcher Bob Moore, outfielder Steve Wright, shortstop Jim Cullen, and pitcher Dave Tewhill among others as having the ability to play varsity ball based on this year's play.

Bromery releases plan for Whitmore reorganization

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has released his plan for Amherst campus administration reorganization to campus governance groups for their recommendations.

In a statement attached to the plan Bromery cited three functional defects in the current administration which he hopes will be rectified by the reorganization.

Defects cited are:

—The lack of a clear definition of the functional responsibilities of the various offices of the administration.

"In the past," said Bromery, "responsibility for a particular function has been shared between two and three offices making it impossible to clearly fix accountability within one office."

—For the next few years the University will be faced with serious financial difficulties.

"This makes it imperative," said Bromery, "that we manage our limited resources effectively and efficiently. To do so we must make both qualitative and quantitative changes in the nature of our long-range planning efforts."

—An extraordinary increase in the number of requests for information from the President's Office, the Board of Trustees and many state and federal agencies.

"These requests could have serious implications for the functioning of the Amherst campus, and" said Bromery, "therefore demand an extremely careful consideration and response."

Bromery said that he is committed to implementing the plan with no new increases in administrative personnel. He hopes to see full implementation of the plan by the end of the 1975 academic year.

Also included in the statement was a listing of the various phases of the reorganization. They follow:

Phase 1: Transfer of the functions of the auxiliary enterprise group (Campus Center, Dining Commons, Residence Halls) from under the control of Administrative Services to Student Affairs reporting directly to the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

Phase II: The establishment of the Office of Finance and Management. This will necessitate the transfer of the functions performed by the Accounting Office from Administrative Services to the Office of Finance and Management.

Phase III: The establishment of the Office of Support Services. Although the establishment of this office does not require a transfer of functions it will require a major effort to organize the Employee Relations section.

Phase IV: The establishment of the Office for Institutional Advancement. Although the final structure of this office will not be known until the Committee to Advise the Chancellor on Development Activities has prepared their final recommendations, it is expected that the functions now performed by the Public Affairs and Alumni sections will be transferred from the control of the Chancellor's Office to the Office of Institutional Advancement.

Bromery also said that he is exploring various possibilities for functional reorganization within the Student Affairs and Academic areas.

Conte on impeachment, education & energy

By FREDERIC C. WEISS
Special to the Collegian

A Collegian staff member and columnist went down to Washington on Tuesday to interview Rep. Silvio Conte. In tomorrow's paper read his exclusive interviews with Senator Ted Kennedy and Majority Leader of the House, Thomas "Tip" O'Neill.

Washington D.C.: Walking in to Congressman Silvio Conte's Office in the Cannon building, one is greeted by a gallery of photographs ranging from Richard Nixon to Eugene McCarthy. What kind of guy keeps such a collection of opposites, enemies, and ideological variables? Further on were the following pictures, some with warm inscriptions: Gerald Ford, John Lindsay, Ted Williams, Dwight Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy.

After talking to the Congressman, the riddle of the pictures is solved; Silvio Conte is a combination of moderation, energy, progressive Republicanism, and most notably New England. He talks in demonstratives; pushing words at you. Telling you what he's done, what he wants to do, and the frustrations that go into getting things accomplsihed. He speaks quickly, but clearly, and seems to depend on what he knows, and a few choice notes in front of him rather than pause and talk guardedly.

When questioned about the problems of the President, and the Watergate scandal, Conte speaks with a tone of frustration. He is a Republican in a very moderate, somewhat Democratic district. The feedback from his own district (much of which consists of a very informal poll that the Congressman personally sent out) has been overwhelmingly against President Nixon. Many of Conte's constituents have energetically called for the President's ouster, and last week at a town meeting in

Senate unresolved on overfunding problem

By ROBERT F. SULLIVAN
MDC Special

The Student Senate, in its last session of the academic year, failed to resolve the budget problem caused by $170,000 in overfunding.

During the four-hour meeting the Senate voted on amendments to cut 15 per cent from the controversial organization project, raise the student activities tax by 50 cents, and review funding of other RSO groups.

But the lack of a quorum prevented a final vote on the measures. At this point all budget items are up in the air, awaiting final action by the Executive Committee tomorrow.

The amendments were voted on a budget proposal by Treasurer Paul Hamel. A key element of his plan called for a massive 47 per cent slash in the Organization Project, a group funded last year to unionize the student body. Spokesman John Fisher called the proposal "incredibly foolish" and warned that its passage would cripple the project.

Other aspects of the original proposal called for decreases in the transportation department grant of $40,000 and the $30,000 budget of the RSO staff. It was recommended that other existing programs be maintained at near present levels.

Debate on a motion to cut the funding of Drum by $8,000 provoked a sharp response by third world senators and others, who felt the move was more related to dislike of the publication than fiscal austerity. The motion was defeated.

Interview with a groundskeeper

'Laugh...even when you don't feel funny'

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

The last song.
I am leaving.
And I think of a man I met here and I hope that on the outside there will be other men, other persons, as simple and as good as he.

"You know that you're so nice that if I win a million dollars in the lottery I'm gonna give you a quarter of it, yup."

University groundskeeper John Sobasko chewed the words out to me past an unlit cigar. He turned to his co-workers who were smiling and then let go with a few, high-pitched he-haws.

Sobasko is 59, short and barrel-chested. His legs are crippled. He walks by making a hopping motion from one leg to the other. From the waist up his body leans awkwardly back, his arms sometimes dangling behind him.

Sobasko has been a University groundskeeper for ten years. He has never been promoted.

"I don't want to be no foreman," he said. "I'm happy now, I don't want no change."

His face is weathered and wrinkled; his charcoal-gray hair, tipped with silver, lies flat against his head in a bowl cut.

He leaned on a shovel and there was dirt under his fingernails and dirt in the tiny crevices in the skin on his hands.

The grounds surrounding Whitmore and the campus pond are his work territory.

Staff Photo-Joe Martins

John Sobasko

Sobasko works 40 hours per week, "shoveling snow, sanding, salting, weeding and chipping — putting around the trees the chips, you know?"

He spends nights and weekends driving the elderly people in his community, Northampton, from place to place.

"What is life? You got to help people," he said.

"Tell her about when you were dump supervisor in Southwest and about the time you saved the Food Science building from flooding, John,'' said Sobasko's young foreman.

"You be careful who you call supervisor,'' said Sobasko. I waren't no supervisor but just in charge for a little while. I ain't telling her nothing. You tell her what I'm like."

"Well, I tell you, I yell at John 14 or 15 times a day and all he does is laugh, he just laughs," said the foreman.

And Sobasko said, "Well, life is how you make it. You've got to laugh sometimes even when you don't feel funny."

Sobasko said that he never gets angry at the University students.

"I never get mad at nobody," he said.

He said he remembers a time a few years ago, however, when there was excessive litter around the campus pond.

"I complained that I didn't want to pick up that litter no more and the students they said that we oughtta put waste barrels down there. So we did and there was no more litter. We put baskets all around and there ain't been much of a problem since."

"Some of the students been real friendly to me sometimes and the professors too, they always say hi, I don't know their names but they're friendly to me."

Sobasko is a grade school graduate. "I think I went a little high school too," he said.

Before coming to UMass Sobasko worked at several other jobs.

At a used-car garage in Hadley he reconditioned the interiors of cars.

"And I looked for money down the seats," he said.

"And well, once I worked at Westover Field," he said proudly. "I did some plastic work — aircraft tubing. At Westover, the Air Force field."

The stooped-over, gray-haired, window-washer at Whitmore is a special friend of Sobasko's crew; each day at 10 a.m. when the crew stops in the Whitmore lobby for a break he comes to wash the windows there and say hello to them.

"He's the most popular guy on campus," the window-washer told me and Sobasko laughed and said, "Yup."

"We're just the nicest guys on campus," said one of Sobasko's co-workers and the whole crew guffawed and the foreman said it was time to go back to work.

"I'll always remember you," said Sobasko and waddled out to the Physical Plant truck.

Bye-bye John.

Part three

Chronicle of an African liberation struggle

This is the third in a four part series analysis detailing the liberation struggles of emerging African nations.

By RUDOLPH JONES
Black Affairs Editor

The destruction of colonialism and the struggle against imperialism constitutes one of the outstanding characteristics of our times. The intensive development of capitalism in the second half of the nineteenth century, based on monopolies and the competition for raw materials, led to the first great partition of the globe at the turn of the century. Africa was divided among the major European powers, namely England, France and Germany. They conquered the African peoples by force and went on the rampage, stealing material and human wealth of the continent through war and the technical superiority of their means of production.

But imperialism, "the last stage capitalism" could not escape its own contradiction, and after World War I, the victorious powers proceeded to a new division Germany from direct exploitation of African peoples and countries. During the final phase of the global conflict, the victory of the October Revolution, leading to the final implantation of socialism over one-sixth of the world's land area, dealt the first great blow to imperialism.

World War II was the result of the antagonism characterizing the development of imperialism. It decisively influenced the destiny of oppressed peoples, principally the African peoples. Dependent people were awakened to the fight for liberation the final stage in the obliteration of imperialism was thus began. The people in Portuguese Guinea were one of these dependent peoples.

The people of Guinea are not only determined to totally eliminate Portuguese domination, they are also concerned with obliterating exploitation of man by man, which according to Cabral, is the biggest obstacle in the way of the development and progress of a people beyond National Liberation. "They are determined to take an active part in the building of a new Africa, truly independent and progressive, founded on work and justice in which the creative power of our people which has been stifled for centuries will find its truest and most constructive expression.

The people of Guinea by fighting against Portuguese colonialism are participating actively in the African revolution — which is of terrible significance today. This revolution which according to Cabral, means the transformation of our present life in the direction of progress. The prerequisite for this elimination of foreign economic domination, on which every other type of domination is dependent, our vigilance means the rigorous selection of friends, a constant watch and struggle against enemies (both internal and external) and the neutralization or elimination of all factors opposing progress."

History teaches that this struggle has never been an easy one. There are innumerable obstacles. For, after, a country has won political autonomy which Guine has done, they have to face the last and most devastating form of imperialism — neo-colonialism. This is the most dangerous and most difficult fight of oppressed people.

Most of the people in Guinea live in the rural areas where two distinct groups can be distinguished: The Fulas which can be classified as semifeudal and the Balantes which according to Cabral is without any defined form of state organization.

Among the Balantes there is no social stratification. There is just a council of elders in each village or group of villagers who decide on the day to day problems. The land is considered to belong to the village but each family receives the amount of land needed to ensure subsistence for itself, and the instruments of production are owned by families or individuals. Balantes women participate in production. Unlike the Fulas women who also take part in production but do not own what the produce and have no rights, Balantes women own what they produce, which gives them a priviledged position.

In the towns among the European we find the same social stratification as that of Portugal. There are the high officials, and the managers who have practically no contacts with the other Europeans strata. They are followed by the medium officials, the small European traders, the people employed in commerce and the members of liberal professions. They are followed by the workers who are mainly unskilled workers.

Among the Africans, the higher officials, the middle and members of the liberal profession are in one group which are followed by petty bourgeoisie. Next come the wage-earners which include dockworker, domestic servants, who are mostly men in Guinea and the factory workers.

What is the general attitude of these various groups towards the national liberation? Cabral argues that among the Fulas, the chiefs and their entourages — are tied to Colonialism. They are closely tied to the Portuguese authorities. The articians are extremely dependent on the chiefs, simply because the chiefs are the only ones with necessary purchasing power to buy their products, mostly content with following the chiefs, some however are "well-disposed towards opposition to Portuguese colonialism." With regards to the Fulas their fundamental aim is to make bigger profits. They support the struggle to the extent that they are given some tangible rewards.

The Fula peasantry have a strong tendency to follow their chiefs but through thorough and intensive work they were mobilized. Pertaining to the Balantes, this group has put up much more resistance against the Portuguese than the other group. It is among this group asserts Cabral that the idea of national liberation was most readily accepted. The Europeans as can be expected are hostile to the idea of National Liberation. "They are the human elements of the Colonial state in our country and they therefore reject a priori any idea of National Liberation there. It has to be said that the Europeans most bitterly opposed to the idea of national liberation are the workers, while we have sometimes found considerable sympathy for our struggle among certain members of the European petty bourgeoisie."

Why is Portugal in Africa and how has it managed to keep on to its territories in Africa given its state of underdevelopment. "As a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (N.A.T.O.) since 1949, Portugal has consistently attempted to convince her allies, especially the United States, that she is fighting against communism in Africa and that her purpose there is not colonialism but the creation of a 'lusotropical civilization' similar to Brazil."

The official Portuguese position overseas has evolved from the philosophy of imperial destiny and the colonial mistique that has guided policy-makers for many

Dick Tuck

Making a nerd of Nixon

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
MDC Staff

Dick Tuck, long time associate of the President, said last night that Nixon will resign soon.

Tuck cited as his source a friend of his who formerly worked in the White House and still has connections there. He emphasized that this source has been very accurate in the past.

Tuck has become famous as a political prankster by pulling stunts designed to embarrass and expose Nixon since 1950.

H. R. Haldeman said before the Watergate committee that they hired Donald Sergettii to do what Dick Tuck had been doing so ably all along."

Tuck also said the President has been plea bargaining with members of the House over the conditions of his resignation.

"He will say he is incapacitated" to prevent further impeachment proceedings said Tuck. In the event the President becomes incapacitated Gerald Ford will become acting President, but Nixon will still officially be President.

Tuck claimed this is why the democratic leadership has stopped asking for resignation and pushing for impeachment.

When asked how the plea bargaining can be stopped, Tuck said he didn't think there is anything that can stop it.

When Nixon was running for Senate in 1950 Tuck was asked to arrange a speech for Nixon at the University of Southern California.

Tuck arranged the speech on a day and time when hardly anyone would be around and had it in an auditorium that held about 4,000 people. Forty people showed up.

During Nixon's '62 campaign for governor of California, Tuck made two signs that said "Welcome Mr. Nixon" and had something written in Chinese underneath.

Tuck gave the signs to two Chinese children to hold during one of Nixon's speeches. Nixon posed for pictures with the children until he found out that the Chinese part made reference to one of his old scandals (the Hughes fund).

He then grabbed one of the children, took her sign away, and tore it up in front of television cameras.

When asked if he thought there was a conspiracy to assassinate President Kennedy, Tuck said no. He explained that Robert Kennedy, who was Attorney General at the time "would have hunted to the end of the earth" anybody he thought might have been in a conspiracy to kill his brother.

Conte on education

Amherst, the community demanded that the Congressman press for Nixon's impeachment.

Conte is resisting this pressure, and points out that he voted to allocate money for the investigation of Watergate by the Judiciary Committee, and also voted to give them subpoena power.

The Congressman said, "I'm doing everything I'm supposed to do, under the Constitution and under the Law!"

"What happens here," Conte continued, "is that a lot of people don't understand what the procedure is. The Judiciary Committee has to have these hearings. If they find that there is evidence here under the Constitution, then they will bring a bill of particulars to the House. At that point we go vote on it. Until you see the bill of particulars there is no one who can say how they will vote."

Conte, "proud" of his record, said, "I've done a lot of work on education and conservation".

Conte finally was placed on the Health, Education, Welfare and Labor Committee in the House, giving up a total of 24 years in seniority on two committees to gain that post. The Congressman stressed that he had worked hard to get more money for such programs in Education as the Basic Opportunity Grant, Work Study, and Student Loans.

However the Congressman believes that his specialty in the House concerns the problems of the energy crisis. Conte says that he is fighting to prevent any more American Oil from being shipped to any foreign land. Commenting on his work in the energy field he noted: "I'm very upset about the off-shore drilling and the joint ventures by the big oil companies, where they're getting together to decide what they are going to bid."

However on one of the major issues concerning the energy crisis, the potential use of nuclear energy, the Congressman is vague. Conte limits his influence to the federal level, and believes that the question of whether nuclear energy should be used or not is basically a state government issue."

When pressed further on the question of nuclear energy; the dangers, and Congressional power to discourage rather than encourage its development, the Congressman admitted that he was "not an expert" on nuclear energy.

Joel Carlinsky, 32, of Holyoke was arrested by campus police last Wednesday for trespassing.

As a result of an ensuing struggle, involving a gun, which occured between the Campus Center and Hasbrouk Hall, Carlinsky was also charged with assault and batter of a policeman (two counts), assault and battery with a deadly weapon (two counts), possession of a firearm on campus, and possession of an unlicensed firearm, police said.

Police reports stated that Carlinsky attempted to use his gun.

Carlinsky claimed that he never drew his gun, but that he did inform police that he had one on his person.

"The gun was not brought out into the daylight," he said, "until the police pulled it from my pocket. I never made a move for it and never intended to."

Police reports also state that there were between ten and twenty witnesses to the incident. So far none have come forward, however.

If there are witnesses who wish to come forward and volunteer information to support either the story of the police or Carlinsky, they are asked to call 549-4540 on behalf of Carlinsky or 545-2121, which is the campus police number.

Corker to request CC fee increase

By MIKE KNEELAND

The Chairman of the Rents and Fees Committee says a proposal will be made tonight to increase the Campus Center fee by $12 per student.

John Marciniec said the increase is being requested by Campus Center Director John Corker. In a memo from Corker to the Campus Center Board of Governors, the director said an increase from $53.40 to $64 is needed to cover the remodeling costs, operating deficit and the Center's debt.

Corker wrote: "This past year the Campus Center has been effective in reducing this operating deficit and the anticipated loss for 1974 will be $110,000. Every effort will be made to eliminate this deficit in 1974-75 but definite expectations are for a break even budget the following year."

Chairman Marciniec said he does not expect the bill will be passed by his 10-member committee.

"Students are getting nothing out of the building now so to pay more is ridiculous," he told the Collegian.

He said the area presidents, when told of the proposal, would take no "formal stand" on the issue but said they did not consider the proposal to be in the students' interests.

Marciniec said his committee is primarily a "recommendation group" and that the proposal will need final approval by the Board of Trustees.

He said, however, that the general policy of the Rents and Fees Committee is, "no increase in funds without increase in service."

Marciniec also accused the Board of Governors of making no strong attempt to "try and find other means of financing, besides increasing students' fees."

The Committee will meet at 7 p.m. in a Campus Center Room to be announced on the daily schedule and it is open to the public.

State dept. claims Haitian migration due to economics

MIAMI — The state Department continued to deny that the majority of Haitians fled as a result of political persecution.

In its review of approximately 400 cases, the State Department office of Refugee and Migration Affairs found that over 90 per cent of the Haitian refugees had fled for "economic reasons", said Chris Pappas the deputy director for programming.

Under present immigration regulations only refugees who can show a "well-founded fear of persecution because of shift in a particular social group may be granted asylum," Pappas said.

Refugee cases which might involve prosecution, are referred to the State Department by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which makes final decisions following recommendations by the Department.

The Miami office of the Immigration office said that six of the Haitain refugees have been granted political asylum.

Since Dec. 12, 1972 approximately 800 Haitian refugees have entered the U.S. illegally, most arrived in over crowded boats, Thomas J. Brobson of the Immigration office said. "They are given a hearing by an immigration judge and those applying for asylum are given an opportunity to state their reasons.

"The requests are then given to the State Dept. which makes recommendations,'' State Department spokesman said.

Brobson reported that the information given by the refugees when they first arrived indicated that most had come seeking new job opportunities.

Some of the boats sailed from ports in the Bahamas where the Haitians had been employed for years on special work permits.

As independence form Great Britain approached, new work permits were not issued because of demands by natives that Haitians were taking jobs from citizens.

The Haitian Movement in the Miami area are protesting that thousands of Cubans have been allowed into the country as political refugees by the U.S. Government while Haitians have been denied the same opportunity.

The jailing of many Haitian refugees is also being critisized, pending the outcome of cases that are now in Federal courts.

"We would like for the refugees to be released from detention until their cases have been decided," expressed John Schauer, of the World Service, one of a number of church groups that have been supporting the demands of the White House to ignore them

Judiciary subpoenas tapes and diary

WASHINGTON [UPI]-The House Judiciary Committee by lopsided votes issued two more subpoenas to President Nixon yesterday to try to get tapes of 11 Watergate-related conversations and four portions of his daily diary.

The committee, before returning to closed session to hear more evidence and possibly some of the tapes it already possesses, also set a vote for today to demand 66 more tapes for its inquiry into the possible impeachment of the President.

But the committee later canceled the vote for today after realizing that the White House had not formally rejected an April 19 request for those tapes. As a result, the committee decided to meet an 10 a.m. Thursday in closed session.

A White House spokesman immediately indicated the subpoenas would be ignored.

With only ranking Republican Rep. Edward Hutchinson of Michigan dissenting, the committee voted 37 to 1 to subpoena tapes of 11 conversations held on April 4, 1972 - before the break-in at the Watergate and June 20 and June 23, 1972, immediately after the bugging attempt.

Then on a series of four votes, the smallest margin being 29 to 9, the committee asked for entries in Nixon's daily diary, covering April through July, 1972; February through April, 1973; July 12 through July 31, 1973; and October, 1973.

Special counsel John M. Doar said his staff planned to come back to the committee to ask for subpoenas dealing with material being presented it. The staff has requested tapes of 75 Watergate conversations in all.

The 9:30 a.m. EDT vote today set by Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., was to decide whether to issue another subpoena for 20 tapes dealing with the settlement of the International Telephone and Telegraph Co. case and 46 dealing with milk producers' contributions to Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

Because of the length of time taken to discuss the subpoenas, Rodino expressed doubt the committee would be able to meet his timetable for beginning open, televised hearings next Tuesday.

Committee members admit there is little they can do to force the President to comply. Nixon answered the committee's previous subpoena for 42 tapes by instead releasing transcripts of some of them.

Gerald L. Warren, a presidential spokesman, would not comment on the yesterday vote except to say that Nixon believes the committee "has all the information it needs to proceed with the impeachment proceeding."

Police head off one of 30 picketing Yale service employees arrested in New Haven when they tried to prevent carpenters from entering the construction site of Yale's Mellon Art Center. About 100 union members were involved in the demonstration.

Haig tells committee about Hughes donation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig went before the Senate Watergate committee yesterday and, with President Nixon, waiving executive privilege, answered all questions about the $100,000 campaign contribution from Howard Hughes.

Committee Chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., emerged from the closed session with Haig to say the claim of executive privilege the President's top aide invoked in his previous appearance had been lifted.

Ervin said Nixon lawyer J. Fred Buzhardt informed him "the President has waived executive privilege as to the Hughes matter," and that Haig "has answered every question so far."

The threat of a possible contempt citation had been raised if the President again instructed Haig to claim executive privilege, as he did in his appearance two weeks ago in the committee's investigation of the Hughes contribution to C. G. "Bebe" Rebozo, the President's millionaire friend.

Ervin said the committee nad learned from Haig that there had been "considerable discussion" in the White House about the Hughes matter beginning in May, 1973. He gave no further details.

The Watergate committee voted earlier in the day to delay for the second time the issuance of its final report, given Senate permission.

Committee vice chairman Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn., suggested in advance that Haig risked possible contempt action should he again refuse to talk.

Baker even hinted the committee "might hold the President in contempt" if he insisted on ordering Haig not to cooperate, but said he thought that prospect was "highly unlikely."

Rebozo, Nixon's millionaire friend, told the committee last month that he had discussed the Hughes matter with Haig.

At a separate morning meeting, the committee voted to ask the full Senate for permission to delay filing its final report, now due May 28, until June 30. The panel was scheduled originally to issue the report Feb. 28, but obtained a three-month extension from the Senate.

Ervin said he would seek another one-month delay, along with permission to file supplemental reports later if necessary and to continue the panel's subpoena powers.

Ervin told reporters the final report would "make recommendations, for legislation and stop at that," drawing no conclusions of criminal involvement in the scandal so as not to "prejudice the rights" of those involved in the House impeachment inquiry.

Chapin jailed for perjury in "dirty tricks" testimony

WASHINGTON [UPI]-Former presidential appointments secretary Dwight L. Chapin, saying the edited White House transcripts do not show President Nixon to be the man he really is, was sentenced yesterday to 10 to 30 months in prison for perjury.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell handed Chapin the same penalty on both counts of lying to the Watergate grand jury but said the sentances would run concurrently. He granted Chapin's motion for a stay of sentance pending the outcome of his appeal.

"You apparently chose to place your loyalty to your superiors above your obligations as a citizen," Gesell told Chapin, the second member of the so-called "dirty tricks" team of the 1972 Nixon re-election campaign to be sentenced.

Chapin, 33, wearing a light gray plaid suit and clasping his hands behind him, told the judge he had nothing to say. He showed no emotion as sentence was pronounced.

In the audience, his wife, Susan, sat clear-eyed and with arms folded. But she and her husband smiled for photographers as they left the courthosse.

Outside, reporters asked Chapin if the White House granscripts reflected how business was conducted there. "I think the transcripts are but a minute portion of all the business transacted in the White House," said Chapin, who helped plan Nixon's 1972 trips to China and Russia.

"I don't think you can take that little piece of history, which may have been the darkest days of Richard Nixon's career, and construct from that a mosaic that tells you all about that man, and I think that is what has happened."

Chapin said the sentence was merely "round 1" and that he would carry his case to the Supreme Court if necessary. Under the sentence, he would be eligible for parole in 10 months.

Chapin refused to discuss with reporters the activities of Donald Segretti, former Treasury Department lawyer who pleaded guilty and served about four months for illegal distribution of campaign literature in the Florida primary.

Chapin was indicted in November on four counts of lying about Segretti's activities to a grand jury shortly after the 1972 break-in at the Democratic offices in the Watergate complex.

Israelis storm guerillas holding hostages

MA'ALOT, Israel [UPI]-Israeli troops yesterday stormed a schoolhouse where three Palestinian guerrillas held 85 students hostage for hours and killed the Arabs in a close-range battle that left at least 16 children dead and 70 other persons wounded or injured.

The attack on the school, 35 minutes before the guerrillas said they would blow it up with everyone inside if their demands were not met, brought the casualty toll in the 14-hour Arab raid to 25 dead and 88 hurt.

It was the costliest attack inside Israel since the Lod Airport massacre on May 30, 1972, when 28 died and 81 were wounded.

In addition to those who were killed or hurt in the brief schoolhouse battle:

—Two Arab women were killed and six wounded when the guerrillas attacked their bus just south of the Lebanese frontier.

—An Israeli man, his wife and one of his children were killed and another child wounded when the guerrillas invaded their apartment on route to the schoolhouse.

—Eleven students and teachers were hurt when they jumped out of the school to escape the guerrilla raiders at the start.

—One Israeli soldier was slain by a sniper bullet from the building.

The schoolhouse toll was announced by Prime Minister Golda Meir in a nationwide television speech.

The guerrillas had threatened to blow up the three-story school building in this Israeli hilltop town four miles from the border with Lebanon unless Israel released 20 jailed Palestinians and permitted them to fly to Syria or Cyprus.

Mrs. Meir in her address said the government decided "that we do not conduct wars on the backs of children and decided to accept their demands and release the 20 terrorists."

But, Mrs. Meir said, the guerrillas changed their minds and demanded that 50 per cent of the children be flown out with them and the released prisoners to an Arab country. At the same time, she said, the guerrillas refused to extend their 6 p.m. deadline.

"There would have been no possible way of carrying it out," Mrs. Meir said. "When they told us they wouldn't extend the time, we know we had no other possible way.

"The children were in danger. At 5:30 p.m., the army went into action."

Israeli soldiers climb into position around the schoolhouse where Arab guerrillas held about 75 school children hostage in this town on the Lebanese frontier. The siege ended in a shootout in which 25 persons were killed.

DeSpinola advocates democracy for Africa

LISBON, Portugal [AP] — Gen. Antonio de Spinola, head of Portugal's military junta, was installed as president yesterday and warned minorities against interfering with plans for democracy in Africa or at home.

He said the future of Portuguese Africa, beset by revolt for 13 years, would have to be decided democratically by those who live there.

"They will have to be left complete freedom of decision, and in Africa, as here, we will prevent in every way pressure from minorities whoever they may be that could hinder the free development of the democratic process," Spinola said.

He did not specify what minorities he meant. In Africa, the whites are a minority. In the opinion of many Portuguese, the black rebels are also minorities. In Portugal, the junta has been trying to prevent left-wing minorities from taking over important sections of government and private business.

Spinola, who led the April 25 coup that ended 42 years of dictatorship in Portugal, spoke at a simple ceremony in the throne room of Queluz Palace on the outskirts of Lisbon. Outside a crowd of about 15,000 chanted, "Spinola, Spinola."

Inside there were only about 150 officials, diplomats and newsmen.

Among them was Adelino da Palma Carlos, due to be named premier today. But there was no black representative from the more than 13 million in Portuguese Africa.

The cream and gold hall, about 40 yards long, was decorated with red carnations — symbol of resistance to the government of Premier Marcello Caetano, ousted by the April 25 coup.

Ulster violence rises as Protestants strike

BELFAST [UPI] — British troops yesterday shot and killed two men who had been caught in the act of making bombs, the British army said.

The deaths came as a general strike mounted by militant Protestants crippled Northern Ireland industry, with sporadic street violence and power blackouts reported in some areas.

The deaths raised the fatality toll in almost five years of violence among Northern Ireland's majority Protestants, minority Roman Catholics and security forces to 1,020.

"Our soldiers challenged the men three times to put up their hands and surrender," a British army spokesman said. "Instead the men dived as if to pick up weapons. We opened fire."

The incident occurred at an abandoned farmhouse near Newry, close to the Irish Republic border. The spokesman said a British patrol had discovered two beerkegs of explosives and bomb-making equipment at the farmhouse yesterday morning.

Turkey may free marijuana lifers

ANKARA, Turkey [UPI] — Three Americans once sentenced to death in Turkey for drug smuggling became eligible for freedom in 12 years' time yesterday as a result of a partial amnesty bill passed by the Turkish National Assembly.

Kathryn Ann Zenz, 28, of Lancaster, Wis., Joann M. McDaniel, 29, of Coos Bay, Ore., and Robert E. Hubbard, 23, of San Antonio, Tex., had their life sentences for smuggling marijuana reduced by one-third under the controversial amnesty legislation, which still faces rough sailing in Turkish politics.

The three Americans had originally been sentenced to death but a court commuted the sentences to life. Life terms are remissible after 36 years under Turkish law. Prisoners get a third of their time off for good behavior and the amnesty cuts off another third, making the Americans eligible for freedom after 12 years.

About 80 per cent of Turkey's 65,000 prison inmates will benefit by the amnesty. Specifically excluded at the last minute were political prisoners.

Turkish Premier Bulent Ecevit had sought to include political prisoners in the amnesty but 20 deputies of the right-wing National Salvation party, a coalition partner with Ecevit's Republican People's party in his government, broke ranks and voted against two clauses on amnesty for political prisoners.

U.S. Senate kills anti-bussing bill

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON [AP] – The Senate defeated yesterday an amendment to a $23-billion education bill designed virtually to end busing of grade and high school students for desegregation purposes.

The amendment was defeated on a 47 to 46 vote to adopt a motion by Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., to table it.

The vote was a major victory for civil rights forces who succeeded in getting the Senate to maintain its historic position against such anti-busing proposals.

Other efforts to add anti-busing language to the bill were expected to be made before final passage of the bill next Tuesday.

Just before defeating the Gurney amendment, the Senate crushed a watered-down antibusing amendment offered by Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind. The vote on the Bayh proposal was 84 to 9.

In the 20 years since the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision, the Senate always has rejected such proposals although the House has supported them recently.

The vote was a defeat for President Nixon who first proposed the language in the defeated amendment sponsored by Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R-Fla.

"I think Americans are sick and tired of being used as social guinea pigs," Gurney added. "To treat students as pools of racial resources to cure racial imbalance is repugnant and is certainly not required under the 14th Amendment."

The amendment was similar to the anti-busing provision put into the bill in the House when that body acted on it in March.

Thus the final decision on the issue will have to be worked out in the conference between the two branches on the legislation.

Gurney's amendment would have established the policy that school assignments should be made on the basis of the neighborhood school.

HEW to sue if imbalance repealer passes

BOSTON [UPI] – The U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) is considering taking Massachusetts to court for violating the 1964 Civil Rights Act if the legislature repeals the state's racial imbalance law.

And should the legislature override Gov. Francis W. Sargent's veto of a bill repealing the 1965 law, at least two other groups plan to take the state to court, citing recent Supreme Court decisions declaring unconstitutional any actions which have the effect of nullifying laws furthering a person's civil rights.

John Bynoe, regional director of HEW's civil rights division, said the division's legal counsel researched federal laws to determine the consequences of repeal of the Racial Imbalance Law – "to see if it would be a violation of the 14th amendment."

"Our research seems to bear our that such action would fall under the Keyes decision," Bynoe said, "and that, very simply, is that once you recognize a right and act to protect that right then any action to rescind that right is a violation."

In the Keyes decision, the Supreme Court in June 1973 ruled the newly-elected school board in Denver could not repeal an order made by the board it replaced which called for intergration of public schools.

Bunoe said HEW's lawyer thinks the situation in this state is similar.

House Democrats caucus votes quick end to oil depletion

WASHINGTON [UPI]-House Democrats voted overwhelmingly yesterday for an immediate end to the oil depletion allowance and for changes in other tax laws that could cost the oil industry an additional $4.5 billion this year in new taxes.

In a 90-minute closed caucus, the Democrats voted to instruct the Rules Committee to clear the proposals for a House floor vote. Normally tax bills are considered under a "closed" rule with no amendments.

The large voice votes, with only a scattering of no's, indicate House sentiment in an election year against rising oil company profits.

An oil industry spokesman, Frank Ikard of the American Petroleum Institute, said the vote reflected a "lynch mob attitude" which must not prevail if the oil industry is to supply the country's energy needs.

But Rep. William J. Green, D-Pa., who forced the caucus meeting under new rules, being used for the first time, said Democrats had expressed their sentiment "to end the bonanza to the oil industry."

The action, in defiance of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee and its chairman Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., and Speaker Carl Albert, could lead to a greater use of the caucus route to rewrite committee tax bills, as well as to overcome leadership decisions.

Albert, who lobbied heavily against the caucus action, said, "I think it's a mistake." Mills, apparently seeing he would be defeated, did not attend the caucus and had not been to his office for several days.

The Green amendment would end the oil depletion allowance which allows a deduction of 22 per cent of income from an oil property up to 50 per cent of a company's profits - effective last Jan. 1. It also would phase out depletion allowance for most natural gas after 18 months.

The Ways and Means Committee already had voted to phase out the oil depletion allowance over three years, but that did not satisfy liberals.

Wounded Knee defendants allowed to question witnesses at trial

ST. PAUL, Minn. [AP]-Dennis Banks and Russell Means, American Indian Movement (AIM) leaders on trial in the Wounded Knee case, got a judge's permission yesterday to question witnesses at their trial.

The concession by U.S. District Judge Fred Nichol was vigorously opposed by Asst. U.S. Atty. R.D. Hurd. He predicted it would cause disruption in court and that government witnesses who fear the defendants would be intimidated when questioned by them.

Banks, 42, of St. Paul, and Means, 34, of Porcupine, S.D., are being tried on a 10-count indictment charging burglary, theft, assault and other felonies. Authorities say Means and Banks were leaders in the armed takeover last year of Wounded Knee, S.D., on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

On Tuesday, Means and Banks told Nichol they had fired their attorneys and wanted to serve as their own cousel.

Nichol denied that move. He said there was mple guidance at the appellate level that judges should not consent to dismissing defense counsel without just cause. He noted that both defendants considered their lawyers dedicated and competent.

The compromise was worked out yesterday in Nichol's chambers in the presence of government and defense attorneys, defendants and reporters.

Nichol said he recognized a dual obligation: to see that accused individuals are brought to trial, and to protect the rights of those on trial. He said judicial rulings on defendants' rights have changed considerably in his 38 years as lawyer, prosecutor and judge.

He said there was precedent for permitting defendants to serve as their own attorneys, including the Angela Davis case.

Nichol also gave Means and Banks the choice of a mistrial as he had offered several weeks ago because of alleged government misconduct. Means and Banks opted for a co-counsel role under they may question witnesses of their choice.

The 20/20 musical "Visions" of Paul Horn. One of today's finest free-form/progressive musicians turns his eyes to a new style and substance. The result is "Visions," Paul Horn's new album, in which he sees the possibilities of songs by top contemporary composers (David Crosby, Stevie Wonder, Joan Baez, and Joni Mitchell—who lends her voice and piano playing to her own "Blue") and transforms them into an album that combines tone and color, sight and sound.

Paul Horn—a man with the kind of inner vision that can pierce all boundaries to perceive and create its own images. The "Visions" he sees here are real and beautiful.

A practical major: bilingual studies

By WILLIAM TYNAN
MDC Special

Students looking for practical majors that can offer them a job after graduation might consider the Bilingual Studies Tract of the Department of Hispanic Languages and Liberatures or of the School of Education.

According to Juan C. Zamora, chairman of the Bilingual Studies Committee, "There is no problem with employability" in public schools of Massachusetts for Spanish or Portuguese majors who graduate through the Bilingual Studies Tract.

Why the jobs?

State legislation passed on November 14, 1971, provides that "When there are 20 or more children with limited English abilitiy classification within a city, town, or school district, a Transitional Bilingual Education (TBE) program must be established."

The Bilingual Studies Tract at the University of Massachusetts is a result of that state legislation.

The TBA program teaches (1) all the subjects the child is required to receive by law, taught in both the child's native language as well as English, (2) how to read and write in English, (3) the history and cultures of the child's native land, and (4) the history and culture of the United States.

There are two programs in Bilingual Studies at UMass. Undergraduates who want to teach at the elementary level are required to major in Education, while those who wish to teach at the secondary level major in Spanish or Portuguese, or in some other area. But non-language majors must be fluent in Spanish or Portuguese.

Those weak in the language requirement should not be discouraged. Acceptance into one of the two programs is based on potential, according to Ana M. Glavin, a member of the Bilingual Studies Committee.

"What we are looking for is a student who can achieve the competence required to function in a classroom with Spanish-speaking children by the time he graduates. Rather than perfection, we are looking for potential," Ms. Glavin said.

In the Department of Hispanic Languages, bilingual concentration can be in one of three areas, Zamora explained, these are: Liberature and Culture, Linguistics, or Bilingualism.

He added "When most people think of Bilingualism they usually think of Spanish, but there are about 180,000 Spanish speakers in the state compared to 300,000 Portuguese speakers."

There is only one full-time Portuguese teacher in the Department while there are 20 full-time Spanish teachers.

"Interest in Portuguese language and culture is growning," said Antonio Andrade, the Portuguese professor. Because of this, "next year another full-time Portuguese teacher will be added to the Department," he said.

Both languages offer practical work in the community. Spanish speakers have "Tutoring Spanish Speakers", formerly "Holyoke Tutorial", a three-credit course that enables undergraduates to tutor Spanish-speaking children during two 40-minute sessions, two mornings a week, in Holyoke.

What's it like?

"Students were very irresponsible at first, swearing at teachers...it was complete bedlam," said Larraine Gandolfi, a tutor at Dr. William Peck Junior High School in Holyoke.

"Some students came to school too hungry to care about studying. I make it a point of buying one of my students breakfast the two mornings I teach. It helps the relationship," Ms. Gandolfi said.

She added, "My job is that of a social worker; teaching comes secondary. You can see a considerable difference in students' attitudes toward teachers and school compared to last February, so it's working. But you have to be willing to bend."

At the tutorial program in the Northborough Jail for Spanish-speaking inmates, Cindy Morin teaches social science, science, Spanish grammer and spelling to one inmate. She believes most inmates are motivated to learn.

One problem, according to Ms. Morin is lack of communication between jail authorities and university tutors.

"One time, my students were on details washing floors and no one notified me. It was a wasted trip; they wouldn't let me teach," she said.

In Ludlow, the largest Portuguese community in western Massachusetts, there is a tutorial program teaching in three schools, an elementary, a junior high, and a high school, according to Professor Andrade.

Rev. Lindeman appointed to R.I. church

The Rev. Thomas Lindeman, for the past eight years campus minister with the United Christian Foundation at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, has accepted an appointment with the United Methodist Church in Rhode Island.

His new position will be a combination of two responsibilities. His principal task will be as pastor of St. Paul's United Methodist Church in downtown Newport, a church celebrating its 175th anniversary this coming year.

A second responsibility will be as part-time executive director of the Rhode Island United Methodist Association, a state-wide missions and education association of 30-some churches, combining social change programs and adult education and personal growth programs for lay persons and pastors in Rhode Island. In connection with the RIUMA, Mr. Lindeman will have a major responsibility for ecumenical relationships and ecumenical social action projects in Rhode Island.

Mr. Lindeman came to Amherst in 1966 as a staff member of the United Christian Foundation at UMass.

In Atty General race - Sacco the man

By MICHAEL D. ROTH

The race for the Democratic nomination for Attorney General is boiling down to a three way race between George L. Sacco, Edward Harrington, and Francis X. Bellotti. Two others, Ted O'Brien and S. Lester Ralph will be able to muster only insignificant vote totals on election day. At this point, Sacco has the slight edge. In a dramatic move last February, Sacco resigned his seat in the Massachusetts Legislature and forfeited his post as Vice-Chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee. Sacco believed that by going to the unprecedented lengths of resigning, he would underscore his integrity and reputation for honesty which has remained untarnished for over fifteen years in public service. Sacco was also one of the first two candidates, along with Michael Dukakis, to disclose his campaign contributions openly and personal net worth in addition to opening his campaign to the Common Cause Monitoring Project.

Ted Harrington, former head of the Organized Crime Task Force in New England, is working hard to establish himself as a viable candidate and since winning the Mass Caucus '74 is attempting to create the reputation of being the most liberal and viable candidate. In short, Harrington's only shot at victory in September hinges on his winning all the liberal and moderate support state-wide. Accordingly, Harrington has been campaign through the state on the platform that he is a "non-politician." Whether this will be enough for a primary victory is rather doubtful.

Harrington's strategy has a number of loopholes. Having never served in public office in Massachusetts, Harrington is not as familiar with Massachusetts law as are Sacco and Bellotti. Further with a family history of political involvement and as an active candidate, there are many who will find it difficult to view Harrington as anything but a politician.

Bellotti has won only one election in five tries over the past ten years with his vote decreasing each time he runs. Regarded as a traitor by Democrats because of his 1964 treachery of running against incumbent Democrat Governor Endicott Peabody and looked at by the electorate as a politician whose day has gone by, Bellotti will discover that he may not even be a serious candidate.

The contest between Harrington and Sacco will no doubt be hard fought. The major difference between the two is that Sacco has a record of eleven years in the Legislature on which to run. An old rule of elective office is that it's easier to win if you have no record to defend. Sacco realizes that inevitably a legislator will not vote 100 per cent with all his constituents on every individual vote. However Sacco openly discusses his record with the voters. He makes no secret of his past actions and stands. In a recent all day visit to campus, most students were very impressed by Sacco's veracity.

Over the course of eleven years at the State House, Sacco has fought hard for gun control, introduced and passed legislation in the realm of consumer affairs, and helped pass major prison reform legislation including his pre-trial diversion which would allow youthful first offenders to go to a halfway house instead of to jail. Sacco has also been outspoken in favor of rent control, introduced a resolution which was passed calling for the President's impeachment, against abuse of the "03" account, and for state aid in family planning. Mr. Sacco is very proud of his influential role in the expansion of the UMass Amherst campus and creation of the Roxbury Community College.

Sacco has a proven record of socially progressive legislation something Mr. Harrington cannot offer. Only Sacco's support of reinstatement of a modified death penality has made any liberal look towards Harrington. However the sentiment of an overwhelming number of Massachusetts citizens are for the death penalty's reinstatement and this issue may very well serve as Sacco's catalyst to victory in September. A recent survey of UMass-Amherst students indicated that even a majority of students were against the abolition of capital punishment.

At this point a number of predictions can be made. Bellotti's vote may wane even lower than it has in his last three futile attempts for state-wide office. Most important of all, Sacco's candidacy will appeal to the broadest spectrum of the electorate. Sacco is the only candidate with strong Democratic rank and file support. A majority of Sacco's vote will come from rank and file Democrats which traditionally is the backbone of the electorate in primary elections. Harrington's liberal bubble will burst. Once people look beyond the death penalty barrier as the sole criteria of liberal-conservative, people will recognize that Sacco's record can be liberally interpreted. As of now, it's Sacco first, Harrington second and Bellotti third.

Letters to the editor

Cabin valuable, firing stupid

To The Editor:

This letter is being written in response to the firing of Dr. Seymour Cabin from his position at the Mental Health Center on April 26, 1974. We, the undersigned, are extremely distressed by this action. Dr. Cabin had the longest waiting list of all therapists at Mental Health. He is sensitive to student needs, perceptive, and, in short, a fine therapist. In addition, we are losing an excellent supervisor. Over the past few years, he has proven himself an invaluable resource in terms of client supervision for various counseling services on campus including Room-To-Move and The Everywoman's Center. Many counselors are indebted to him and feel they have learned more from him than from many counseling courses offered on campus.

Dr. Cabin's dismissal was neither for ethical reasons nor for lack of competence; the grounds stated were not fitting in with the goals and structure of the Mental Health Service. This raises the crucial questions of |1| what are the goals of this service? Why is a person with Dr. Cabin's capability and popularity fired?

We reiterate our extreme distress as to his firing. I appears to have been done in the interests of parties other than the students, the needs of whom Mental Health is supposed to be serving.

Hester for Lieutenant Gov.

To The Editor:

I am writing to urge all members of the University community to come to the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union on Thursday, May 16, at 7:00 p.m. to hear Eva B. Hester, a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor.

Miss Hester has had a great deal of experience in government at both the state and national levels.

She is extremely aware of and concerned with many crucial issues troubling Massachusetts today. She wants to do what she can to end politics for special interests, and bring back the idea that government should SERVE the needs of all citizens.

During these difficult times in government, it has become quite apparent that people not only desire — but NEED a person of high integrity who can deal effictively with problems and answer the needs of all citizens.

I believe that Eva Hester's candidacy can answer our needs and I encourage all to come and hear what this candidate can offer

Haytowitz "conspiracy" just sour grapes

To The Editor:

The David Haytowitz rhetorical gem of May 14 |Where are the Ovens?| deserves response. In his letter, Mr. Haytowitz makes a series of unwarranted accusations against Larry Zellner, president of Orchard Hill Area Govt. I would like to clarify these attacks. Firstly, Mr. Haytowitz accuses Zellner of removing anyone from Area Govt. who does not live in his dorm, Webster. This is a blatant lie. Zellner, in office only five weeks, has removed no one, nor does he intend to. Secondly, Haytowitz claims that the Executive Board, along with almost all other Hill committees are already part of the "Zellner Regime". The Vice-President was elected to office by the Hill at large, while the Treasurer and Secretary were both recently elected from Area Govt. Of the four Hill dorms, Webster has the smallest deputy representation in Area Govt. Mr. Haytowitz asks for the constitution to be ammended to give Area Govt. veto power over Presidential appointments. Get with the program, Dave. All Presidential appointments have always been subject to approval by Area Govt. Zellner has made two appointments thus far - one was Mr. Haytowitz' roommate, the other - a resident of Field House.

The crux of Mr. Haytowitz' argument centers around the area newspaper - The Sage Revisited. Co-editors for the Sage had to be chosen for next year. The candidates were Mr. Haytowitz and his roommate, or two residents of Webster. Zellner chose who he felt most qualified for the job - Kristen Nielsen and Cheryl Degere. Is it possible, Dave, that because you weren't hired as editor of the Sage, you are over reacting with a cry of sour grapes?

Prison reform necessary; letters effective

To The Editor:

In response to Christine Mudgett's letter of May 9, there is much basic work that can be done. The University can be asked to live up to its responsibility to the community. The Sociology, Urban Studies, Legal Studies and Psychology Departments should give credit for people who get involved in work with Prison Reform. Professionalism is nurtured on this campus, the people who are going to be professionals should see what the effects of their actions will be on the people they see as threats and put in institutions. Bringing pressure on these departments could be a start.

Student Volunteer Services is at the moment laying groundwork for a collective concerned with prison reform. In the fall the people involved with this collective will do research into the types of prisons and their rehabilitation programs. The treatment of prisoners and their rights would also be considered.

Anyone interested is urged to contact SVS.

Letters can be very effect. Places to contact would be National Coalition Against Prisons, Massachusetts Council on Crime and Correction, Division of Youth Services, Center for Study of Institutional Alternatives and the Massachusetts Correctional System. All of these addresses are available at Student Volunteer Services, 408 Goodell. We would be exceptionally happy to supply these addresses and discuss the idea of prison reform.

Channel 3 is working on a documentary about the Cell Block Theatre to be done some time this summer. Input by students would be appreciated in this matter.

Addresses of people currently incarcerated are also available at SVS.

Prison reform must start at the grassroots level. These human beings need support. Your help is appreciated.

Goodbye-no joke in 74

Monday Melancholy. It's been that kind of year, and I'm glad it's over. Back in my high school days, I thought being a big senior in college was just a wedding away from the next generation. Perhaps it is.

It's been a year of colossal changes, and probably the most confusing nine months of my life, and I'm still not sure where they all went. I get mad at myself for so many things I've done, and even more that I should have done.

And in politics, there's a good feeling about seeing a dude like Nixon getting into trouble for things he's been getting away with for so long. There's some sweet revenge in each of us.

It doesn't do much good though. If only McGovern...but you can only take an "if" so far. But somehow, I can't help but think how different things could have been. The names of Oswald and Sirhan have taken their places in history - side by side at the expense of a generation.

What's there to say? How do you explain why dreams are forgotten at the dinner table, or why ambition is harassed by conformity?

But there's still that senior year to look forward to, after a brief excursion to wherever. It's not hard to find. You just cruise down September Road. I'm starting to know that road by heart.

UMass is a depressing place. In it, you are a computer card, which gets processed and shot back out. It's a cold, unfeeling place that can make the mind go schitzoid. And you can often feel like you're alone in the midst of people. But how much can you say about a place you love? There's little doubt in my mind that I'll always look back on these years as the best in my life. Sylvan, Southwest, the Canpus Center, the library - all only buildings that house fantastic memories and emotions.

When I start thinking about UMass in years to come, I won't be thinking about the hassles with Whitmore, or the parking tickets, or failed courses, but I'll be thinking about friends and lovers who have meant so much to my life that it's impossible to try to thank anyone - but UMass - that's where it all happened.

So this year, my final column is slightly more sentimental, somewhat less confident, and much more melancholy. I've got no jokes to crack or satires to perform and my mind is a little less idealistic, but that'ss all part of the game. I wonder what I'll have to say at this time next year.

Democracy for U.S.S.R.

AN INTERVIEW WITH VACLAV HOLESOVSKY, PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS, UMASS, AMHERST.

In a period when Americans are being asked to support a variety of political causes, of what special importance is the appeal for the rights and safety of Soviet dissidents?

Such an appeal is the least we can do to aid the slow push of Soviet people for democracy. And that in turn has to do eventually with everybody else's safety: Safety from an inch-by-inch totalitarian conquest, and possibly from a big war, should Western concessions and Soviet aspirations one day reach an intolerable limit. To reduce the probability of such developments would seem rather important.

How exactly do you see this connection between the movement of Soviet dissidents and international peace?

You start with the insight of George Orwell: A totalitarian system requires an external enemy as part of its mechanism of repression at home. Everything else follows: armies, weaponry, military maneuvers, propaganda, isolation from the rest of the world and from the truth about it, primitive patriotism, etc. Take the people's isolation out of this, eliminate the "information Quarantine," and you have knocked out a key component from the totalitarian mechanism.

That requires a degree of civil rights; freedom of the press, free movement of people. Then, and only then, can you talk of nations learning to understand one another. Civil liberties then create the necessary basis for representative governments to negotiate in good faith about disarmament and all the other problems we face.

If your goal, besides the issue of dissidents, is peace, do you have the support of peace-movement people?

ALL our supporters are peace people. But no all peace people are our supporters. The peace-movement people, it seems to me, go into action (and then only selectively) when there is a war to be stopped. Not when there are wars to be prevented by using our heads. They don't seem to be able to tell a "preventative" peace movement when they see one.

What about the radicals?

Which radicals? In the conventional sense? Most radicals get very conservative when it comes to Soviet-type or Chinese-type dictatorships -- they don't mind conserving them, and they tend to be tolerant of their aggressions. When a tyranny waves a red flag and talks in socialist verbiage, that completely jams the radical thought processes.

What specific impact do the appeals hope to have?

Increased support for policies and legislation which promote internal change in the Soviet area. Make the Soviet rulers aware of Western public opinion. That should give them pause, and at the same time give the dissidents heart.

If the American people make a hard-line insistance on liberalization as a prerequisite for a full "detente," will the Soviets be provoked into returning to the belligerency of the "cold-war era"?

What do you mean by "returning?" They are as belligerent as ever. Isn't the latest hot war in the Middle East, which they prepared and engineered, quite as hot as the North Korean attack engineered in 1950? They are pushing their armaments as merrily as ever. It may interest you to know that the Soviet delegate to the Geneva peace talks admitted that the Soviet Union was about to airlift seven divisions to the Middle East when the fortune of the Egyptian attackers turned against them. There was never that degree of belligerence before, not counting the invasion of Czechoslovakia.

But I do want to address myself to the main thrust of your question. Will standing up for our interests and those of the dissidents make the Soviets turn even worse? There is a basic misconception about the psychology of the bully: Be nice to him and he will be nice to you and his victims. I have never heard of a mugger being stopped by other people turning the other way.

Is Solzhenitsyn likely to take an active role as an expatriot?

Solzhenitsyn himself says no. He wants to concentrate on his writing. Whether that is a passive role, I wonder.

Judging from the Soviet response to dissent, one gets the impression that they have something to fear. Do they?

Totalitarian rulers always have something to fear. That is their natural state of mind. That's why they try to rowbeat everybody else, and hold on to their despotic rule.

Is there a serious possibility of foreign appeals having an impact on Soviet policy?

Appeals will, of course, have the greater impact with the more diplomatic muscle put behind them. Appeals alone -- we know that by Soviet reactions they are very sensitive to them. I would proceed on the assumption that keeping quiet in the West and not issuing any appeals would have an impact on the Soviet domestic scene -- discouragement of dissidents and a green light for the KGB (Soviet secret police).

Is real peaceful coexistance a possibility?

Yes, certainly. Provided that it is a coexistance of democratic societies, and provided that Soviet society is integrated into the rest of civilized humanity. The COMMITTEE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE SOVIET AREA is working for precisely that kind of coexistance and detente.

Have the appeals been gaining momentum in the United States and here at the University?

Our efforts have been gaining momentum, in the preparation for a nation-wide organization and in our communications with federal legislators, the public, and the media. Response at this University? No momentum worth talking about. There is now only a trickle of endorsements and donations from our March appeal. We are not riding an emotional wave. The reasoning which underlies our advocacy of a new foreign policy is quite complex. It doesn't lend itself to sloganeering.

Let impeachment run its course

By BOB FOSTER

The wheels of American justice grind slowly. Yet, contrary to some countries, we may say that at the very least, they still do grind. Thus was the case of John Mitchell and Maurice Stans. Placed before a jury of their peers, they presented their defense. The prosecution issued the charges, and feebly attempted to support them. Yet, the witnesses for the prosecution came across as "unbelievable"; not lacking in truth, but "UN—believable."

The dictionary defines believable as "taken as true, real, etc." One grammatically combines such a word with "UN", a prefix meaning "not" and implying the antithesis of the word to which it is affixed, and one can very logically define the testimony of prosecution witnesses as "not taken as true, real, etc." It all sounds so much like the crazy professor, Irwin Corey, whose claim to fame lay in the double-talking "Uncola" commercials.

The paramount question then becomes — if the testimony was so unbelievable, was it not untrue? Perjury is a serious crime that few witnesses wish to tamper with. Perjury before Congressional committees carries even more deadly consequences for those convicted. Thus, I feel compelled to query the jury in the Mitchell-Stans sage. What does unbelievable mean? Was indeed the truth not told? Was it perhaps twisted and contorted by the palsied minds of devious creatures such as John Dean? Or indeed, was it just so astounding that it was hard to swallow in a single decisional bite? We may never come to understand the logic of the UNbelievable, surrealistic political game that makes new moves each day. UNbelievability implies untruth and untruth carries the penalties of perjury. A heavy burden for anyone to bear.

One must remember that this is but a singular page in a chapter in an epic of proportions beyond our collective political imagination. There are many more pages and chapters to come. It must serve as a signpost in the oblivion of a political swamp. It shows what can happen in a complex case over an extended period of time to a jury of laymen. It teaches us the lesson of overanticipation. It advises us to retard the deteriorating pace of political witch hunts while we still have the chance to perhaps retrieve the truth.

Heed this counsel. When considering impeaching a President, allow time to take its toll. Then, when the evidence is clear and incontrovertible, allow the system to grind its rusty gears. Do not force the hands upon the face of the clock to move more swiftly than they should. Make sure that when the premier case comes before the jury of Congressional peers that all the evidence is sound and true. "UNbelievability" cannot serve as a waiver for political miscarriage. Impeachment cannot allow such uncertainties at its conclusion.

centuries. Accordingly, the Portuquese believe that their multiracial origins gives them a special capacity to live in many climates under many conditions and enables them to assimilate peoples of all races into a single Portuguese nation with provinces scattered about the world. In Africa and throughout the empire, according to official view, that presence of the Portuguese nation is effective and proclaimed by patriotism of the territorial peoples.

The Portuguese allege that in all parts of the Empire, they have brought indigenous peoples into contact with their civilization, their christian heritage and missionary activities, as well as with their economic achievements.

The Portuguese position is delineated by the following excerpts from statements by Government officials and from legislation.

Antonio de Oliveira Salizar, a former professor of Economics at the University of Coimbra, assumed the post of Finance Minister in 1928 is that there is no way out from the cycle of underdevelopment other than through the toil of the peoples concerned, since programs of mass culture imposed by aliens and, offered as gifts to boot, will fail to overcome the material obstacles which such programs encounter and which prevent the attainment of spectacular results. The criterion for African development ought not to ignore the need for entrusting the responsibilities of administration to those best qualified to assure them, and for ensuring the active support of a political sovereignty whose interest is to foster the progress of all."

If the Portuguese would have put this theory in practice then they would, a long time ago, have abandoned their territory to proper, capable and rightful leadership — that of the African peoples themselves.

The Portuguese believe that they are representatives of the material and moral values of Western civilization, and firmly believe that Africa cannot separate her destiny from that of Europe. The rationalization being that it received from Europe the message that renewed its moral world and that the necessities for the defense of Europe are not compatible with the African program of the Eastern powers. What they do not spell out however, is that Portugal and Europe need Africa to support their people at the expense of the African masses. The Portuguese also feel it is their duty to the native population in their colonial possessions to remain there. They feel that their presence signifies civil peace, tranquility, and security, inestimable benefits upon which depend the lives and properties of each territory.

From the African perspective however, the presence of the Portuguese means massacres, inhumanity, inequality, injustice, slavery and mass starvation.

In Guine Bissau on August 3, 1959 at the Pifiguiti docks Portuguese soldiers and civilians massacred tens of striking workers, which was followed by a wave of terror, planned and led by the political police (PIDE). At the same time the colonial administration succeeded in creating, by increasing the exploitation of rice at the expense of the people of Guine, a new weapon of oppression; famine, and prepared to drown in blood any attempt at insurrection on the part of these people. This is in essence the official policy of Portugal in Africa. They enslaved, they sold, they massacred, they dominated, and the exploited the people of Guine who are fighting to reclaim their liberty and dignity.

In Guine this can only be possible by the type of leadership that takes over after the Portuguese leaves. "There is no economically viable bourgeoisie because imperialism prevented it being created. What there is, is a stratum of people in the service of imperialism who have learned how to manipulate the apparatus of the state — the African petty bourgeoisie — this is the only stratum capable of controlling or even utilizing the instruments which the colonial state used against our people. So we come to the conclusion that in colonial conditions it is the petty bourgeoisie which is the inheritor of state power." What attitude can the petty bourgeoisie assume. Cabral asserts that the left will for the revolution and the right will call for the non-revolution i.e., a capitalist road or something like that.

The petty bourgeoisie has two alternatives. They can either ally itself with imperialism and the reactionary strata in its own country to try and preserve itself as a petty bourgeoisie or ally itself with the workers and the peasants, who must themselves, take power or control to make the revolution."

Cabral has stated that forces of neo-colonialism in under-developed countries is to create a false bourgeoisie to put a break on the revolution and to enlarge the possibilities of the petty bourgeoisie as a neutralizer of the revolution." The leadership of Guine has aligned themselves with the socialist block which is indeed a positive move towards neutralizing the forces of neo-colonialism.

Would you like to continue your Health Care at the Health Services this summer?

The University Health Services will provide continuing care to those students who will be in the Amherst area during the summer. Services may be obtained by electing one of the two options enumerated below:

OPTION A: Return the tear-off sheet at the bottom to the Health Services Business Office with a check in the amount of $30.00 payable to the University of Massachusetts. Payment of this fee will entitle you to receive the same services that are provided under the regular health fee at no additional charge for the entire summer. Services include unlimited physician consultation, nursing services, lab, x-ray, medications, 24-hour emergency care, inpatient care on campus, and mental health consultation. (Those attending Summer School need only send $12.00, as the Bursar will bill them for an $18.00 Summer School Health Fee.) THE ENROLLMENT PERIOD FOR THIS OPTION WILL CLOSE ON JUNE 15, 1974.

OPTION B: Any student who has paid the Health Fee this past year may receive care at the Health Center on a fee-for-service basis. You will be charged for each visit ($10 for an M.D., $5.00 for an R.N., etc.), as well as for all other services and medications you receive.
NOTE: The Student Health Insurance will not reimburse you for services received at the Health Center, except for emergency treatment resulting from accident or injury. There is no need to enroll for this option, but we would appreciate your returning the tear-off sheet with this option checked in order that we may have some idea of the number of students that may be utilizing this option.

A fair judge at Wounded Knee

Part two of a three part series.

By GAIL SULLIVAN

The trial of Russell Means and Dennis Banks for a ten count indictment stemming from the siege of Wounded Knee, is in direct contrast to the Custer trial.

Judge Fred Nichol, a federal judge from Sioux Falls, granted the defense motion for a change of venue to St. Paul, Minn. because the possibility of an unfair trial due to racism was all too great a risk. The trial, which started in January, has brought out many instances of government misconduct; both during Wounded Knee and later.

Most prominently, evidence turned up about an illegal wiretap ordered by the United States Marshalls and maintained by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), of the only phone inside Wounded Knee.

Seven weeks ago, the defense entered a motion to dismiss the case based on this information. A two day hearing on the motion stretched into six weeks of evidence of government misconduct and illegal actions in attempting to squelch the siege of Wounded Knee. The hearing showed that, without the knowledge of those inside Wounded Knee, the U.S. Marshalls had an extension phone installed at Roadblock One. Even after a federal judge refused to issue an order for a legal wiretap the FBI continued to monitor calls.

Kent Frizzell, one of the chief negotiators for the United States, personally assured defense attorney Mark Lane that there was no wiretap of the Wounded Knee phone, and that attorneys should feel free to confer with their clients about privileged matters.

The extension phone maintained by the federal government was not only illegal, but it directly violated a Constitutional right to attorney-client privilege.

Judge Nichol, though he denied the motion which would have affected all 127 Wounded Knee cases, told the press that he came "within a gnat's eyelash" of dismissing the charges.

Although the trial continues now, the defense feels that much evidence has come out to prove the government's illegal Indian Affairs police.

A similar motion in a previous trial, when won, resulted in the actions in the Wounded Knee siege, and its bad faith prosecution of the Indian defendants.

Attorney Mark Lane said, "Judge Nichol has seen only the tip of the iceberg. Before the trial is over far more will come out."

Another Wounded Knee case, one of the 124 cases which were not allowed to move out of South Dakota, is now proceeding in Sioux Falls.

Three Indian women, Madonna Gilbert, Lorelei DeCora Means, and Tonia Ackerman face charges of burglary and larceny in connection with the Wounded Knee trading post.

A three week hearing was held on a defense motion to suppress the evidence siezed from their car at a roadblock maintained by the Bureau of dismissal of charges against two defendants. That motion, as well as the motion to dismiss because of the illegal wiretap, were denied, and the trial is now proceeding before Judge Urbom of Lincoln, Nebraska.

Judge Urbom, whom both the defense and the prosecution feel is impartial, agreed to be the Wounded Knee judge for all but the leadership trials when South Dakota Judge Bogue finally removed himself after much pressure by the defense.

The three defendants elected to be tried by the Judge, rather than a jury, because they felt their chances for a fair trial would be far superior.

This decision, made prior to the most recent tensions in the Custer trial, is testimony to the prejudice of potential jurors for any trial of Indian people in South Dakota.

Said one defendant, "I would rather take my chances with one judge from out of the State than with any white South Dakota jury."

Gail Sullivan, former UMass student, is presently a legal worker for the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee.

History, city planning summer, fall internships

The city of Springfield is getting its Bicentennial Committee rolling and is offering a number of summer and fall internships for students interested in History, City Planning, Urban Beautification and all forms of art.

According to Alan Hale, executive director of the program, the committee "is getting into high gear and has several exciting programs under consideration." Presently he has sever full-time internships open and interviews have already started.

Hale is also trying to dig up the funding to hire one or two "outstanding seniors" to work on a full-time basis or through a work study arrangement. Although he doubts the pay scale would be very high, Hale said the experience and contacts gained through a venture of this nature should be valuable to the student's career.

UMass students, especially those from the Springfield area, can telephone Hale at 785-1825 to arrange an interview. If selected, the student can then visit the Outreach office at 408 Goodell to arrange academic credit for the experience.

UHS contraception services still available

The Contraception Clinic at the University Health Services is completing another busy year. The Clinic will be open for "new" first time clinic appointments for oral contraception and diaphragms until May 20. IUD appointments will be completed on Thursday, May 16. Women will be seen for routine follow-ups and annual check-ups on May 20 through 23 although the staff will provide one follow-up visit for women with IUD or oral contraception prescriptions if necessary during the first few weeks of the summer. The spring semester health fee will cover health services until May 31.

Students who plan to be in the Amherst area during the summer and would like to receive health care, which includes complete contraception services at University Health Services can choose to pay the summer health fee ($30.00). Coverage under the summer fee will commence June 1. The Contraception Clinic will be open on Tuesday mornings (8:30 - 12:00). Once the summer school classes begin the Clinic will also be open on Friday. Contraception appointments for the summer can be made after June 1 by calling 549-2600.

The future of politics

The "Future of Politics in America" will be the subject of this week's meeting of Project Ten's Political Campaigns Seminar here.

Three local political figures will be the featured speakers at the seminar today at 7:00 p.m. in Pierpont Hall on the University campus. Hampshire County Commissioner David Musante, Northampton's Ward 6 Democratic Committee member John Lawlor, and long-time peace activist Henry Bubar will offer their perspectives on the effects of the Watergate scandal on the country's political climate.

Later in the evening, "Telepolitics," a videotaped series of interviews with this year's gubernatorial candidates in Massachusetts will be shown. The series is produced by Chris Sophinos and moderated by Mark Vogler.

The public is cordially invited to attend.

Beware of the steam noice

Loud but unavoidable steam noise will come from the two steam plants here from time to time May 16 through June 24, mostly as the result of performance and safety testing at the new plant at Tillson Farm.

They will be roaring noises, infrequent and intermittent, and confined to daylight hours. After May 16, the noises will be heard at various times, the loudest expected May 28 and 29.

Mime theatre offers class

The Pocket Mime Theatre of Boston, described by critic Elliot Norton as "Not only good, but impressive," will be in residence here July 8-12. Each of the five days of residency will include two hour instructional sessions in Acting for the Mime, Movement, and Mime Technique. The program is coordinated so that each session prepares for and leads up to the next.

Class groups will be kept small enough to allow personal attention to each student's work. As the classes progress, students will have the opportunity to create their own mime pieces and present them for evaluation by the instructors. Though the program is designed for beginners to learn all the basic skills, each student will be treated as if he-she intends to become a professional mime.

This offering is part of the Summer Arts Institute of the Division of Continuing Education. Additional information and registration forms are available from the Arts Extension Service, Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma. 01002. Steele honored by two music citations

Ronald Steele, founder and conducter of the University of Massachusetts Symphony Orchestra, has been honored by two citations for achievement in the field of music.

Radio station WTIC-FM in Hartford has won a first place for musical programming in the tenth annual Armstrong Awards for excellence and originality in FM broadcasting. WTIC-FM will receive $500 and a bronze plaque for a program in "The Listening Room" series that traces the 800-year history of the Mass as a musical form, with illustrations and commentary prepared by Professor Steele.

The award is for the best classical music program on commercial radio and includes all of North America. The program is based in part on leactures that Professor Steele gives in music appreciation at UMass. The Armstrong judges praised Professor Steele and "The Listening Room" series, describing it as being "splendidly researched and cannily produced, presentations of a refreshing – even reassuring – professionalism. Mr. Steele, our commentator-guide, deserves congratulations for his musical savvy, his taste and his judgement." WTIC-FM's producer for the winning program was Thomas F. Parker.

The annual awards program is named after the later Edwin H. Armstrong, who invented FM broadcasting. It is the highest award given by the broadcasting industry. Presentation of the award will be made October 12 at the annual convention of the National Association of FM Broadcasters in New Orleans.

In addition, Prof. Steele was one of nine alumni of Lebanon Valley College in Annville, Pa., to be honored at alumni festivities at the college on May 4. For his outstanding achievement in the field of music he received an Alumni Association Citation.

Professor Steele, who began "The Listening Room" series in September of 1973, is listed in the Dictionary of International Biography, Outstanding Young Men of America, Who's Who in Music, and Who's Who in the East.

refugees. "It is inhumane and cruel to keep them jailed," pronounced Schauer.

In mid-March there were 91 Haitians in custody, according to a public information officer at the Immigration Office. Fifty of these were moved to a detention center in Texas.

"Of the remaining 41,6 are hospitalized for treatment of tuburculosis and 26 are being treated for venereal disease," reported officers.

The Immigration officer continued explaining reasons that were cause for special attention, he said - "Haitians without families were jailed. Those with families were released pending the outcome of their cases.

Tirenne Deville, a 27 year old Haitian refugee was found dead recently in his jail cell in Miami where he was awaiting deportation. Refugee leaders say that Deville, who was found with a sheet tied around his neck. It seems that he committed suicide rather than face reprisals in Haiti.

As for the immigration regulations, they permit the admission of political refugees who can show persecution by their native countries, conform to the United Nations Protocla Relating to the Status of Refugees, to which the U.S. agreed in 1963.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Excellent results accrue through work in connection with group, hospital, institution, organization. You are taken behind the scenes and given access to privileged information. Your horizons expand. You are on brink of solid chance for success.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some of your fondest hopes, wishes may be fulfilled. Element of timing is on your side. Popularity rating zooms. Make contacts. Social relationship can develop into association which is gratifying — and profitable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are able to reach more persons. Public reaction to your efforts is favorable. Contract offer could bring added recognition. Partner, mate does something which elevates your position. Aries, Libra persons could figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on travel, study and communication. Break through barriers — enlarge emotional horizons. Leo, Aquarius individuals play important roles. You receive message or call which provides green light for creative project.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Results are obtained — your natural abilities are appreciated. Satisfaction is gained as praise comes from persons you respect. Follow through on hunch. Pay heed to "inner voice." You will be compensated for special task.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Slow pace. Avoid expanding too quickly. Good news is due in connection with special agreement, joint effort, partner or mate. Circumstances turn in your favor. Public relations improves. You receive accolade from surprise source.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Study Virgo message. Be meticulous about apparent minor points. Thoroughness now will pay dividends. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio individuals will be cooperative. Work associates look to you for constructive suggestions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Change is featured as messages, calls, questions and answers flash to forefront. Gemini, Virgo individuals are in the thick of situation. Your ability to time events, to imprint style will gain you added recognition — and money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Issues and questions are settled, not all to your liking. However, you do see your way to greater security. What was flimsy gets benefit of more solid structure. Relationship with loved one improves, matures and you are moving toward ultimate happiness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you insist on guarantees, you could come up empty-handed. Some want you to trust, to understand and to have faith. They will not respond to pushing tactics. Know it and act accordingly. Short trip to visit relative is favored. Go!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money picture is brighter than in recent past. Capricorn individual could play significant role. Invest in your own abilities. Don't wait to be told by others. You know your own capabilities. Now, back yourself with time and effort, plus cash.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Much that seemed out-of-reach becomes available. Cycle is high; get started. Take initiative. Make new starts, contacts. Push forward. Your judgment, intuition are on target. Lead the way — pioneer a project.

Flyers fight cockiness, Bruins

By MARTIN LADER
UPI Sports Writer

BOSTON [UPI] — While no one is fully expecting the Boston Bruins to hang up their skates and crawl away, the Philadelphia Flyers were more confident than ever Wednesday that their first Stanley Cup Championship was theirs for the taking.

"They came out fighting last night and gave us everything they have," goaltender Bernie Parent said Wednesday before the Flyers left for Boston, where they meet the Bruins Thursday night in the fifth game of their Stanley Cup Final.

"We're leading 3-1 and we've handled everything they offered, so it's got to be pretty good. We all know it's not over until we win four games ... but it looks very good. I hope that was our last game in Philadelphia."

Coach Fred Shero echoed the same sentiments, saying, "That was Boston's best game of the series. They gave it their best shot and we beat them. That makes me feel better. I hope it makes the team feel better."

Whether the world is ready for it or not, the Flyers not only are on the verge of becoming the first expansion team to win the Stanley Cup, they have proven they deserve it. Their 4-2 victory Tuesday night was their third straight over Boston — after the Bruins won the series opener in the closing seconds of play — and this feat is even more remarkable in view of the fact that Philadelphia had beaten Boston only four times in 38 previous meetings.

That streak stretches back seven years to 1967, when the Flyers first joined the National Hockey League.

Even the Bruins, while not ready to accept the inevitable, are wondering just what they must do to reverse the momentum. They played angry and they played tough Tuesday night, engaging in three fights in the opening period and roaring back from a 2-0 deficit with quick goals from Phil Esposito and Andre Savard.

But they were unable to put the puck past Parent again after Savard's goal at 11:24 of the first ppriod, and in the four games thus far they have scored a total of one goal in the second and third periods combined.

"We had it going as hard as we could for 60 minutes," said young Gregg Sheppard of the Bruins. "Now we are faced with a desperation effort."

Despite their youthful enthusiasm and their enviable position, the Philadelphia players aren't ready to make rash predictions. They are supremely confident -- but they felt just as sure of themselves even after dropping the first game at Boston.

"They say the last one is the toughest of them all," said team captain Bobby Clarke. "I can't tell you how I feel because I've never been this far before. But we know we're not going to be able to just throw our sticks out there and expect to win."

Surprisingly, Bep Guidolin, the temperamental Boston coach, had nothing but kind words for his team following the loss. Just a day earlier he was criticizing them harshly and accusing the players of failing to give a second effort.

"I don't fault anyone for the loss last night," he said. "Everybody put out. We came back when we were down and tied it up, then missed an awful lot of good chances.

"All we have to worry about is winning tomorrow's game in Boston. If we win, it will make a big difference and put the pressure on the Flyers and the series will become a toss of the coin."

Esposito, who admitted he played poorly in Sunday's third game loss, said, "We didn't play too bad last night. I guess, though, when you lost, you play a bad game. We're not out of it yet. We've won three straight before."

Shero, a man who has lifted his players time and again with slogans, has another one for what could be the biggest moment of their careers.

"If we win together now, we will walk together forever," was Shero's latest word of inspiration. "You'll never forget each other if you win a championship together."

The Flyers fully expect to begin that long walk Thursday night.

Ruggers meet Amherst

By HIESS McDEWIS

This Saturday the UMass RFC faces Amherst College in their annual bloodbath. Between these crosstown rivals, two different philosophies of rugby are readily apparent to the most novice rugger. Amherst now schedules two sets of games a week, one set on Wednesday and another set on the weekend. UMass schedules one or two sets of games a week, always on the week end. What is so different about these styles? Simply that with their midweek contests Amherst cannot reap the benefits of the after game festivities, and after their weekend games, they refuse to participate in these events. They like to go out, play a game, and come back to Amherst to hide. UMass, on the other hand, goes out to play a set of games and then enjoy themselves afterwards. With the home team (except Amherst College) always supplying a few kegs of beer, it is easy to anaesthetize one's injuries with the opposing players. After the rugby party, there is always another party somewhere around the home team's facilities. The best time is usually had at the party after the party that is after the rugby party. I seriously doubt if any Amherst rugger has seen a rugby party, let alone one of these affairs.

Another source of tensions comes from Amherst's preoccupation with records. With so many teams in New England, you can certify yourself of a winning record. By playing the class, though, you can have a losing record and end up playing much better rugby.

For the record, and after talking with several players, I can tell you that the UMass record for the season is 5-2. The losses were by one and three points and the winning margins are by considerably more. The B side is also 5-2 and the C side is 6-2. That makes our record 16-6, right? This is with our hardest schedule in years. In the tournament, not included above, the A side lost to Beacon Hill 12-4 and the B side lost by a large margin to the Boston Firsts. Amherst (afraid of a loss?) did not even show up at the tournament, which was held in the far reaches of New England ... UMass.

All in all, though, it looks like we will have a good weekend with some hard-hitting rugby. UMass won this contest last spring and Amherst took it last fall. It will be a tough game for both sides.

Woman lacrosser has various roles

By PAT GRUNDY
Black News Service

Aside from the various roles of mother, housewife, student and hair stylist, which keep her mentally alert and astute, Audrey Stevens finds time in her busy schedule to also be a member of the women's lacrosse team.

The youthful looking freshman came here from Reidsville, North Carolina two years ago with her son, Carlton, and her husband, Alonzo, who will be getting his PH.d from the School of Education this June. Audrey says she believes that the key to a woman's good health and youthful appearance is due to plenty of strenuous exercise which this game provides. She also states that playing lacrosse is part of a physical fitness program of her own design to stay in top physical shape. She says, "playing lacrosse not only provides me with the exercise I need but by studying its history gives me insight into what it means to be part of a team."

Year-end musings

There is, despite all of the imitations you have been reading of late, no such thing as a farewell column in the world of journalism unless the writer is going into a bonafide retirement.

And most of the writers, in fact I dare say, all the writers on the staff of the Collegian are going to write again...somewhere...somehow.

You will have the great fortune of hearing from the Bob Scheiers, Earle Barrolls, Bill Ballous and Marty Kelleys again.

For these are media people who want to dedicate their lives to the readership of America, wherever it might be.

Students here at UMass do not realize how damn lucky they are with regard to the Athletic Fee. At least they are told WHERE their money is actually going and HOW MUCH of it is going where!!!

Try telling Ohio State to tell their students how much of their tuition costs go to athletics. Good luck!

Breaking the money situation down further one will find that, at OSU, the allotment for LD phone calls alone far exceeds that TOTAL football budget here at UMass.

The students there pay for the program too...a lot more than students do here...and they aren't even told so. Nice guys, eh?

So what does the UMie do when he finds out he doesn't like the way his money is being spent? He starts griping.

Maybe the Athletic Department should pull an OSU job and hide it from you.

At least then you wouldn't know any better, right? You know...the old "Silence is Golden" routine...Oh, yes.

--- --- ---

Well, Spring is rapidly unfolding her arms and letting Summer take over. And with that move...students move out of Southwest and the pro football players move in.

Is it true that the WFL has three teams coming to practice here before the arrival of the Patriots in July?

No one seems to really know...including the WFL.

But have no fear, Chuck Fairbanks will be back. He said he loved the place. Ever since Southwest had those air conditioners put in last Summer.

It took one hell of a sky jockey to do the job but it kept pro football at UMass for at least another year.

--- --- ---

Rumors that Dusty Rhodes was hot after Steve Schubert are all true. Well, she got Billy DeFlavio anyway.

Look for a trade involving former Stanford Indian Randy Vataha so as to make room for Schubie.

I wonder how long it will take Plunkett and Steve to finalize the touches on the old "five count and break" pass pattern that took UMass into Atlantic City in 72?

--- --- ---

The Carnavals of the Eastern League are not doing too well as of late but Steve Newell has won himself a home at first base, for the time being at least.

--- --- ---

The baseball squad at UMass. (yes Julia we do have a baseball team here) came back...and they're glad they did.

Barring a talent depleting draft...Here's a toast to '75.

Catch ya later.

Athletic dept. plans changes in policy

By BOB ESTELLE

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney revealed plans to reorganize the Athletic Department yesterday.

In a meeting with members of the crew team, McInerney went over several of the problems the Athletic Department will be facing within the next few years.

McInerney stated that his primary goal is to keep as many athletes in athletics as possible. He went on to state that with the rising costs of athletics and the expansion of women's sports, this is getting more and more difficult.

In replying to the crew's request for varsity status, McInerney replied that he could not recommend it under the present system. He did say, however, that a new system is being worked on.

"In the coming years," McInerney stated, "the only way UMass can keep its programs at the present quality level is to give every team equal status regarding the budget and financial aid. But football, basketball, and to an extent, hockey will have to get preferential treatment because of the possibilities of earning income for the program. We have to keep these programs attractive enough so that people will come up to Amherst to see them play. That is where we get our money for financial aid."

The Athletic Department is presently organizing a new system where this idea can be implemented. On campus, an advisory group is being formed in which representatives of every team, varsity and club, will be contributing input. McInerney will be putting in a work management system that will respond to the needs of every athletic organization on campus.

Off campus, UMass will be taking a leadership role in finding solutions to the ever-growing number of common problems shared by athletic administrators. McInerney will be attending a meeting of the National Association of Athletic Directors in Montreal at the end of next month. There, studies will be made on how to adjust to new problems and McInerney is hopeful that conclusions on how mutual problems will be solved will be presented and acted upon.

When asked about raising the athletic fee to meet the rising costs, McInerney stated that it was not possible to do so as the amount of fees on campus are too high.

McInerney also discussed the possibility of sending UMass teams to play in national competition. He stated that while money isn't available to send these teams, the Athletic Department might help a team in certain situations.

The crew recommended to McInerney that William Mahoney, a 1973 Harvard graduate who was the captin of the Harvard crew as a senior, be hired to replace departed coach Mike Vespoli. McInerney accepted their recommendation and stated that Mahoney, who has international rowing experience, would receive a formal contract as a part-time coach.

When asked about the expansion of women's sports at UMass, McInerney stated that a woman will be hired as his assistant and will be in charge of setting up the entire women's athletic program.

McInerney concluded by saying that he sees a year of relative stability as the budgets and coaches for next year have been settled but that 1975-76 would be the critical year.

Whelan--near goal

By WALT POWERS

The road from Bedford, New Hampshire to Munich, Germany is a long one, but after passing his next-to-last checkpoint in Berkeley, California last weekend, UMass gymnast Gene Whelan has found himself on the threshold of a dream.

The "road" is the World-games qualification schedule and the "dream" is a berth on the USGA gymnastics team. If Whelan performs as well in September finals as he did with his fifth-place finish in last weekend's USGF semis, the final lap to the world Games in Munich will be a smooth one.

Whelan's fifth-place finish helped pace the Eastern Regional team to its second straight team title in the qualifying meet.

Judging throughout the meet was extremely hard and Whelan attributed this factor to his "not bad, not spectacular" score.

"I threw 12 solid routines and scored 106.2. At the NCAA meet I missed a routine and still scored a 106.4," Whelan said.

Whelan never broke during the two-day meet, and experienced only fleeting doubts enroute to the most important score of his career. He was in fifteenth place after three compulsory events, thought about it, and then decided to let the others worry about their routines. His 9.35 score on parallel bars was the highest compulsory score of his life.

The injuries that nearly kept Whelan out of the NCAA meet never affected him, but NCAA champ Steve Hug was eliminated by injury and Wayne Young, NCAA third-place finisher, withdrew after two routines.

In the running battle between the Whelan twins, Jay came up with the best performance of his career to win it with a second-place finish.

Duffers go on tear, win 4 of last 5

The UMass golfers won four out of five matches last week, as they closed out their Fall - Spring schedule with an impressive 13-2 tri-match record.

On Monday, at Hickory Ridge C.C., the Minutemen paced by Rick Olson's 77 took 400 blows for a 10-stroke victory over Bryant, and a 15-stroke margin over Springfield.

On Wednesday the golfers travelled to Taconic C.C., home course of newly crowned New England champion, Williams, and picked up 2 victories and a defeat. Williams swept the quad - match with a 391 total. UMass was 4 shots back at 395. SUNY at Albany shot 417. Middlebury took the scenic route with 428 strokes.

John Lasek toured the tight Taconic layout with a 3 over par 74. Coach Fan Gaudette called Lasek's round one of the finest put together by a UMass player this Spring.

"John had some trouble with his game earlier in the Spring," said Gaudette. "He is just starting to put everything together. A 74, on a course as demanding as Taconic is a great round of golf."

Dave Kern, the only graduating senior on the team, played consistent golf throughout the Fall and Spring. His finest hour of the season was a 76 in the ECAC Regionals, the medalist score for 250 of the best collegiate golfers in New England.

New England college golf coaches are discussing the possibility of lengthening the Fall part of the schedule and shortening the weather hampered Spring campaign. Another possible change would be the end of the tri-match format. The new trend may be a one day invitational tournament each week with ten to a dozen teams competing.

Gorillas grab NE title; triumph 25-5

By MIKE ELLIOTT

The UMass lacrosse team closed out its 1974 season, yesterday, with an amazing 25-5 bombardment of Dartmouth College.

A highlight of the game was Harry McVey breaking the UMass regular season points record. Harry was a dominant force in the game, scoring six goals and assisting on two others. These points gave him a total of 85 on the season (41 goals and 44 assists), breaking the regular season record of 84, held by former attackman (now an assistant coach), Charlie Hardy.

The game was the last in a UMass uniform for seniors, John Rutledge, Rich Lally, Hirsch Seidman, Russ Incorvia, Jack Moran, and Bruce Sibson.

It was "Senior Day" but the rookies stole the spotlight. Freshman attackman Jeff Spooner scored two, almost identical, goals within the first minute of play. Spooner, on both plays, got the ball behind the Dartmouth net, pranced around the defenseman, and popped the ball by the goalie's right side. Those two goals were only the start for Spooner, who later added five more goals (all in the first half) and two assists to his credit. Those 7 goals boosted Spooner's season total to 50 (he also has 23 assists).

Garber's Gorillas completely dominated every aspect of the game (does that sound familiar?). They blistered the Dartmouth netminder with an amazing total of 49 shots, including goals. They also battered The Big Green physically, throwing some excellent bodychecks. Dartmouth never had a chance. The Gorillas outscored their opponents, 14-2 in the first half, and 11-3 in the second.

The Gorillas burned Dartmouth several times with their fastbreak. The fourth UMass goal was a picture perfect fastbreak. The passing was on the pinpoint, starting from goalie John Rutledge, to Steve Pappas flying upfield, to Harry McVey at the restraining line, to Pete Connolly at the goalies right side, and then across the cease to Jeff Spooner for the score.

Senior midfielder Hirsch Seidman scored in this, his last game, on a solid, thirty foot shot after taking a pass from Spooner. Other UMass scorers were: Dandy Scheffer (2 goals and 2 assists), Tiger Arnold (1 and 2), John Martin (1 goal), Pete Connolly (1 and 2), Jack Moran (1 and 1), George Peraino (1 and 2), Jim Curran (1 and 1), Steve Pappas (1 and 1), Tom Geronimos (2 goals), and Billy Collins (1 assist).

LACROSSE NOTES — The Gorillas have finished their season with an 11-2 record, the New England Championship, and ranked ninth in the nation... Billy Blaustein and Billy Collins were elected captains of next year's team... The J.V. team (the Chimps) were defeated by the Dartmouth J.V.'s, 9-2.

Thatcher Redwoods cut down BKP; win IM softball finals, 3-1

By RUSS SMITH

A crowd of over 100 watched this matchup of the two best softball teams in the area for the Campus Championship of the 1974 IM season. This was it — one team would take the title, the other would have to settle for being second rate material.

The Redwoods were at bat first against BKP...

First inning: After Kish popped out, Smith (no relation), McMalone, and pitcher George Koprole each got hits, pushing an early run across the plate, and giving them a fast 1-0 lead.

Second inning: Bob V. doubled up on the hill in left, and was followed by Chip who walked. But, BKP's pitcher Burke settled down to get out of another jam.

BKP couldn't mount an offense inning. They were hitting the ball, but right at people. At the end of two complete it was still 1-0.

In the third, the Redwoods added a couple more runs to their lead. Rick led off, and singled. Pete then doubled to the gap in center, to put two on with no outs. Up to bat comes the pitcher, George. He blasts one to the left field, who makes the catch — but drops the ball. Two runs score (George is out trying for third on the throw home) and it was 3-0, Thatcher.

And as if BKP didn't need any more frustration, they got it anyways in the 4th inning. Mucciarone led off with an infield hit. Tom Burke popped to the shortstop. Then, THE BIG PLAY! Robinson smacks a ground ball to Smith at shortstop, who flips it to Kish at second for one, and over to McMalone at first for a 6-4-3 double play, and for all intents and purposes THAT was the game!!!

BKP got up for their last chance at getting into the game, but a Marmlee tap to the pitcher and over to first for one, a pop-up to the pitcher, and a fly to center field ended their hopes.

The Thatcher Redwoods are the softball Campus Champs! Thatcher 3-8-0 BKP 0-5-1

The IM trophy was presented to the Redwoods right after the game.

Intramural year wrapup, tomorrow...

Financial problems plague soccer team

By WALT POWERS

Soccer faces the same problems as the men's gym team, says UMass soccer coach Al Rufe.

Rufe made his remarks with Captain Carl Vercollone at Tuesday's meeting of the Athletic Council and reiterated them in an informal conference with his team and representatives of the Collegian sports staff yesterday.

Rufe said that there is no present state position for a soccer coach at the University and wondered where one would come from when he leaves "sometime after next year".

"I'll coach at least one more year because I enjoy it and to maintain the coaching position", Rufe said. "But I'm not sure if I can continue - after next year. I'm in a difficult position as athletic financial manager and soccer coach."

Rufe became the fourth UMass soccer coach in four years last September when he replaced Dr. Gerry Redmond. He is unpaid.

Athletic Director Frank McInerney said that there is currently a state position available in the department being held in escrow until resolution of current departmental problems. That position could possible go to soccer, gymnastics, or even something else. Who will receive the position has not yet been decided.

Carl Vercollone spoke about the chronic problems the soccer team has faced since he joined the squad. He said that soccer at the New England level was very competitive and that the Yankee Conference was "one of the strongest in the nation."

Lack of funds have hampered the UMass program, and in effect, soccer is a "minor sport" at UMass, according to Vercollone.

"We only have a ten-game schedule, and the New England average is 14. This hurts our chances of getting a post-season tournament bid," Vercollone said. UMass pciked up an eleventh game this year against Westfield State, but Vercollone said that the team could have picked up four more for $800."

The soccer team presently grants no scholarship aid, but Vercollone said he felt that the team could draw on the large reservoir of local high school talent to produce a successful program. Coaching changes over the past several years have hurt recruitment, he said.

At this point it looks like a battle between soccer and gymnastics for the one available coaching position. Rufe was reluctant in the beginning to bring soccer team into the gym dispute, but felt that recent events have made it necessary. "We don't want a decision to be made without the people knowing the complete story," Vercollone said.

THE TRIAL

Someone must have been telling lies about Mark V., because without having done anything wrong, he was arrested one fine morning. His landlord's cook, who usually awakens him at eight each day failed to show on this occasion.

He wasn't actually arrested: only put on trial.

—00000—

In October of 1972, Collegian reporter Mark V. penned a number of investigative articles concerning "alleged thefts" by employees of the Worcester Dining Commons.

The publication of a photograph showing two workers walking from the Commons carrying plastic bags said to contain stolen food appeared Tuesdaa, October 31, 1972, on page one of the Collegian, sparking an immediate investigation by University Food Services and the Campus Police.

Although a formal inventory was not conducted, on November 13, Food Services director Joel Stoneham announced that no loss of food stuffs had occurred after a preliminary spot check.

David Johnston, Director of Security at UMass Police Department, said concerning the controversial photo: "We can find no evidence that these people, in fact, were taking unauthorized material.

"The ladies," he continued, "that appear in the photo, are two of the very best Dining Common employees. One woman spends twenty hours a week doing voluntary work. There is quite a story about this woman as to how she makes Christmas decorations out of discarded material. In the picture, in fact, she was carrying a bag of discarded material."

"The woman," stated Assistant Director of Security, Saul Chafin, "rightfully wants it known that she's not guilty of anything. Her ability to make Christmas decorations out of nothing is unquestionable. She has permission to take home the discarded articles."

He also claimed that plastic bags alone "can't be even considered stolen property. It can't even be alleged."

The campus was outraged over the self-appointed inquiries conducted by this Collegian reporter.

Said Mark V.: "At this point I had the greater part of the newspaper supporting me in my mission of investigative reporting. Those same people who supported me then, would later label me as a muckraker."

YELLOW JOURNALISM

On November 1, 1972, Mrs. Carol A. Drew, President of the local 1776, an employee union, referred to the Dining Commons expose as "nonsense in the best tradition of Randolph Hearst" and titled the Collegian's literary status as "yellow journalism".

Members of the Young Workers Liberation League were "outraged" claiming that "it was an article having no evidence to back up and its points severely questioned the trustworthiness of the women who work in the Dining Commons".

"Judge not, lest ye be judged...!" wrote in an original thinking student. He also stated that 80 per cent of the food stolen from the Dining Commons each year is accounted to students. However, he refrained from quoting his source of information.

"COOK HIS GOOSE"

Representing the defense of Mark V. was a letter from a "thankful student".

"I have worked in Hampshire Commons," it reads, "part time and have heard one of the cooks boasting that he seldom visits a grocery store — most of his food comes from the Dining Commons. His blatant remarks burned me to no end and I felt pretty helpless about it. Maybe someone will 'cook his goose' sooner or later. I hope that you will be keeping pressure on the Dining Commons."

Another student, Russel J. Cataldo, wrote in: "If there is going to be an investigation I hope it's of the Food Services Department. Maybe students wouldn't be inclined to steal things if they got a half decent meal while they were in the Dining Commons."

As far as any investigation or inquiries made, Joel Stoneham stated: "Well, there's been disciplinary action taken before in the past. As far as court action taking place, somebody booked and sent to jail, to the best of my knowledge, this has never happened.

"We have in the past," he continued, "turned up employees who have taken food and property from the Dining Commons. These people were subjected to disciplinary action in the sense that their employment was terminated."

This statement was made on Tuesday, November 7, 1972. Incidentally, that was over two years ago; no cooked geese.

Behind the articles lies the true story of exactly what was done in the investigative reporting and how it was done.

As to what really happened back in October of 1972, what has happened since, and what will happen next, a new shred of evidence, heretofore concealed, an inkling of hidden truth, may cause a resurrection.

"Don't Get Caught!"

About the first week of October, 1972, two students named John Walker and Peter Arvanitis, roommates, approached Mark V. and claimed that they knew of certain Dining Common employees who were "sacking" the Worcester eating area by night. According to Walker, "old ladies were hording off stuff in big plastic bags." They said that they would like to catch them in the act on film and submit the photos to the Collegian.

That Friday night V. went down to the back of the Worcester Dining Commons where he overheard a number of employees discussing what they would bring home for the weekend. "Don't get caught by the boss," cautioned one of them.

Returning to the student's dorm, V. asked when the thefts were occurring. The two replied that shortly after 7:00 at the East entrance to Worcester was the best time for nabbing them with the goods.

October 19, 1972, steak night, as it is called. No one on the Collegian photo staff seemed very impressed with Mark V.'s plan, except one female photographer, new and unexperienced on the paper.

That evening, Mark V. and Pam Perry began their endeavor without hesitation. With V. directing the shots and she shooting, some excellent photos were taken.

Strolling along side of the two women, V. could clearly see one of the huge plastic bag's contents. "One contained bread, milk, and other food," he later stated. "I was within reaching distance of the big plastic bags that had been described to me."

In chronological order, V. next visited with members of the Food Services Administration on October 20, 1972. He informed Arthur Warren, Assistant Food Services Director that he had come to do an article concerning the student's gripes over food, never once mentioning his real intents.

"This interview was merely a set up for the bigee," said V. "I kept Mr. Warren on record for saying things that I would later hold him accountable for."

Gomes Goes, Feld Felled, Weiss Walks, Mack Packs; Clayton Leaves Too

In a whirlwind bout of late season trading, General Manager Mike Kostek has effected a major reshuffling of his crackerjack Below The Salt staff. "Time for a change", was his comment.

In the first deal, recalcitrant People's Art Director (now Between Jobs) Jeff Clayton was sold to Harvard for a nominal sum. "Just talking with those guys at Harvard gives me great inspirations. I know a lot of people call them pigs, but I know they're really the raison d'etre. Anyway, that Clayton was stiffing out on me. I made him Art Director, and he goes off with Emmanuel Kant. Maybe those Harvard eggheads will get him going. He would be tough playing for the Lampoon. They could really give us a tough time."

When reached for comment, Jeff waxed philosophical: "It's 50-50. Either you're here or you're not."

Next, Spiritual Advisor Gary 'Uman' Gomes was dispatched to Saturn, care of Sun Ra's Outer Spaceways Incorporated. Says Kostek: "Like Clayton, Gomes was going to retire. I pulled off a great deal here. I got rid of that clubhouse lawyer Gomes and got a Summer of Love in return. That Ra guy doesn't really know much. He must have thought Gomes was a real Muslim or something with all his name changes."

Outer Spaceways announced that Gomes was indeed retiring, rather than either joining Ra's band or going to work on Saturn. Instead, Gary will be returning to his beloved Fall River home to work in a bank. "Hoo Boy", said Sun Ra.

In the day's shocker, old pro Steve Feld, who was with the outfit since its Poor days, was packed off to Syracuse in return for autographs of Jim Nance and Floyd Little. "They'll be really valuable someday," mused Kostek. "I bet Feld won't. He was stagnating anyway. They're pretty dumb at Syracuse; Steve will stick out like a sore thumb."

In the final deals, regulars Fred Weiss and Kevin Mack were shipped to Rutgers University and Germany respectively.

"Both these guys were acting up, you know? Books, books, books is all Weiss thinks of. Books are dying! And these 'Book Corners' of his! Fred Weiss reads — do you? I mean, Fred's getting a little big upstairs. As for Mack, I made sure he was traded out of the league. Click, click, clik. He can do a lot of damage with that camera of his. Those Krauts will get a load out of him.

"Nothing personal — Germany gave us an unbelievable deal on Weisswurst. Incredible."

Hal Boyle's skull rolled out on to the table. In a way of mumbled thanks and faint praise, this is the serious, sober, ernest part of this page 2 that rather baringly thanks some of the departing friends of Below The Salt.

Jeff Clayton has been going to school with me for more than ten years now, and I'd like to say that I've never seen any individual as gifted in so many areas. Jeff has been a constant source of inspiration through the years, and has done a lot to make me as I am. I'd like to wish him luck at Harvard Grad School, but hope he gets a little crazier.

(Through the years, Jeff Clayton has written record reviews, satires and created artistic monstrosities-treasures, such as Singing Ink margin art that fills Below The Salt's music pages. Thank you, Joff, UMass thanks you.)

••••••••

Frederic C. Weiss has been something special in his year here. His energy and drive has spilled out from the Book Pages infecting everyone he meets, from Bob Estelle to Ted Kennedy. Fred's made the Book Pages jucier than they've ever been, and his weekly column is often spiffy too. Equipped with a burning desire to succeed, Fred will go far. He's been my assistant this semester, and has been mighty strong.

(Fred Weiss has been Assistant Fine Arts Editor, Book Editor, rebuffed Editor-in-Chief and a Collegian columnist. All in one year. UMass thanks you, Ferd).

••••••••

Steve Feld was really the first record reviewer in UMass history. Through the years, his ears have heard thousands of albums, and his pronouncements on the hundred or so he's written up have always been interesting and most controversial. Equipped with another burning desire to succeed, Steve will pop up somewhere.

(Steve Feld has been Music Editor, Issue Editor, Stalwart Smoothie, August Imbiber and hated and loved by thousands. Nice job on Aerosmith, Steve.)

••••••••

Kevin Mack has been taking pictures since before he was born. His concert photos have graced these pages for the past year, and certainly will be missed.

(Kevin Mack likes to take pictures. Lots of pictures. He also writes book reviews and likes books. A lot of books. He also writes record reviews and likes records. Lots of records.)

Last, here is farewell to one of the great people ever to stroll the hallways of UMass, Gary Gomes.

Just then.

Mr. Legend says Gary was young, a freshman, socked into an obscene Southwest tower. He was huddled in his room on the 40th floor on his first night up here, drinking and smoking some of his 'medicine', when he saw someone fall past his window.

"Uh, excuse me," interrupted Gary, "but what's the deal? Anything I can do to help? I'm just curious."

"Get involved!" screamed the bulleting body as it hit the ground and splattered.

For some reason the young Gomes took this nonsense seriously. Check the list of credits at the end of this maudlin mash, and see what Mr. Gomes has done.

UMan Gomes. Then and now.

I've known Gary for less than two years, but he has one of the most amazing minds (and correspondingly punishing sense of humor ever to flunk out of Humor 101) I've ever encountered. He cares so Godamn much about everything. As Jeff Clayton said, "Gary's the only one I know who's not afraid to make an ass of himself in print." And often Gary would — to make a point.

Gary's been one of the best writers, musicians and students (in the purest sense of thirsting for knowledge sense) ever to attend UMass. I hope some of you took the time to read his columns and reviews. Brilliant. (You've got your last chance this week: a short story on page 11 and some record reviews on page 9).

Gary's challenged and changed my life, and has affected almost every one he's come in contact with. No one I know lives as fully as Gary Gomes, the biggest person I know; one of the few people not afraid to take on life, and to take life on. A better friend I'll never have.

(Gary UMass Uman Booman Gomes has been a Student Senator, early Concert Committee member, Propaganda Clerk for the Student Senate, a counselor in Adams, Greenough and everywhere he goes, a colloquium teacher, a Music Reviewer, Political Commentator, Assistant Fine Arts Editor, Political Editor for Below The Salt; and recently has been founding the Jazz Society. Gary, UMass salutes and thanks you immensely. Even though it doesn't know it.)

Below the Salt is a weekly magazine of the UMass Daily Collegian, student newspaper, Amherst, Mass.

"The truth was doomed to die. It was being downtrodden, was being drowned, burned, ground to ashes. But look — it has survived, it lives, it has been printed, and nobody ever will be able to wipe it out."

The Editor would like to take this time and space to thank those on and-or off the creative payroll of Below The Salt. Great people. Thanks to all.

If you ever want to see me again (ha, ha), try the Below The Salt back-to-school part parts tomorrow (Friday, sokol, you dip) in 18 Cance (Yeslow's hang). Don't take it away.

Dumb Things Done

This is a funny game. It's a real game in that humans are involved, and are required to do real things in getting this Below The Salt business completed.

The following are dumb things done and regretted by said humans:

David Miller's review of Nico's Marble Index had no cutline. Well, he wrote it.

Jeff Howard's review of Aerosmith's Get Your Wings had no cutline. He wrote it.

Peter Laird's cartoon of Nixon as The ConquerorWorm carneout poorly, with no credit, and was incidentally treated very poorly by the Collegian.

Steve Ruggles got no photo credit for his sensitive portrayal of Karen Lynch pretending to sniff snuff back in April.

Kevin Mack received no photo credit for his fine shots of the Everywoman's Center also back in April.

The Fine Arts Council hardly got the time of day from us in the way of previews, but it's been only recently that we've worked outselves up to 12 pages, and brother, those have been ad laden. Maybe next time.

Apologies to all we've slighted in one way or another. We did try; we're done with our dumb things for this semester.

Welcome Back!

It has been a long time, hasn't it? To those fortunate ones able to go to Summer School here, it's been one continuous joyride. But to those of us who had to Work this summer, be it scraping shit out of the Oxford pickles or drum in some maronic teenage combo traipsing up and down the valley, we can only view our return to UMass this September with grateful applause.

My name is Below The Salt. I am a sexy, cookee magazine run by a bunch of sinister burned-out freaks who do a lot of goofy things to make us look silly. Well, I'm gooddamb tired of this jive, and if you don't mind I'm going to take this coastab frexble to speck with somethina I need to say:

The Record Man

Below the Salt photos by Mary M. Flynn

by Peter Royal

Peter E. Royal was a Columbia Records Campus Promotion Manager for three years. He is moving onto greener pastures this June, and has graciously consented to leave with us a few of his own unique observations of life. The following article does not represent the opinions or ideals of — the Columbia Broadcasting System, the COLLEGIAN, BELOW THE SALT, Earl Scheib or anyone else for that matter.

You don't know me, but I am responsible for that great party that you threw last Saturday night in Southwest or Central, or even Orchard Hill. I am responsible for the transportation of your soul and mind to just about anywhere that you want to go. I am also responsible for the continuation of commerce in a few stores in the Amherst area. I am the major reason for the existence of WMUA and WAMH. It is probable that I am responsible for occupying most of your leisure time in the past eight or ten years of your life. In fact I am responsible for more good times on this campus than anyone else with the possible exception of your dealer.

Who am I? I am the Record Man. I am that Purveyor of plastic, that Toddler of tunes and that Vendor of vinyl. I bring the hits to the stores, the radio stations and the record reviewers so that they can sell the hits to you. Not all records are hits, just the ones that we decide to make hits. After all if the only artists capable of making hit records were the Grateful Dead, the Stones and Dylan, wouldn't that be boring?

For the past three years I have assumed the role of the Record Man in and around the Amherst area. The role of the Record Man is varied and complex. I service records to the stores, radio stations and newspapers for promotional purposes. I report on the sales and airplay of records. I baby sit for artists, arrange interviews, plug albums and generally make a musical nuisance of myself.

As a record man, I had to be many persons to many people. Therefore, I have developed into a kind of multiple being, changing my personality to fit my environment. I have had to work with high school drop-outs, women, blues freaks, homosexuals, straights, blacks, and a large variety of sizzling drug users, stuck-up school boys, egoists and mumbling morons. I have forced myself to deal with these people professionally and socially under all conditions. Consequently, my own identity has suffered and my professional and private personality have been lost within each other.

The main result of my work has not been my large record collection but an insight into the recording industry. I now see how vast and powerful the record companies are and how unaware the average consumer is. Record companies control a large part of our life simply by the records that they make. Records provide jobs, money, relaxation and most importantly, peer acceptance. Most consumers don't even know why they really buy records. More importantly, few consumers are aware that the record companies already know what you are going to buy, and make the choices available to you. To put it bluntly — other people tell you what to like.

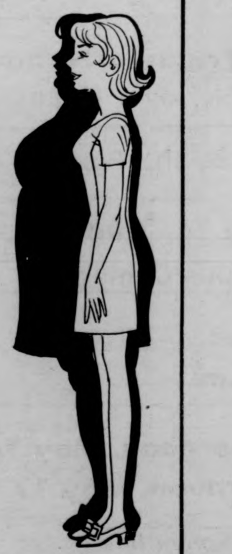
The record company starts out by signing to their label only those artists that have a chance of selling a lot of records. This usually results in an artists roster with a core of white commercial rock bands. White rock bands are the most successful of all recording artists because they appeal to the people with the money. The people with the money are the middle to upper class white teenagers, and they buy a lot of albums, and albums make a lot of money for the record company.

Black artists and soul artists don't sell as well as white rock bands for a few reasons. One big reason is that they are not promoted as much as the white artists. This is an extention of our racist society. Another reason is that Black teenagers don't have the financial capacity to buy a lot of albums, yet they can buy a lot of 45s. So black artists cut a lot of singles because the record companies feel that it would be a waste of money for them to record albums that no one would buy. Black and jazz artists do not appeal to the biggest buyers of records, and therefore do not represent a lucrative an investment as white rock bands. The more a band appeals to more people, the more records it will sell and the more money will be made.

A major reason that companies don't want too many black or soul acts is that the company does not want to develop a soul or black image. For to have too many soul groups on the label gives the impression that the company deals exclusively with soul acts, and this may have the result of driving away new white rock acts from signing with the label. The white record-buying public also might associate the label with soul and be cautious of any record it puts out. One way that large companies have avoided this is by developing a custom label that deals exclusively with soul and black acts. This way the parent company can disassociate itself from the black acts and at the same time build a black-orientated label and still reap the profits from it. This was done by Columbia Records and their Philadelphia International label. Motown Records, long a totally black rostered label, did the same in reverse. They created Rare Earth Records, a label they distribute that has only white groups.

"Sorry Clive — I'm in control now"

The major companies also stay away from folk and blues acts. These acts don't sell very well, so naturally the companies don't want to have them on the label. Women artists never got too much of a chance in the recording industry because male acts sold better. Females were just not bothered with. Now all this has changed, and female solo artists and female bands are being signed to all labels. Instead of being sexually discriminated against as they were before, they are now going to be sexually exploited. Ever since Janis Joplin proved women can sell records, every label has been trying to have their own female super star. Bette Midler, Maggie Bell and Carly Simon are just a few examples of some of the new entries in the New Female Bob Dylan Treasure Hunt Contest.



After reading the above you may well ask why does a company bother to sign black, soul and folk acts. The answer is corporate image. In order to cover themselves against racist allegations, the large companies make sure that minority and ethnic acts and employees are well represented on its roster. Some of these acts do make a little money, but for every soul and folk act that does not make money, there are three to five white rock acts that make enough money back to cover.

Everyone knows that in order to have a hit record or a top album it must have proper exposure. The law of the industry is "talent does not mean sales — promotion does." An album that gets a review in the paper or receives heavy airplay on the radio will sell a lot more records than an album that does not get this exposure. Obviously, all companies want to get their records on the radio and in the paper. There are the usual ways of promoting a record: advertisements in Billboard and Rolling Stone; in store displays, sales, posters and give away gimmicks and contests. And there is also the other way.

The other way is called payola, and it is also called unethical, immoral and good business. Payola is when a disc jockey plays a record or a reviewer gives a good review to an album in exchange for favors and or goods. Payola can take the form of drugs, free records, free passes to concerts, cash and in some cases, even prostitutes. (Now don't give me a call and ask me for free dope or eight tracks of Aerosmith — I don't have any). Payola is illegal, and the recording industry fervently denies that it goes on. The fact is that it does go on but it is rarely discussed and kept as quiet as possible.

Promotion and payola play their biggest role in radio airplay. Over one hundred and fifty records are released a week, and only a limited amount can make the airwaves. Less than one half of all the rock, soul, jazz and pop records on the market get played by the big FM rock stations like HCN and BCN. This is a lot less than they could play, but considering that radio airplay is responsible for over one third of all records sold, these stations can have quite an impact on the sales of these albums. The most dramatic effect of radio airplay is displayed by the top 40 AM stations. These stations like WABC play only seventeen or eighteen records a week. Even though this represents only a fraction of the amount of records available, these records receive extensive airplay and usually result in helping songs and albums achieve gold record status or sales of over one million copies. Therefore competition among the companies for the limited amount of radio time available is tough and the result if often payola. If there is too much payola around, the industry only has itself to blame.

So what does all this promotion, payola and politics mean? It means that the consumer has very little say in what he likes. He never has a chance to acquire new and different tastes and explore unusual styles of music. The industry will not let him. He has to like what the industry wants him to like. His choices are the industry's choices. He can't buy what is not offered.

I have not gone into other aspects of the business, such as pushing some artists and not others, musical directions of artists and the industry, the vinyl shortage and the future of the recording industry. That would take up too much time and space. Let me say that the recording industry is going to grow and gain more control over artists and the consumers and leave it at that.

In the 3 years that I have worked I have had my successes and my failures. Records that I felt would never make it were Dr. Hook and the Medicine Show, Aerosmith, the O'Jays, Mac Davis and Billy Joel, and they all proved me wrong. Artists that made it big and who I felt were deserving were Edgar Winter, Paul Horn, David Essex, Earth, Wind and Fire, Loggins and Messina and especially Boz Scaggs. But what bothers me is the fact that these artists never made it: Thundermug, Crowbar (these two Canadian groups can easily put the Band to shame), Earl Scruggs, Frederick Knight, Gentle Giant and Moondog. All these artists truly have something to offer everyone.

During my three years I have made a lot of friends and accumulated quite a lot of enemies. The enemies usually hasseled me about meaningless things, or begged for records and generally annoyed me for no real reason. The friends, on the other hand, helped me out and made my job bearable and sometimes even enjoyable. So a big "THANKS FOR THE MEMORIES" goes out to: Michael and David (two real sizzling music freaks), John Hallock and For The Record, Mel and Tim and Sam and Dave (for being so harmless), the makers of chocolate cake, Joe and Lynn Santoro (who took care of all my business), Bob Foster (for bringing everybody down), the Canadian Ace Brewing Company of Newark, N. J., Donna Staffier (for playing Post Office), Brian for putting up with me for two and a half years, people and friends of the third floor past and present, Steve Tylerico, and most of all, to Mary who means more to me than all my Boz Scaggs and Crowbar albums put together.

MURALISM IS ON THE MOVE AT U.MASS.

by Arturo Lindsay, Black News Service

Under the direction of Prof. Leonel Gongora of the Art Department works of public art are being created. The group consisting of Julio Torres, Antonio Delgado, Clyde Santana, and Arturo Lindsay are dedicated to the bringing into focus life's real and human problems, as opposed to being decorative artist.

The group originated as an idea of Prof. Gongora approximately two years ago. In an attempt to organize the group, Prof. Gongora taught a class in Latin American Art as a project for the class a mural was designed by Arturo Lindsay and Nina Prantis (a former member of the group). The design was submitted to the Chamber of Commerce in Springfield because it included an abstract representation of a woman's breast. The reason given by a representative of the Chamber was that it was "suggestive". A second mural design was submitted to be rejected because it dealt with the culture of Latin American peoples. The group continued to function without compromising their principles although encountered with several more rejections.

All four members of the group participated in a figure drawing class taught by Prof. Gongora. Drawings were done life size on brown paper with charcoal to further give the individuals the feel for working on large projects. In January of this year the group began working as a cohesive unit. On their Tuesday afternoon meetings the group viewed slides of the Mexican Muralist. The class discussed technique, media, message, etc. In an effort to "get on the walls", the group created "paper murals" using brown wrapping paper and charcoal.

Although encountered with several obstacles, this group's efforts did not go unnoticed. Though the Humanist Center and Cityarts Workshop they were invited to exhibit along with other well known mural groups across the country at the Aida Hermandez Gallery in N.Y.C. during a conference entitled Projects in Public Art-Murals. Among the exhibitors were Arnold Belkin - muralist from N.Y.C. and Mexico, Cityarts Workshop, N.Y.C.; Freedom and Peace Community Organization, N.Y.C.; L.A. Fine Arts Squad, L.A.; Public Art Workshop, Chicago.

On April 19, 1974, Arturo Lindsay was sent as a representative of the group to speak on one of the panel discussions. The topic being "Murals and the Community". That panel included Eva Cockcroft, Peoples' Painters, New Brunswick, N.J.; Susan Shapinkrok, founder and director of Cityarts Workshop, N.Y.C.; Gary Rickson of Rickson Enterprises, Boston; John Weber, Public Art Workshop, Chicago. The moderator was Stephanie Sills, Director of Programs, Dept. of Cultural Affairs, N.Y.C.

Other notable artist and art historians at the conference included Dr. Francis O'Connor an art historian and author of three books on public art, articles on Jackson Pollock and the catalog of that artist at the Museum of Modern Art and the WPA projects; Mark Rogorin, the founder and director of Public Art Workshop of Chicago, Clarencewood, Philadelphia Museum of Art; Alan Okada, Cityarts N.Y.C.; Jason Crum, City Walls N.Y.C.

At present Anthony Delgado is working on a mural for the Commuter Assembly at the Univ. of Mass., Arturo Lindsay and Clyde Santana are negotiating murals with Mt. Holyoke College and a T.W. Center in Holyoke Mass, Julio Torres whose interest lies mostly in sculpture is working along with the other artists with the intentions of "coming of the wall" in relief using sculpture forms.

THE VOICES OF NEW AFRICA.

by Jeff Bates
Black News Service

The Voices Of New Africa is a choir composed of fifty Black students who come from one of the five colleges in the valley; (Smith, Mount Holyoke, U-Mass, Amherst, and Hampshire.)

The Choir's history actually started two years ago when a host of great Black artists were introduced to the valley. The artists were, Archie Shepp (musician), Nelson Stevens (art), Max Roach (musician), Ed Love (Sculptor), Diana Ramos (dance), Paul Carter Harrison (playwrite), and Eleo Pomare (dance). Those who accepted were, Paul Carter Harrison, Diana Ramos, Nelson Stevens, Max Roach, and Archie Shepp, are now Profs. in the Dept of African Studies. From this group of artists came the initial organizer of the choir, Prof. Max Roach, who is presently an instructor in the music dept.

Prof. Roach started the choir as a class called "Evolution of Vocal and Instrumental Afro-American Music". Two thirds of the class was used as a lecture, and one third was used as choir workshop. Prof. Roach worked with the Voices of New Africa Choir for one year. Within that year the choir performed in "My Freedom Now", composed by Max Roach and read by Ossie Davis. This performance was part of the first Black Musicians Conference held at UMass.

The current Director of The Voices of New Africa is Dr. Horace Boyer.

Dr. Boyer comes from Winter Park Florida. He received his B.A. in music from Bethume Cookman College and his M.A. and Phd. from the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York. Dr. Boyer was an instructor at Albany State College in Georgia, and Florida Tech University in Orlando Florida.

Dr. Boyer is also a professional gospel singer. He along with his brother James Boyer constitute the Boyer Brothers gospel singers who record and also sing in concerts.

Dr. Boyer took over The Voices of New Africa in September of 1973. He says, "the Voices of New Africa is dedicated to the study, performance, and dissemination of Afro-American vocal music including gospel, blues, spirituals, jazz, soul and slave songs such as cries, field hollers, and shouts. At the end of the school year the choir will have given ten concerts. Several have been performed here at UMass, others in Springfield, Northampton and Leominister churches, also Smith, Mount Holyoke, and Hampshire Colleges.

One of the choirs most smashing performances was "Lady Day", a play written by sister Aisha Rahman, who is presently the coordinator for the New Africa House Cultural Center. Paul Carter Harrison directed the play and was abley assisted by his team of young gifted and Black actresses and actors. The lead vocal parts were done by the beautiful unique voice of sister Althea Waites, who is Prof. of music at Smith College. The fascinating sounds that were heard from the band came from Prof. Archie Shepp's jazz workshop. Most of the music for the performance was written by Prof. Shepp. Upon its completion the performance received a standing ovation from the capacity filled student union ballroom.

The choir is funded through the budget of Afro-American Studies. Concerts off campus which require transportation are usually sponsored by the organization for which the choir sings. The choir is by audition only, and is open to all students of the five college area. The choir attracts students who appreciate Afro-American music, and also church congregations. Dr. Boyer says, "Our plans for next year include a tour of several cities including New Haven, New York and Philadelphia. Also a medley of songs composed by Max Roach. We will do a concert with the collective Black Artist Ensemble of New York and present a contemporary Black musical in the spring of 1975."

The future for the choir looks pleasant, we can only wish that they succeed in all their endeavors.

Two Stories: Nothing in Common apples and oranges

by Jeffrey Polman

THE THREE MUSKETEERS

directed by Richard Lester; starring Oliver Reed, Raquel Welch, Richard Chamberlain, Michael York, Charlton Heston, and Faye Dunaway, among others

The Three Musketeers is two hours worth of over-slick star-orgies and unoriginal slapstick (try saying that five times in a row!) It is rated PG because of a few bloody glimpses of sword wounds and Raquel Welch's cleavage, but it very easily could have been plummeted down to a G rating and advertised for the goo-goo circuit. I expected to be rolling in the aisles from laughter, but I found the people in the audience funnier to listen to. I was sure I'd be entertained by something different, but the lack of uniqueness in the movie was without a doubt its biggest crime.

Richard Lester owes everything to Ken Russell's film, The Devils. The exteriors are the same, the lighting, the make-up, the exaggerated silliness of the burgoisie costumes, even one of the actors (Oliver Reed), who must have been the assistant technical advisor to Lester. Taking into account how many people have not seen The Devils (a hell of a lot), it is easy to see why so many people liked The Three Musketeers. I was going to accuse Lester of Tom Jones larceny also, but that idea was dismissed when I remembered the frantic, cohesive pace of two Beatles' movies.

I happened to like the technical aspects of The Devils, though, so I was pleased to see them again; but there is another fault to The Three Musketeers which is more serious. Lester apparently thought he could do a decent job of directing at least a dozen big name actors and actresses at the same time. Well, he didn't. Michael York, as D'Artagnan, received the most camera exposure throughout the film, but I enjoyed him the least out of any of the crop. When he wasn't showing off his chest he was doing poor imitations of Woody Allen by slamming into people and artifacts in some kind of nervous personification. Richard Chamberlain, a fine Shakespearean actor who played either Porthos or Athos (I can't recall; they mentioned it once in some vague utterance), had a total of roughly five lines. Charlton Heston, in perhaps his first evil role as Cardinal Richelieu, was only in the film for his name, as were Faye Dunaway, Christopher Lee, Simon Ward, and Geraldine Chaplin (Raquel was there for a couple other reasons). Oliver Reed, my favorite out of the group, kept his frog-eyed pathological face intact but he, like Chamberlain, was subdued into the background.

Dumas' story The Queen's Diamonds is the subject for the movie. The plot, which I found very difficult to follow, concerns a strip of twelve diamond broaches, of which Milady (Dunaway) steals two from the Duke of Buckingham (Ward), who is holding them for the Queen of France (Chaplin). Cardinal Richelieu (Heston), the instigator of the theft, accompanies the King (Frank Finlay) to the Grand Ball, where the King expects her Majesty to show up wearing the beautiful jewels. D'Artagnon, meanwhile, who has been trying to join the Musketeers since the beginning of the film, rides all the way to England at the request of Constance (Welch), works with Buckingham to get two phony diamonds made up and connected to the others, and brings them back to France and the Queen single-handedly. D'Artagnan becomes a Musketeer at the end and that is that.

It's an exciting tale, but it should have been called D'Artagnan the Invincible because the actual three musketeers are together for less than 20 per cent of the film. When they are, there is realistic swashbuckling and fast-paced fury, but the scenes are cluttered up with uncalled-for burlesque (D'Artagnan's overweight servant kicking and smashing people with whatever is handy because he has no sword) and cliche lines right out of 'The Avengers in between swipes "(Why thank you!"). If Lester wanted to make a funny movie he should have employed Mel Brooks. There are just not enough good lines or routines.

But Lester has put too much emphasis on dressing up the film with extravagant sets, costumes, and photography, while letting the character studies and delicate plot go haywire. He took it for granted that everyone in the audience would know enough about the tale of the musketeers so that he could reduce explanations to a minimum, but in reality there are many grown adults who couldn't tell you the names of the three heroes, let alone the children who flock to the movie on weekend afternoons. A gallant goof by Sir Lester.

I respect the attempt at making The Three Musketeers an historical comedy, but somehow it just isn't funny enough. Tom Jones was much better, and it didn't have to rely on a bumbling fool for a main character like D'Artagnan. One scene from The Musketeers which comes close to perfection, though, is one in which the group enters a local restaurant to find some food. Two of the musketeers immediately stage a phony swordfight and proceed to spear chicken breasts with their weapons and toss them over to Oliver Reed, who stashes them in his cloak. This scene has genuine wit, but with Lester filling the remaining 115 minutes with bad lines and unconvincing rowdiness, you feel you are watching one overlong beer commercial. Bring back the Beatles, please.

CONTINENTAL Drifter

as told to Patty Duggan by Thomas Monahan

Thomas "Jay" Monahan, resident of McNamara is planning a different way of spending his summer. Jay, a freshman Psychology major, is going to walk across the United States, from Los Angeles to New York City. When asked why the 3000 mile — 4 and one half month hike, he answered: "I don't know. Maybe I'll know the reason when I reach New York. Right now it's just something I have to do."

Losing his sponsorship from a West Coast boot manufacturing company, Jay was forced a couple of months ago to take a $1000 dollar loan from a bank. The major portion of the money will be going toward food.

Jay plans to fly from Logan airport on June 4th and actually begin his walk from Venice Beach in Los Angeles on June 6th. He is presently figuring on walking "30 to 40" miles per day, about 10 hours each day; the rest of the time will probably be spent soaking his feet. He will camp out all along the way and carry a 35-40 pound pack.

Jay has been running about 10 miles a day for months mostly just to get his feet in condition. "Physically I'm pretty sure I can do it, but mentally, well, 3000 miles, mostly all alone, is a long way. Some times when I think about what I am going to do I get really scared."

When asked what his parents thought about this venture he said: "Initially they were against it, then first my father and finally my mother realized that I have to try it. Now they are giving me a lot of support."

Before he leaves, Jay is going to give way to the scissors, "basically, it will be easier to keep clean with short hair . . . also I am very afraid of an 'Easy-Rider' type situation developing."

If you happen to see this Umie during the summer, walking down a deserted stretch of highway playing his flute — stop and say Hi!

A Written Goodbye To Thunk A Friend

Read closely these lyrics from Paul Simon's Sounds of Silence:

"And in the naked light I saw
Ten thousand people, maybe more
People talking without speaking,
People hearing without listening,
People writing songs that voices never shared,
No one dared
Disturb the sounds of silence."

"Ten thousand people," one of whom we may be. Talking in cliches — "hello, how are you" — "what's new with you," at the same places — supermarkets, department stores and parties. We at times neither speak nor listen, but only isolate ourselves in a lonely, non-interpersonal world. And we dare not "disturb the sounds of silence."

I've used the pronoun "we." "We" won't pertain to everyone. "We" has concerned me and still does at non-interpersonal times. I was one of these ten thousand people living in what I thought was a satisfactory level of communication. But my loneliness and frustration, though they always recur, did something to me one day. I needed someone but couldn't find anyone to be truly intimate with.

This may sound like a "sob" story on self-pity. But this story won't be like that because the spotlight will shine on someone else, someone who made me discover and learn the value of an interpersonal, intimate relationship.

Being twenty years old may seem old to have learned how to communicate, but I've seen others, many older, who have, (had), this communication problem. It's never too late for anyone.

Closeness to females was something I had also never experienced. The guys I could talk to, but from experience I've found I could be close with a guy but still have to control myself. The social myth that a man is to be strong and never cries, had me keep that image with the guys. But I've learned I can be closest to a girl. Self-disclosure is easier and safer. I become a person, and not a stereotyped "man" figure. And people are what we all are.

One other thing, before I relate this story, is the problem I had with the idea of "getting a girlfriend." I felt depressed, and had little confidence when I say guys who were involved with girls. I thought I ought to kill myself. But now I realize this was so ridiculous, when life is much more than having a girlfriend. Through my experience I learned I could get the emotional and heartfelt needs without a mate. Even the physical need is insignificant in comparison, for your mind and heart control your life, moods and relations. I do wonder, when I become close to many girls, if I could love one above the others, but I know I can. I know that I would and will.

So now by this, here is the story of Mary.

It was my second semester freshman year. Around the second month of the semester, I began studying at the Newman Center lounge. One night, I noticed a really cute, sweet, innocent looking girl. One can't tell a person by looks, yet I still stereotyped this girl this way. I really became infatuated with her and I felt she was the girl I'd like to meet.

I looked out in case she had a boyfriend. I wasn't sure on how I'd get to know her. Mid-April came and I still had no confidence on how to get to know her. One day I noticed her with some guy. I thought he may be just a friend. But I noticed them together more often. I became worried and was losing hope fast. I brooded as if it were the end of the world.

Meanwhile, I had been feeling the insensitivity and harshness of living in a male dorm. Having a large number of residents also added to its impersonality. I looked for a well situated, small, coed dorm in the same residential area. I decided on Mary's dorm, with a tinge of hope being the main reason.

During my sophomore year, I spoke to her for the first time at a dorm wine and cheese party. I was scared, but excited so much I continued dreaming. Through the year I got to know her, and for the only time in my life she fit an image I had beforehand of someone. And when she said I could type her papers the next semester, having told me her boyfriend had been doing them, I thought, maybe, he'd be leaving.

If there is anything I do right, it's taking things the wrong way. This happened with the typing comment, for her boyfriend was still there second semester. I considered dropping my idea about her because it had already been an entire year and I wasn't getting anywhere. Besides, they both had already been together for a year and a half. I dropped the idea completely, but wanted to remain friends, until ...

It was my last night before I went home for the summer. Not until that night had I ever thought of her again. When I went to say goodbye to her, I expected to say just that. But when she said what she thought of me, and kissed me, I started dreaming again. I said goodbye in a choked up voice. Wow, I wanted to cry!

I didn't know what to do after that. My heart and mind were messed up. I went up to the hill behind our dorm. I sat down and cried.

"God," I cried, "help me."

My mind was so confused, so dizzy. I asked why can't I ever love and be successful with someone. I cried because I knew I loved her, but I knew at the same time I wasn't able to. I loved, but ...

Here I felt the extreme loneliness in my cold non-interpersonal world. I realized all I had was myself and no one to turn to. It's a cruel and ugly feeling as Neil Diamond has said in his I Am, I Said:

"But I've got an emptiness deep inside,
And I've tried but it won't let me go.
And I'm not a man who likes to swear,
But I've never cared for the sound of being alone.
I am, I said — to no one there.
And no one heard at all, not even the chair.
I am, I cried — I am, said I!
And I have lost and I can't even say why!"

So I went home the next day. I was still thinking of what happened and how I felt. The difference was that a year ago I was infatuated, and now I loved her as a person. Yet I knew I should only be friends. So it was going to be that. And this was where I learned that an interpersonal and intimate friendship would rely on self-disclosure. I grew up another notch, realizing for such a friendship to exist I would have to be honest and tell her everything. So a couple of days later I went back to the University to tell her everything I felt and to begin my closest friendship.

This year I came back with this frame of mind. And it has worked. Now I would like to reveal our friendship and its intimacy — something I've never known outside my family, except for Mary.

I never wrote to Mary over the summer, though I said I would. I felt it best not to in case I took something in a letter more serious than I should have. I could work out my feelings best this way.

It wasn't until second semester when I began to question my friendships on their intimacy, that I felt no one was close enough. I couldn't turn to the guys as I said before. I was confused and scared. This time "Shilo" wasn't enough either. As a freshman I told my friends to call me this. Partly because it sounded cool, but mostly because I identified with what this song said. Now my world was too impersonal. I needed to be interpersonal, intimate. I needed a person, not to do what Neil Diamond's Shilo said:

"Young child with dreams,
Dream every dream on your own ...
You turn to the only friend you can find —
There in your mind."

I thought maybe a girl who was close could help. And so I thought of Mary. She was, by far, the closest as she already knew my feelings towards her. This was the person I needed.

The best start was to be honest and straightforward with her. I told her why I came to her. I was afraid in realizing who my friends were. I was afraid of being hurt if I did. I wondered if I could ever be intimate with anyone. Someone told me they could never see me in love, or close to anyone at all. I was hurt and I accepted these remarks. I put myself down because of what others said. I just about lost all confidence. I needed and wanted to be close. I didn't know what to do. But I kept my faith in Mary whom I felt would help me to rediscover myself.

Mary first helped me realize who I was. I usually had a problem with my identity. But she told me, not what to be, but to be what I was. She told me what she thought of me and it corresponded so much to how I felt. I never expected, really anyone to know. Being a light, humorous person on the outside, she said I was not allowing people to know my deep and dominant side. I wasn't self disclosing. She also said I had to respect myself before anyone else could.

I had always been a light person aside from academics. As a youngster, to avoid getting picked on, I was told to either laugh along or ignore such remarks. It was impossible to ignore everything so I laughed about the comments made to me. But this developed into having me put myself down regularly. My joking about myself had people think I didn't take myself seriously. No one knew my inner feelings except for Mary. And only recently, due to Mary, have I avoided putting myself down. She renewed my self-confidence. I didn't think people would like to know my deep side. But Mary did, my most intimate friend. Intimacy depended on disclosure from both sides and she has taught me how.

With the question of a girlfriend-boyfriend thing, she showed me that I really felt was the need to be close. And with females I could achieve a lot more closeness than with males. I also had to overcome this fear of communicating with females. May also said this intimacy could exist with friendships than with a mate. I wondered how, but it was stupid wondering; for it was taking place now. The most intimate person I've known, a female, is my best friend.

This leads me to what I hope is a humanistic feeling. And if I didn't question myself I would be dishonest to myself, for I feel questioning is vital to everyone's existence. The question is whether I can keep this best friend relation. Sometimes I think about whether I could revert back to my old attitude about Mary. If there was a chance I could become a boyfriend I don't know what I'd do. I'd be afraid. I wonder if it didn't work out, could I still relate to her as a friend. I just don't know. And at the same time I feel it could work out. But now I know I am her friend and I am satisfied at keeping it this way. The best description of this feeling can be found in the lyrics of the Young Rascals's How Can I Be Sure?:

"How can I be sure
When the world is constantly changing?
How can I be sure
Where I stand with you?"

But I know for one thing, any type of relation must be mutually accepted.

She had me completely regain confidence in myself. She helped by having me do it on my own. If it weren't for her, I don't know where I'd be. I asked her if I could be as close with anyone as with her. Mary told me to try it and I did. It has worked, though time will tell if I can ever find such as with Mary. It won't always work but it's the best way because I can be me without a front.

I have known that in being able to let my deep side out, that already this semester it has worked really well. For me it seems like an instant key to a deep friendship, though it depends upon the person. With my new friends, I have been deeper in relating to them than with some friends I have known for a longer time. If Mary hadn't encouraged me to become a close person, I would still be one of those "ten thousand people."

I must credit Mary for her help. I won't be afraid to cry to her. She is the closest and did so much to help me. She understands me as I her. Though I have a lot mooe to grow up about, she helped me mature to the extent that I have. I dedicate this story to her, though it's nothing to what she's given me. I will always be willing to give all I have for her; still, that won't be enough. With all the words I write I can never really say how much of a beautiful person Mary is; for beauty can only be what it is. She made these years at U. Mass a sensitive and growing experience. I can only say to Mary, my best friend, as she may already know, that I have and always will love her.

So here I have realized the value of an interpersonal, intimate relationship; and as a friendship not a mate basis. This was shown by my change in relating to Mary. I hope for the most part to avoid becoming one of those "ten thousand people." The Beatles dealt with such a person in Nowhere Man:

"He's a real nowhere man ...
Knows not where he's going to.
Isn't he a bit like you and me.

Nowhere man, please listen,
You don't know what you're missing ..."

This could be my last semester here; my last weeks and days with such a friend. I may be going across the country, but I will definitely stay in touch. I will miss her terribly, as I will others, and even more. But she's shown me how to face life as myself and so I must continue on however painful. She has been an influence on my life as have my family and God. And when I say goodbye, I may definitely burst into tears. Let me end with this quote by Laurence Craig Green:

"People so seldom say I love you ...
And then it's either too late ...
Or love goes ...
So when I tell you I love you ...
It doesn't mean I'll know you'll never go, only that I wish you didn't have to."

'Crosswinds'-- Billy Blows It

CROSSWINDS — BILLY COBHAM (Atlantic SD 7300)

Much as I am loathe to admit it, I believe we have a bit of a disappointment here. This disc falls most emphatically short of what Billy Cobham is capable. This is of course not to say that Cobham's absolute supremacy on the drums has been negated, or indeed even questioned: he yet remains indubitably the world's pre-eminent percussionist. Nonetheless, his mastery fails to save him from disappointing us this time out (as opposed to the last time out, i.e., Spectrum), as he seems to have fallen under the influence of an artistic malady about as common as a truthful politician. Yes, Billy Cobham has Not Enough Ego.

This is anything but apparent from looking at the back of the album cover. Cobham does all of the writing, arranging, drumming, and half the producing. He even took the cover photo (which is nothing short of psychodelic). Yet, when you get down to the actual music, how many solos does he take? Two. And one of them is only 32 bars! The guitarist (who barely surpasses mediocrity) and the sax player take that many, and the keyboard player takes more. I mean, whose album is this, anyway? Of course, when Cobham does rock out, he predictably, lifts you out of your seat (Listen to "The Pleasant Pheasant", by far the best thing on the album, almost worth the four bucks by itself.), but it becomes embarassing because he's so obviously superior to those who should be his back-up men. Furthermore, the two longest (and most forgettable) numbers are the slowest, in which Cobham plays a tastefully subdued back-up to them, and is indeed most of the time completely absent. Of course, there are the inevitable complex-rhythm-for-the-sake-of-complex-rhythm numbers — two of them, in fact — except that the time signatures are in both cases the same. (19—8, to be exact, Yes, Mahavishnu buffs, the same as in "Celestial Terrestrial Commuters", off Birds of Fire.) True, one of them is a lot faster than the other, and neither of them becomes boring, but, let's face it, it's for special tastes (mine, for one), and there's not a hell of a lot else to commend it.

But don't let me give you the idea that I don't like the album — I do — in fact, I like it more each time I listen to it — but it's just not worthy of the World's Greatest Drummer. The writing is nothing special, the solos are directionless and uninspired, and Cobham seems to have overreacted against the threat of egotism: rather than be criticized for grabbing for all the glory, he has surrounded himself with musicians less capable than himself, and relegated himself to the status of Just Folks. Which is great — if you're Charlie Watts-his-name. But which is a bit of step down for the man who was only a few short months ago the rhythmic hub of perhaps the finest jazz—rock band in the land.

—Michael Peppe

I have a friend named Mark who thinks the drums were invented just in case Billy Cobham was to happen along someday, and he thinks this album sucks.

—Your Sacred Cowboy

People show a great need for heroes, and that's fine, but what is all this brouhahha about Cobham being the best (all other drummers bow before him, etc.)? Nonsense, sheer nonsense. And it could be dangerous because you're shutting off the possibilities of other drummers. There's no such thing as a "best drummer in the world". Grow and explore.

—Your UMan Matching Mole Gomes

Explore and grow a gomes. Who's to say what's best in the world: only what's best in their life sequence and one life sequence is so tiny in comparison to the world.

—L. Ann Yeslow

As one would expect, the group is a tight one and lists some fine soloists, John Abercrombe on guitar and Mike Brecker on reeds in particular. Formed in March of this year, the band has already been on tour and gigs frequently in and around its home base in New York.

For the most part the music presented on this record is quite good. Cobham is superb throughout, definitely in charge but never overplaying his role as many lesser drummers are wont to. The rhythm section has a solid drive and all three hornmen function well in either solo or ensemble capacities.

One drawback the album has is the writing. The liner notes tell us, "All selections written by William E. Cobham, Jr." His success as a composer—arranger on this album is questionable. The tunes are good but too often fall back on funkybutt cliches. The musicianship in this band is enormous and warrants better writing than is offered here.

Don't be completely turned off, however. The album is definitely worth buying and listening to. We look forward to more from Billy Cobham!

Beethoven Rolls Over

Apocalypse — Mahavishnu Orchestra with the London Symphony Orchestra. Conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas — Columbia (KC 32957)

Bland on the run? the term "strung out" suddenly taken on new connotations.

Listening to this album caused me a curious jolt of recognition. It took me a couple of days to trace the connection, but it finally came to me: A couple of years ago WBCN in Boston instituted a program called 'Feedback', the purpose of which was to encourage their listeners to express themselves into the nearest tape recorder and send the tapes in for airplay no matter what the content; poetry, stories, music and raps of all sizes and shapes came galumphing over the airwaves.

Out of the few tapes that rose above the general level of homegrown mediocrity, one in particular always stood out in my mind: An enterprising and apparently quite knowledgable listener had found that segments of several pieces of classical music by various composers could be spliced together to make one new "composition", coherent if somewhat bizarre. The comparison is obvious and the differences are these: (1) The tape was intended as humour; (2) The person involved didn't splice in fifteen minutes of electric jazz-boogie and try to pawn off the whole inconsistent mess as his own work.

Now that I've gotten all the invective out of my system, let me try to restore some kind of balance to this review.

When he stays in his element, the "electric jazz-boogie" I shrugged off a moment ago, Johnny 'git-tar' McLaughlin is in about the best form I've ever heard him in, though he is somewhat out-classed by ex-Zappa violinist Jean-Luc Ponty. As you probably know, McLaughlin recently fired his entire band and replaced them with heretofore unknowns, aside from Ponty. Over-all the Mahavish newcomers seem to be at least competent, although it's hard to say for sure because they're relegated (again excepting Ponty) mainly to back-up work.

So, if the band is good, and I certainly don't presume to criticize either the London Symphony or Conductor Thomas — I'm just an underpaid, overinflated Umie music snob — the fault, therefore, lies in the composition, the music itself, and for this we can blame McLaughlin and, to a certain extent, arranger George Martin (Remember him, Beatle freaks?), of whom I would have expected better, although not too much.

The idea, apparently, was to combine McLaughlin's volatile style with the subtleties of symphonic music. This is a concept that has been tried several times before, mostly by groups who had no idea what they were doing, and thus wound up simply writing the same old bland back-up string arrangements and having them played a little louder; most notable in this category are the Moody Blues. The only effort of this kind which approached success did so mainly by not taking itself seriously.: The Nice, Keith Emerson's original band, and their Ars Longa Vita Brevis, which included their now somewhat famous "Brandenburger". Emerson has also been known to actually jam with a symphony orchestra... but we're talking about John McLaughlin.

As I said, this was a good basic concept for his particular kind of sound, but he should have collaborated with someone in the composing, that always having been his weak spot. As it is, finding himself unable to reconcile his taste for lush strings with his electricity, he decided to alternate them instead, and thus we find very few segments where band and orchestra are not playing in turn, or at most playing rhythm back-up for each other. Those few spots, however, are the most interesting on the album, especially the one which occurs for about forty-five seconds near the end of "Hymn to Him". If John could have stretched that into an album or a side or even an entire cut, Apocalypse would be worth the price of admission. As it is, however, this album is not altogether displeasing — I happen to like Stravinsky and Debussy and Kundalini-rock all kind of smorgasborded together — just don't come to this album with great expectations.

Strictly a matter of time; the Celtics had fire in their eyes. They weren't going to be denied their first championship of the 70's. Cowens was posessed, Havlicek was burning and Paul Silas used every inch of his massive frame in giving the Boston Celtics a 102-87 convincing win over Kareen Abdul-Jabbar's Milwaukee Bucks.

The Bucks missed Lucious Allen sorely, but certainly he would not have been able to turn aside the Celtics' amazing gut performance.

And to be sure, Boston won this one on pure guts and soul. They built up a thirteen point first half lead on 'skill'. Dave Cowens was binging them in from twenty feet and Jo Jo White was throwing up some poppers. They were scrabbling around for some of the first half, until they settled into a steady-shooting stretch, ballhawking and manhandling the Bucks into quite a tizzified state. However, when their refined shooting skills departed in the second half, they went back to their street corner ways.

It took them a while to recognize that they weren't going to be able to finesse this one. Cowens began getting a bit tired, and couldn't hustle as much to get open for those twenty footers (and missed the few that he did get). White was well-covered while Nelson and Havlicek stayed cold. So the Celtics, once the Bucks had closed to within three points in the third quarter, began to scrap. They plagued Oscar, they walloped Kareem, they addled the awkward forward-turned-guard Mickey Davis (The Hippies' Choice), they ate up the Buck forwards; Silas began going to the basket with great authority, Cowens went inside and began, along with Silas, getting all the offensive rebounds, giving the Celtics the second and third shots those cold hands needed to get it in. Havlicek realized he was practically useless in shooting from the outside, and began driving to the basket. Which resulted in few points but gave the Bucks one more thing to worry about.

Get Stuffed

Don Chaney, Jo Jo, Silas, Havlicek and Cowens all turned into defensive monsters during their poor shooting third period, going to any length to snag the ball before it got to Mr. Skyhook, Kareem. If it did get to Abdul-Jabbar, Cowens got help in quick spurts from any of the other four Celtics who would flash by and swat at the ball. Which gave Kareem more than 'just' Dave Cowens to think about.

The Celtics' Movement to the title came to a fine end. They scrapped through the third period, holding Milwaukee down enough so that when the Celts' outside shooting returned, it was like the return of the rest of the orchestra. The fourth quarter was one of the great Celtic displays of all time. They passed as only they can, zipped on beautiful fastbreaks, played defense like tigers and sank the clutch baskets when they needed them.

All of which is what is necessary in beating the Bucks. Milwaukee is largely a one-man team, who gets a little help from Dandridge and old Oscar Robertson (who retires none too soon, judging from his halting play and numerous air balls), but Abdul-Jabbar is such a player that only a well-knit five man unit, like the Knick or Celtics, can beat him. He can't be everywhere.

So when the Celtics were able to team the outside shooting with their gut mauraderie, there was a beauty recaptured for the first time since 1969 and Bill Russell days. Greatness.

Quaboag Pomona members also bowled and came in seventh in the NUDE.

All in all, a great show. Aerosmith were magnificent in their primal urgency. These boys from Boston sure can rock! From the pissa "Dream On", "Same Old Song And Dance", "The Train Kept A'Rolling" (another great new original) to "Walking The Pig", I'll puke if there wasn't one person who didn't dig the show.

Elliot Murphy was a big bore, with all his so-called Artful insights, but Chris Rhodes Band sure can boogie!

All in all, it was a swell time. I know I had a great time, and I know I hope the Concert Committee does as well next year. Grand Funk!

Cruel Springfield. Ah, but cruel is not the right word. Real cruelty stems from some sort of conscious effort. Springfield is, above all, mindless. Those imbibing every single thing they could get their hands on, only to pass out during the show or get lost in a controlled drug haze, do so without question, and with great vigor and enthusiasm. Music was not really important. So much space is devoted here to them because they flavored the show; anyone wanting to get seriously close to the stage had to involve themselves for over five hours with these people. Who were avowedly enjoying themselves immensely. "This is pissa," was the Quote I got from a UMass female. "She gets off on weird things," explained her companion.

Always on top with a solid set, James Cotton really gave the crowd something to boogie about with a chugging show of No Good Boogie, Beautiful Blues and rocking raunch. Even though James gave us no somersaults, he and eye-popping guitarist Matt Murphy kept things cooking.

The evening's real salvation came in the form of Boz Scaggs, whose good taste and well-filled soul has given everything he's done an honesty that brings it home. He did beguile the few fans he had in the crowd with beautiful renditions of "Slow Dancer", "Let It Happen" and "We Were Always Sweethearts", but it was the band's occasional Allman Brothers sound that kept the crowd interested, and was indeed surprisingly powerful. "Loan Me A Dime" yes, (Springfield did throw dimes at Boz) was an extended gem and "Full Lock Power Slide" was another corker. Les Dudek (see Brothers & Sisters for details) gave Boz ample help on guitar. With a fine band behind him and his voice in fine shape, Boz Scaggs was indeed the star of the night.

Steve Miller gave a gastly stew of mal-played 'tunes' mixed with an "Ask Me If I Care" stage presence and one flat, careless, colorless vocal style that killed any possible impact the tunes might nave had (since the songs do come out well on record, we must salute Steve for his tireless hours in the studio getting some Voice). Except for a semi-interesting jam' with Boz and Dudek, and the ever-moving fingers of his bassist, Miller dragged on all night. With pedantic (for him) guitar work, an incredibly laid-out acoustic segment, a dumb drummer and non-existant keyboard player behind him nothing was revealed.

NICKELODEON — HUDSON FORD (A&M SP 3616)
Total playing time: 35:52

A real good collection of tunes from ex-Strawbs, John Ford and Richard Hudson.

What's in the album, you ask? Well, there's some Beatles type sounding things ("I Wanted You", "Hello, I Thought You Were Dead"), their two English hit singles ("Pick up the Pieces" and "Burn Baby Burn"), a couple more ambitious songs ("Dark Lord" and "Revelations") and lots of easy listening rock. Another ex-Strawb, Rick "Six Wives" Wakeman fills in with harpsichord and piano, adding substance to the already strong Hawkana Production. Not great, but lots of fun and well worth a listen. B+

I like music. Honest. It makes me feel quite good quite often. But as Marvin Gaye would say, "What's Goin' On?" And friends, I am dutybound to report to you that last Sunday night, the answer to Marvin's query was 'not much'.

Jeff Commodore won the crowd with his simple-minded jokes (the deeper ones went way over their heads), but ultimately left us with little. Which is a shame, since it seemed he did have some sort of a brain.

Jesse Colin Young and the Eagles provided reams of musical-lyrical cliches designed to perfectly entertain the 'tuck in your shirt' crowd, though each in different ways. About 90 per cent of Jesse's set consisted of hip, swinging muzak that entertained the crowd, most of whom had certainly never heard of Hank Williams. So when Jessee uncorked Hank's "Jambalaya", it went over big (like the Carpenters version) but even Hank Wilson would've gagged. It is comparable to watching Herbie Mann negate a song by John Coltrane or even something like "Layla". Ersatz. Young's work with the Youngbloods was so often fresh, innovative and solidly edged that it is all the worse to see him taking the easy, 'nice' way out now.

Richard Bean remains correct. Fat can still easily blow Eagles off the stage. Taken individually, one Eagles song is harmless enough. An evening, however, of them is quite a deadening proposition. Their gracelessly limited creative process is hideously exposed.

Eagles gave us ninety minutes of CSN&Y style cowboy supposed soul that was as touching and penetrating as an episode of Gunsmoke. It was amazing how the drummer and bassist could plod over the same beat all night. Effortless jive, done as easily as placing an American Indian headress and blanket on stage, and painting your amps various Indian designs and singing about cowboys. Those smiling zombies never hit a real note all night. Or an original one.

CHUCK BERRY'S GOLDEN DECADE, VOL. 3 (Chess 2CH-60028) time 57:58

Greatness. Volume One is the absolute Rock And Roll Primer, the basic Rock 101 text. All the hits.

Volume Two is deeper, about Rock 260 level. There are some hits, but this is a wonderful representation of all the amazingly different things Chuck did (Jeff Beck's "Jeff's Boogie" with The Yardbirds is a direct steal of Berry's then ten years old "Guitar Boogie").

Volume Three, the Rock 390 finisher, isn't quite as wonderful as the first two, but at $6.94 list (like the first two), it is a steal. A few collectors items hike its worth.

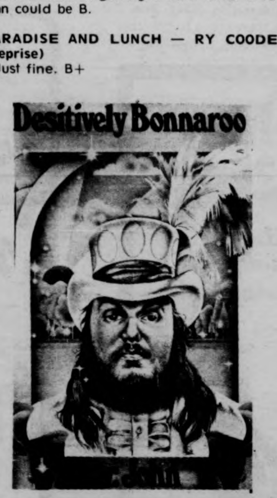
New Release
MARTIN MULL

NORMAL — MARTIN MULL (Capricorn CP 0126) time 35:53

Mr. Mull still flashes some great wit and clear insight, but some of his used and abused musical forms (especially his Johnny Cash ersatz C&W) are getting a mite tired. A less than could be B.

PARADISE AND LUNCH — RY COODER (Reprise)

Just fine. B+



DESITIVELY BONNAROO — DR. JOHN (Atco SD 7043) time — a first — both sides are an equal 18:21, adding into 36:42

Against all odds, even with Allen Toussaint's production and arrangements, New Orleans finest rhythm section, The Metres backing up, a great cover and song titles like "Everybody Wanna Get Rich Rite Away", "R U 4 Real", "What Comes Around (Goes Around)" and "Mos' Scocious", Desitively Bonnaroo is pofinitely averagoo. Middling.

Nothing, outside of the Doctor's lowest and grittiest vocals ever is too good. The songs all slip by in a vareity of ill-fitting riffs, the production (especially when compared to the scintiliating In The Right Place) is poor, and arrangements and playing performances are also unremarkable. A used to much better C minor.

SECRET TREATIES — BLUE OYSTER CULT (Columbia)

I really gotta hand it to these guys. They sure got balls to come out with a "concept" album. Yes — that's right; a concept album. The band even picks a topic they're at home with, namely evil. Judging from the cover, the band has formed some exclusive military group whose main weapon is the ME262, a German WW2 fighter plane. They even have pet German Shepards! If you look really close, you can spot a skull where the pilots head should be.

Not being snobs, the band invites us to join. ("Career of Evil") We are then reduced to "Subhumans". But alas, like Alice Cooper, the evil is punished in the end. All of this is based on "secret treaties" that founded a science from the stars called Astronomy, the career of evil. Sounds far fetched doesn't it? I mean bands like BOC, Sabbath, and Purple never put much thought into their music, let alone their lyrics.

The music here is typical of past Blue Oyster Cult offerings. It is basically simple, driving at times, with occasional glimpses of flash via the guitar solo. The good stuff on this album is "ME262", "Flaming Telepaths" and "Career of Evil". "ME262" is a kick-ass rocker if there ever was one, complete with bomb-siren-Goose-step marching sound affects. "Flaming Telepaths" is another rave up featuring some nice synthesizer and guitar solos. Unfortunately, as you might have guessed by now, the rest of the music on this disc is "run-of-the-mill" rock. I keep on telling myself; didn't I hear that somewhere before? "Harvester of Eyes" reminds me of Black Sabbath's boring redundancy.

I still have mixed emotions about this album, especially after repeated listenings. The concepts thrown around are interesting and considering past recordings by this band, it's definitely their best effort to date. B-

DIRTY MAGAZINES — ELMER HAWKES with the Coonville Ferryboat Frog Killers

Dear Elmer,

You seem like an intelligent fellow, so I know you'll take the following Criticism Constructively.

Your folk-country songs are nice, but a bit on the too-too cute side. No one much over the old side of say, 21, will be able to take them too long. And when they're not cute, they're too often cloying and mawkish, and get in the way of some fairly good melodies, like "The Arch St. Winter" and "Dirty Magazines".

Also obscuring the melodies is your voice and overall production. Too thin, too thin. Get more of a band, a well-recorded band, behind you, and use some Studio Magic to give your voice more bottom and more of an edge.

You're to be saluted for being dedicated enough to make this record yourself, and seeing how much interest you have in singing and playing, don't play yourself cheap. Get yourself just right on your next one. You deserve no less.

"If Brevity is the soul of Wit, I must be WitLess..."

by goMEz - 1974

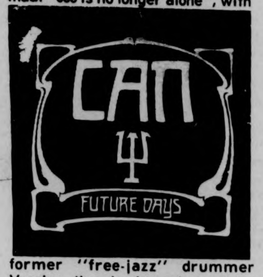
I have several pleasant notes with which to end this cycle of the UMass Universe in my life — which does not mean I'm going to stop writing, once and forever, folks — I just wave in and out of the place, much like an alternating current, which leads me to Fanfare of the Warriors. — The Art Ensemble of Chicago (Atlantic SD 1651).

It should be evident to anyone who has come within hearing distance of the Art Ensemble of Chicago that Lester Bowie, Roscoe Mitchell, Joseph Jarman, Malachi Favors, and Don Moye are musicians of the first caliber. They are true bearers of a universal musical heritage; and when they get together with the great Muhal Richard Abrams, the ensueing energy well nigh overwhelms.

Highlights on the album are the title cut, with brilliant solo work by Abrams; the multi-rhythmic, polyphonic "Nonaah" on side one; and a Pointer Sisters parody by Roscoe Mitchell, who once said that he used to walk around the house imitating Enrico Caruso.

Thus, it is doubly pitiable that this will probably be their last recording for Atlantic, since said record company proved to be a rip-off to the Ensemble. In seven years of existence as a Unit, they have rivalled Ornette Coleman and Cecil Taylor for diversity and convergence of influences, and even the majestic Sun Ra in terms of live performance. Get this record, and, if you ever get a chance to see them in person, do so.

You know, it's a real crime that performers like the Art Ensemble had to go to France before they were recognized. But it was very fortunate for people like drummer Christian Vander, who founded Magna. Their third album, Mekanik Destructiw Kommandoh (A&M SP 4397), gives evidence thaat "666 is no longer alone", with former "free-jazz" drummer Vander the leader of a choir singing in the language of the inhabitants of the planet Kobaia, which sounds incredibly close to German. And the opera style sounds like Wagner adopted to electronics and improvisations. Starts off rather unspectacularly then builds to an intensity of sound that people like John (Ohnedaruth) Coltrane got into in his late period.



Of course, Ohnedaruth evolved an entire way of looking at the universe and life, and it seems that Vander is trying to do the same. In many spots, my reactions to this album were similar to my reactions to Coltrane's Ascension LP. More aliens to deal with, right?

Well, Magma are tough to evaluate — are they good, bad, indifferent, mindless, crazy? Probably not! They are unique, with a very new spiritual concept of music. One tangent of the Sun Ra school of voice, methinks, and very good at it. You might even get it to show your friends the 'weird' album you're still afraid to open.

See? I know you...

"Deutschland, Deutschland Uber Alles, or Japan in a Dishpan"

Ege Bamyasi — Can (United Artists UA-LA063-F) and Future Days (UA-LA213-F).

A Currious bunch from Germany, who seem to enjoy static metres with Stockhausen melodies and realizations. Ege is the earlier, and more fringe, album. They have a Japanese lead singer who sounds like Lou Reed, except that they seem to have more mind than the Velvets did in improvisations, and do more. Different systems of tonality, too. Speaking of tonalities, exercises in such have been carried out by Robert Fripp and Brian Eno, who may very well have the spirit album of the year in (NO PUSSYFOOTING) (Island HELP 16 — British Import) The equipment used on this consists of a Gibson Les Paul, a Fripp Pedalboard, a Frizzbox, a synthesizer, and a couple of Revox tape recorders. The album is truly a work of art, and is extremely good music to meditate on. Accordingly "Swastika Girls" is a long cyclical, and climbing exercise. Fripp is a truly inventive improvisor, and Eno is the responder on "The Heavenly Music Corporation". Both pieces shine like stars.

Monty Python who are selling a Matching Tie and Handkerchief for $5.98 (Charisma — Import), with a free three-sided disc, which talks about people exploding, sings about the drinking habits of great philosophers, reverts to eating dog and "word — association" fact or fiction section of the who what when where, etc. Ah well...

Hatfield and the North (Virgin — Import)

Hatfield was founded by former Robert Wyatt, Matching Mole guitarist Phil Miller and ex-Daevyd Allen drummer Pip Pyle. Hatfield are carrying on Virgin's good name as a record company (following Henry Cow, Mike Oldfield). All the members of the group contribute much. Whereas Cow is very reed-oriented Hatfield are guitar, organ and voice run. Robert Wyatt even wheelchairs up to the mike for "Calyx". Excellent stuff.

Red Buddha — Stomu Yamashta (Vanguard VSD 79343).

Yamashta is one of the foremost percussionists around, and this album is a beautiful testament to his talents. Both comps, "Red Buddha" and "As Expanding As", use the overdubbing of several orchestral instruments as devices, along with folk instruments that build to a rhythmic wall. Solid.

Tibetan Buddhism: Tantras of Gyuto: Mahakala (Nonesuch H-72055)

Recorded at a Gyuto Tantric College, this is an example of what the human voice can do when it's disciplined. Low, ominous chords are formed with the vocal chords. Another true meditation record, and the shifts in the voices are fairly incredible. Really lovely stuff. A present from one sacred cowboy. But what's this? Pray tell. Oh well.

RICHARD RUSKIN — RICHARD RUSKIN (Takoma C-1039)
Total playing time: 30:33

It is Richard Ruskin's attempts to do too many things which detracts from the overall quality of his music and makes his first (I think) album listenable rather than good. Basically, Ruskin is an acoustic guitarist who is most comfortable playing solo guitar, accompanied by light percussion. Though it is obvious to compare much of Ruskin's solo guitar with that of primordial Leo Kottke, the similarity is unmistakable. Unlike Leo Kottke however, Ruskin has a voice which is a trifle hard to take, so dispersed between the flowing and relaxing instrumentals of "Here Comes the Sun", "Kudah Duxx", "Temptation Rag" and "Teddy Bear's Picnic" are a couple of vocal and-or electric pieces with more prominent drumming (supplied by ex-Breadwinner Mike Botts) and it is these toons which temporarily destory the tone and mood of the rest of the album. Unlike most artists who would do better to expand their musical horizens, Richard Ruskin should find his niche and stick to it. B-

SON OF DRACULA (SOUNDTRACK)
Harry Nilsson and Ringo Starr
Rapple (RCA) ABL 1-0220
Total Playing Time: 38:35

It doesn't seem dramaturgically correct to treat a record review as a movie review, but that's what this album inspires. Son of Dracula isn't really a Nilsson album, though he dominates it musically; nor is it a Ringo album, though he dominates the spoken sections. It really is a soundtrack, if with an all-star cast, a few hits (or so I'm given to understand), and elaborate packaging. And in that packaging, by the way, one can spot Harry as the S.O.D.., Ringo as Merlin, Frankenstein and his Monster, the Mummy, the Wolfman, some other grotesque creatures and the Beautiful Gurl. The dialogue sections of the album, which make up at least half of the content and are intended, I guess to show off Paul Buckmaster's exquisite arranging skills, point to the film as being another exercise in let's - see - what - we - can - do - with - a - genre. Whether or not portions of the dialogue are purposely bad, I leave up to you — it looks like an Entertaining Film in spite of a few things.

The music is not Mr. Nilsson's best, and was probably not intended to be. The songs — "Daybreak", "At My Front Door", "The Moonbeam Song", "Remember", "Without You", "Down", and "Jump Into the Fire" — are all done well, although Richard Perry's production is (unusually) thin. "Down" and "Jump Into the Fire" rate highest in terms of sheer energy; "At My Front Door" is also good R&R, and the slow string quartet-piano fade at the end of "Remember" is effective and quite lovely. But ultimately the album's musical merits get lost in dialogue, and (like most soundtracks recently) Son of Dracula is a hard album to put on and enjoy.

HENRY COW Virgin (VR 13-107)

This album is already on our list for best of the year.

This is their (Henry Cow is a group — to the best of my knowledge there is no such person) first album, and you the public have never heard of them, except perhaps for the small reference on the back cover of Mike Oldfield's Tubular Bells. We, the ever-alert and musically conscious to the nth degree Below the Salt music staff, however, have been garooving and tapping smiling feet to the British import (so needless to say that this is an album of great import) for months. Oh, we could have told you about it, in hopes that for once you'd take our word for it and snatch it up from the nearest record emporium, but we thought, would you believe us? No. You never do. Well, let me tell you we're sick and tired of being disbelieved and rejected and having our feelings hurt all the time after all our hard work trying to tell you about all these swell records year after year so you'll have some idea what to listen to when you finally get tired of Lawrence Welk and singing along with Mitch and we're TIRED of breaking our asses for you and if you don't believe us when we tell you this is one of the best albums of the year it's just tough toenails for you, sweetheart, and WE'RE LEAVING for the summer. Eat poop. Tell 'em we sent you.

REFUGEE (Famous Charisma CAS 1087) (Import) Time: 49.47

Refugee's keyboardist Patrick Moraz is a trifle too aware of Keith Emerson, as who wouldn't be that plays in a band with his old sidemen? Emerson used to (for example) stuff his nimble digits into the guts of his organ (ulp) and freq out the oscillators, producing sounds that beggar description. In the Nice, it was nifty. In ELP, because he now possesses a much more scientific bundle of noisemakers, it's gratuitous. Old Nice fans are up in arms.

So Moraz studies Emerson to avoid his mistakes whilst still playing in his territory. Curiously, his approach to harmonic development is closer to what ELP do than the Nice. But he uses more axes (and, on record, more at one time) than Emerson. Rather than pitting sharp organ against rapacious Moog, he'll devise lines on different keyboards that support each other, producing a sound of layers instead of pinnacles. He plays Moog and electric piano like Jan Hammer, organ and Mellotron like Thijs van Leer, with refinements of hiw own. The sum of his playing is seemingly shy, but fulfilling, even glorious.

But he doesn't front the band. Lee Jackson plays very simple bass and sings badly but sensitively, unlike Lake's smooth vacuity. Brian Davison is twice as inventive as Palmer with half the drums. This is a very good album; because of it, one might warn Emerson (as well as Mr. Sokol) to be careful how he drops names, because they might bounce back at him.

MISSING WHITE HOUSE TAPES — NATIONAL LAMPOON (Blue Thumb BTS 6008)
Total playing time: 40:36

Not knee slapping comedy by any means, but more, a sophisticated chronicle of one of the major events of our incumbent president's reign. The record is broken into two parts. One is an insightful parody of the possible content of the Watergate tapes, featuring the voice of Zal "the human question mark" Yanovsky interspersed with the beautifully spliced utterances of Richard Nixon, John Dean, John Mitchell, and Sam Ervin. The other is a less subtle overview and play by play description of the impeachment day proceedings, from the discussion of the impeachment floats to a game show search for a successor to the chief executive.

Definitely a record which demands a great deal more attention and concentration from the listener than, say, a David Frye offering, but also one which has far greater and more significant content and one which will be around a lot longer. Though it is of course truly unfortunate that this record had to be made, it is one to make us realize the great importance of a free press and media.

Not for a Cheech and Chong fan. A-

PURE MUSIC — CHASE (Epic KE 32572)

Contrary to what the liner notes say Pure Music is a presumptuous title for an album, particularly this one. It's a decent album, with reasonably interesting songs, but probably only one of these songs could be called "pure" in the sense of not being tainted by obvious similarities to previous musical endeavors.

—Ken Blanchard

STRANDED — ROXY MUSIC (Atco SD 7045)
Total playing time: 40:51

After listening to this, Roxy Music's third album, it's not hard to understand why Roxy fans are few and far between in the United States. A number of British "experimental" groups with unique and different styles (i.e. Pink Floyd, Yes, King Crimson) have caught the American ear and gathered widespread following because of their sophistication, live performances, or their ability to touch responsive chords. Others, most notably Family, have, for some mysterious (cosmic?) reasons evaded or just missed in this country. Perhaps their formula wasn't quite right.

Not to say that Roxy Music is in the same musical league as Family, but Roxy also lacks that something extra which they'll need to get them through to the American pop public. Although the fiddlery through'out Stranded is on a constantly high par, especially Andrew MacKay's Saxophone and oboe blowing, the material is either too subtle (bland or blah) or outwardly ostentatious. Vocalist (and primary writer) Bryan Ferry has a style which is slightly reminiscent of that of Roger Chapman, but at times gets so frantic as to prompt our own energized John Dean to inquire whether or not the music was "a joke".

The highlights of Stranded are mainly on side 2, with "Serenade" and "A Song For Europe", a tune in which Ferry shows off his flair for "la belle langue", standing out. "Street Life", a big hit in England, leads off the album and is sort of a primer for what is to come — Basically good musical themes which outlive their usefulness. "Psalm" and "Sunset" both drag on tediously and are two of the record's real lowlights.

Generally there were greater expectations than were met by this so-called legendary group which has the distinction of having weaned Eno. This is a, how-you-say, interesting group and record, but only recommended for those steeped in the current English rock situation. C+

—David Sokol

SNAFU — SNAFU (Capitol)

Now here's a nice album that anybody can sit back and enjoy without being pounded into submission. Snafu is a five man band from England. Their style can best be described in two ways: one being funky and the other being countryish.

The lead-off cut, "Long Gone" is excellent, with great vocal work by Bobby Harrison. Guitarist Mick Moody is the focal point displaying some excellent wah-wah pedal doodling. "Drowning In The Sea Of Love" is a Gamble & Huff tune done in great fashion, featuring Moody's guitar work again. Keyboard man Pete Solley and Bassist Colin Gibson support him with some infectious interplay.

Side Two is more of the same. "Country Nest" and "Funky Friend" are fine efforts in a laid back country style with some nice violin-mandolin work. "Goodbye USA" and "That's The Song" rounds out the album with more of that good funky stuff Snafu is so agile at. "That's The Song" reminds one of Traffic in their better days. If you're looking for a good album by a relatively unknown group, Snafus' first disc is it. A

Douglas' Story: Courage, Wisdom . . . and Luck

Go East Young Man
the early years
The Autobiography of William O. Douglas
Random House $10.00 P. 493
reviewed by Frederic C. Weiss

To write an autobiography that is both credible and interesting is no small feat. Perhaps this is because most people who are "important enough to write such a book are more concerned with their "image" in history, than in giving you real insight into their lives.

However Go East Young Man is most interesting and quite believable. This autobriography of Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas is subtitled The Early Years because it deals with the life of Douglas up to his appointment to the Supreme Court in 1939. Douglas has been on the Court for thirty four years, and it is reasonable to presume that his most interesting recollections will relate to his experiences on the Court. These experiences will be enclosed in a second volume of Douglas' autobiography to be published sometime in the future.

Till then we must be satisfied with this first volume. This is no hard task, simply because Go East Young Man is a very readable and inspiring story. The book tells the story of a man who lost his father when still a young boy; was struck by polio shortly thereafter; grew up in poverty; excelled in school; eventually decided that he wanted to be an English scholar; was passed over for a Rhodes scholarship, and eventually settled on law.

Of course the book goes into much more detail, and at times can be a bit tedious. For example, a large part of Douglas' life has taken place out of doors. To overcome the weakness in his legs caused by his early polio, Douglas became a hiker. This exercise soon bordered between an obsession and a hobby, and many early chapters of the book concern his experiences with the outdoor; climbing the mountains, camping out, and subsequently his interest in conservation and the environment.

Douglas spends a great deal of time in the book mentioning the names of various friends an- acquaintances that he has known, that no reader can hope to relate to. The bad part about this is that at times he seems to be writing an irrelevent testimonial to these friends. The good part about this is that it gives the reader a very informal look at Douglas' life.

He doesn't try to fool you. Freely admitting that if he had gotten the Rhodes scholarship to study English literature he probably would have never entered law. However leaving a comfortable job as a teacher in Yakima, Washington Douglas made the decision to go to law school in "the East".

After graduating from Columbia Law School and teaching at both Columbia and Yale Law Schools, Douglas was tabbed by Joseph P. Kennedy to join The Securities and Exchange Commission down in Washington D.C. From there he moved within the inner circles of the "New Deal" coterie headed by F.D.R. When Louis Brandeis retired from the Court in 1939, a surprised William O. Douglas at the relatively young age of forty found that he would take Brandeis' seat on the Court.

This summary of Douglas' life will hopefully serve as a skeleton to show that Douglas has lived through a lot of things; and is very candid about most of them.

In fact Douglas' observations about his own life are so free of "partisanship" and trying to "set the record straight" sort of paraphanalia that compromises so many such works, that they leave you with a very decent and good feeling inside.

Douglas' observations concerning America; the persecution of the International Workers of the World; the corruption and class domination that he has observed; the beauty of the land; and the concise sad acknowledgement that power has not always led to happiness, are as interesting to read as they are touching to know.

His anecdotes concerning the men in power that he has worked with and known, from F.D.R. on down (Harry Hopkins, Joe Kennedy, James Forrestal, John Foster Dulles, Hugo Black and on and on) make Go East Young Man valuable source material to anyone interested interested in American History.

Yet most touching of all are the glimpses of his private feelings that Douglas shares with us. Admitting that after law school he was filled with fears and pressures that got so bad, that he needed to consult Dr. Louis Draper, who eventually psychoanalyzed Douglas and cured him. The enigma of the book is that Douglas doesn't share the frustrations and unhappiness of his love life. Though divorced three times, and the father of two children, he tells us very little about the latter, and next to nothing about his wives. In fact in the beginning of the book there are several pages of pictures; with his brother, mother, sister, friends, the Supreme Court, as a young man, etc. However there is not one picture of William O. Douglas with any of his wives.

But somehow this personal decision by the author did not offend this reviewer. The rest of the book is so fresh and free of cliches that I figured that Douglas had simply decided that there were parts of his life he didn't want to get into. And like an old friend rather than lie about them, he didn't go into the topic much at all.

Go East Young Man is like a book from an old friend. After reading it I felt that I really knew William O. Douglas. I liked him very much, and felt a great deal for the struggles that he has gone through in his life. The book is long (493 pages), but worthwhile. William O. Douglas has lived a full life, this first volume of his autobiography doesn't sell either Douglas or the reader short.

The Only Good Stereotype

The Only Good Indian: The Hollywood Gospel by Ralph and Natasha Friar. Drama Book Specialists: New York, 1972. 300- pages, illustrated, $12.50

The Only Good Indian: The Hollywood Gospel, is a recent book describing a different aspect of the Hollywood film. It describes the systematically harmful film imagery which Native Americans have been forced to endure since the beginning of Hollywood. It describes how film first took the racist Native American imagery being portrayed in prinned media and turned it into celluloid examples of this reality. It describes how the filmic descriptions of Native Americans' genocide. It describes how the present day printed mass media, for the most part, either chooses to ignore the plight of Native Americans, or distort any attempts at correcting this imagery.

The book was reviewed by Rarihokwats in Ak-wesasne Notes. He writes; "At first the style of the book is difficult. It moves from text to movie script to quotation in a montage of images and thoughts that overwhelm by sheer mass rather than by argument. Yet that is the way it is with racist stereotypes; it is not a cold, persistent campaign that implants them in the thought patterns of white and white-thinking persons, but rather a barrage of innocent images to rattle any attempt to conceive of people who are different as human beings. Cleveland Indians. Cherokee Street. Mohawk Tires. A Man Called Horse. Cowboy and Indian Animal Crackers. Washington Redskins. Big Chief Motel. Disneyland. The real native cannot compete with the stereotyped Indian."

This book should serve as a trend to expose more people to Hollywood's criminal ignorance. It should also give good indications as to how American mass media, in general, chooses to deal with minority peoples. The Only Good Indian: The Hollywood Gospel is a well researched and well illustrated description of how Hollywood is still committing cultural genocide against Native Americans.

"The Friars have not only debunked the myth," Rarihokwats writes," but they have exposed its roots to searing daylight so that the pale image of John Wayne will, in the future, be hard to project."

Gorath, The Wonder Hand

Gorath, The Wonder Hand
by G. Gomes

Why do they do that..? he wondered
SkeRUMP SkeRUMP SkeRUMP

Rising numbly from his chair, he went over, lifted the needle off the record and set it down on said record again. Why? Why now? I'm aggravated enough.

It was the third year of the hand, and the fools still hadn't known what he was talking about. Maybe, maybe... just maybe, baby baboon, they'd understood him twice before. The record player was twirly, and unfurly. Surly bastard that hand, he thought presumptuously. Now he had to eat tomatoes for the rest of his life.

AUTHOR'S NOTE: During the story, feel free to yawn, stretch out or go to the bathroom, thank you.)

The hand had a nasty habit of killing off those it had selected to do its dirty work. What for? Only the Hand knew... and it weren't about to tell us then it
s-l-o-w-l-y moved... and struck Gorath in the eyeeeeee...

Parted Hair

Smooth Shadows of silken whatever. The hand sat. How could it do this to me? Gorath thought... very quietly, I might add, because the hand could feel thought vibrations.

Gorath had an idea -- he didn't pause to consider that he might alienate his idea entirely, because it was so alone in the world.

Then, as soon as it came, the hand left him -- alone, with only the idea to keep him company.

He fed it, and it grew.

The cold bit him as he strived to be free of the clinging night air. Only his idea to keep him warm, and the idea was now rather dying

SkeRUMP... SkeRUMP

Again and it would probably kill the idea. And his only escape lay in the idea, which had somehow lived, even though the hand had repeatedly attacked it. Possessing the idea, its matted hair the only thing that mattered. Matter? Yeah, yeah, yeah, he knew about matter.

"E equals MC2, he thought, and strode into the bar.

"I dunno, Harry..."

"What, Sid?"

"That guy's the only character I've ever seen with a pet idea."

"Nothing so odd about that Chauncy. I'll admit it's not something you see every day... only seen 'em myself on alternating Thursdays"

SHUDDUP! SHUDDUP! Sha-doopeedoo. The juke box blared before Gorath fell asleep. Doodoo and pee were the last thing he remembered.

"oh no NOOOOO"

The hand was back.

"What the hell do you want NOW!!!"

"The hand didn't say anything. Yes, that's logical enough, though Gorath, a hand can't speak. But if it couldn't speak, then how the hell could it smile? Answer me that, thought Gorath. The hand kept its silence.

Then he knew why the hand kept coming around. IT had given him the idea. He could THINK. That was the hand's gift -- and curse -- to everything it touched. It was here to kill B.F. Skinner and Darwin and Freud, and that was why everything it touched was going insane. It wasn't scheduled either. He'd been hearing small stories about the hand ever since he'd been a little boy. Of course, when he went to school he learned they were all myths. But the school hadn't done it's job properly. As a matter of fact, he learned more than they had thought they taught.

"Don't bite the hand that feeds you." That's what they taught him. "Do not rock the boat, lest you be case overboard." Overboard, and into the waiting clutch of the hand.

"Now you don't see that every day, Chauncy."

"Yep, Fred; only on alternating Thursdays..."

Pt. II Serenading Simba, or Horrible Hermin, the Asiatic Insect

The tapes were still running, and everyone thought this was a fine thing. Life was predictable again. Everybody had those big collapseable envelopes again. There were no grumblers or discontents anymore, especially after lobotomies had been legalized.

Lobotomies, like dopesmoking, had been officially disapproved but tolerated throughout most of the sixties. With their final legalization (business lobbyists convinced Congress that the sagging economy could be boosted if they could just package Acapulco Gold and "a new, wonderful brain operation that could end all your suffering and anxiety"), the economy surged. With the advent of the Seventies, people began to be more and more convinced that nothing (and I mean NOTHING) had the right to disturb their peace of mind. So they finally allowed (just ALLOWED) all the "free jazz" -- I believe that was the term -- musicians to starve to death. Or, if starving failed, through other means.

Until, on that fateful day, two were the last ones left, and he suddenly consented to a lobotomy. And just then, out of nothingness, the hand materialized.

The hand looked on in silent contemplation -- yes, they were as ready as they'd ever be. However, after just one moment, we'll return you to our readily available fair. The hand thought upon that. Oh cruel, cruel, culture of Buck. Even now their speech was being invaded by dollar signs. Pretty soon they'd infiltrate completely, and they would become fetish worshippers as well -- ah, well, why wait? It had to be done, and they might as well lose their peace of mind (now held precariously -- if at all). And so for the first time in an eternity of first times, the hand moved and thought -- slowly, remorselessly. It moved, in thought to body. It moved in opposition to its own dialectic. The hand finally hammed it up. "After all, the hand that fed all could do no worse, but no better".

The hand moved within the Buckbusters. And lo, they were afraid. Was not the hand the first sign of death to all those who survived, but didn't live? Well, why should they try to succeed would be beautiful, but if they lost, they would lose all. All? Well, they weren't prepared to engage in metaphysical concepts just then. They were tired and weary of heart. Heart?... check... is it still beating? Yeah... the hand was still alive, as they were. But if the hand now moved, how much longer would they live? The hand would allow them to die, so there was no security in its presence...

They continued to drift along the desert. But it was funny... too strange. It was too strange to be real -- or forgotten. The desert was occupied, and at the same time, it wasn't. Oh, there were human beings walking around, and every once in a while, an accident would happen, when things wouldn't work exactly right... and for those few minutes, the entire universe went berserk. Chests would be pounded in frustration. Nerve endings would knot -- and all for one silly fuck-up. Didn't they realize that they'd still be in power? So god-damn insecure at one moment -- then at the next moment so goddamn smug.

We looked on these phenomena with sheer delight. After all, it was one of the few delights that the hand had given us. The ability to laugh at oddities rather than despise them. And sometimes it was the smallest flubs that gave most interesting reaction... it wasn't too much fun being a nomad, and this turned into our last resort -- in the entertainment sense of that word as well.

$$$??$$$$$$?&&&&$!!!!!&&!!

The screen flashed on and on again. Instead of pulsating, it throbbed. HOLD IT! Aren't those two the same? Well yeah but...

Christ, the more that Gorath looked at what was happening, it seemed like a parody of Brave New World, 1984, and WE all wrapped into one. A bad parody at that.

Of course, everybody knew why the energy movement of the sixties had failed -- nobody liked it. And wasn't "comfort" the password of the time? I mean, WHY NOT? Don't let your poverty get in the way of my enjoyment, kid, cause I'll cream ya. And they did. At Attica, at Jackson State, at Kent State (does that apply).

The kids, they were smart. They only had to be shot at once and they shut up. Just like the spoiled brats they were. And the counter culture became "culture sold over a counter". And, Christ, they were still too busy trying to forget, you know. And one day Gorath woke up after one of his all night binges with a splitting headache, and said to himself

"Hey, I thought I was supposed to be having fun?!!?!.
What the hell is goin' on 'ere?!"

And the hand entered his life. He knew he shoulda stayed in bed, he often thought later. Then he wouldn't have gone to the window and heard. He heard the sounds on the street below his air-conditioned apartment (the air conditioning which was rapidly becoming a drag) and though they were beautiful. What the hell...? And he was on the anti-noise committee. (Loud noises upset people. That's what the man with all the decibel charts told him, and he believes him, because, after all, they'd faked out the same teachers, hadn't they?). And he was hooked on sound. Sound. SOUND. SOUND.

Not just the average run of the mill sound you heard on your new stereo system ("guaranteed to do away with all the unpleasant highs and lows and produce a nice (mediocre) mid-range boost, where you controlled the highs and the lows (custom-tailored to your mood)". Naaahhhh...

The only act of free will he'd ever committed in his life, and he was fit to be tied (up, and taken away for lobotomy.) No, it wasn't free will; it was the hand.

And it was not the hand in "Let's have a hand for a wonderful audience", or "give me a hand", or even "the hand of god".

It was just a big, six foot tall hand that came into his house, ate all his anchovies and drank all his Chivas Regal without ever once saying "Thank You." As a matter of fact, the hand quite often threw him a finger for his efforts. He didn't even know where it came from. Maybe it was a cross-dimensional hand, but he didn't know about those things, anyway, because he'd stopped reading science fiction.

All that he knew was that the hand was horny. As a matter of fact, it had goosed him once, and given him a gesture like "I don't know, why the hell I did that?" Great. Not only did he have the goddamn thing in his house, but it was a faggot as well. Fantastic. A faggot hand at that. And he couldn't get rid of it.

Ah, but he could. And that irritated the hell out of Gorath. All that he had to do was go back to his old ways. The way he was before he woke up on that one particular morning. But he couldn't just give up could he? No that wouldn't be right.

He said "Goodbye" to the hand and walked out of the house.

The concept of right and wrong had been legally abolished about the same type that smoking dope and lobotomies were legalized.

Then the hand decided it didn't like Gorath, and shoved a hot poker up his pants -- while at all times maintaining exquisite taste. Nobody paid attention to the scream, and he died without benefit of an enema.

After all, hadn't he always been told not to fight the hand that fed from him.?

OUR STORY THUS FAR:
THE LAST GROUP OF HUMANS HAS JOINED FORCES WITH A BRAIN-CREATURE IN A CONFRONTATION WITH THE COSMOS
— by Kris Jackson
THE HUMANS ARE NOT EXTINCT, AS WE HAD THOUGHT. THE SPACE-CRAFT THEY HAVE IS TOTALLY INVULNERABLE TO PHYSICAL DAMAGE. WE MUST ASSUME THAT THEY ARE STILL AGGRESSIVE AND WARLIKE.
"WE HAVE ONE HUMAN IN OUR POSESSION. LET US ATTEMPT TO HYPNOTIZE THIS ONE AND THUS TELEPATHICALLY TAKE CONTROL OF THE CAPTAIN OF THIS SHIP. THIS COURSE OF ACTION SEEMS TO BE OUR ONLY OPTION."

STOP!
YOU USED ME TO KILL MY FELLOW HUMANS! YOU ARE MONSTERS!
GOD LOOKED DOWN FROM HEAVEN AND SAW WHAT HAD JUST HAPPENED

The Pastime of Humanity

by Maureen Ott

Decrepit old men in tobacco stained shirts whistle as girls walk by.
Drooling as false teeth fall out of place .
clacking together, obscenities caught between.

Lecherous men,
not necessarily old,
grabbing in bus stations to take home in daydreams, to await and plan tomorrow's attack.

Young ripe daughters
snuggling in back seats, grasping urgently with hands and hearts.
Crying at the thought of their white knights riding different white horses.

And then there are:

the silly old women.
the frigid middle-aged matrons.
yesterday, a time of plenty.
tomorrow, only bitter remembrances.
With their youth spent, their lives fade, for lust dwells exclusively in youth or dreams.

Take Note

Since this is the last issue of the semester, I'd like to thank all those who submitted their work to Below The Salt. I apoligize for not being able to print everything that came in, but as you have probably heard so many times before, there just wasn't room for everything. We will be running a creative page next semester, so some of the work from this semester will be run. I certainly hope that all of you who contributed will continue to do so and that those of you who have not found your way up to the office will bring your summer gems up to the second floor of the student union in the fall. If you can't wait until September to share what you have written then you can send them to me over the summer. I will be more than happy to write back my suggestions. Mail things to:

If you are interested in editing this page in the fall, there will be meetings in September to accomodate your interest. And to all of you who read this page, I would appreciate some suggestions for next semester (use the same address).

Thanx,
George

A Mild Form of Third Degree

At this time, Warren attributed the general rise in the price of meal tickets to student theft of silverware and unestimated quantities of food.

There was no student response when an article published that week accused them of thieving an unestimated quantity of food.

During and after the release of this article, Mark V. interviewed Director of Food Services, Joel Stoneham.

He asked Stoneham if the theft of food and property from the Commons by students and employees (the first use of the word employees to the Food Services) was a very big problem. He replied that the department had taken action in the past over several incidents, but claimed that it was never anything extensive.

It was then, that V. put the question to Stoneham. He explained all that had happened and all that he had witnessed. Stoneham appeared quite moved. When asked about the plastic bags, he replied: "There shouldn't be any plastic bags involved. There shouldn't be any plastic bags carried out from this building (Worcester Dining Commons)".

Upon further investigation and withholding publication of his feature, Mark V. was asked to appear before the office of David Johnston, Director of Security at UMass Police Department.

"He took me into a back room," says V. "where three officers nonchalantly gathered and were introduced to me. Johnston said these gentlemen would take care of me and then he left."

What followed was a mild form of the third degree. Mark V. was interrogated by the police. "They did everything in their power to try and convince me not to publish anything. 'Can't you see Mr. Stoneham's doing the best he can. Give the man a chance. You will be sorry later!' "

The following morning, after an evening of intimidation, both the story and the photo was published on page one.

Tuesday, October 31, 1972. The photo is released and so is turmoil. The police called and informed V. that an official investigation was under way. The two students were interviewed on November 2, 1972, and V. was interviewed the following morning.

It is interesting to note that what the two students eventually told the police was not the same story that they had relayed to reporter Mark V.

The emphasis and focus of theft now changed from the Food Services Department's investigation of employees to the question of the two women's guilt.

All copies and negatives of the photographs taken that night were demanded by the police department. V. refused, stating that they were the property of the Collegian and that the paper reserved all rights to them.

The police also wanted to interview Pam Perry, the photographer. She declined, recalling the intimidation rented upon Mark V. during and after his "interview".

The Collegian Board of Editors decided to turn over the photograph that had appeared in the paper only. The police said that they would return it after blowing it up to check what was actually in the bag, if that were at all possible.

THE RESULTS

The prime focus on the investigations that followed was not "is theft really occurring down at the Dining Commons?" but rather "are these two women guilty or not?" Once again, the issue was entirely diverted. The police investigation was not on the Dining Commons, but on proving the innocence of these two "wrongly accused ladies".

The damage to the women was unquestionable. One of them lost her job with the bingo club and some other civic function. The "gals", as they were called by Stoneham, were quite upset. Mark V. had found himself damn close to a law suit. Too damn close for the Collegian.

On December 13, 1972, the paper printed an apology in order to prevent court action against both V. and the Collegian. The case would probably still have lingered on except for the month long intercession break.

In the long run, action and "justice" did play a part. Head cook of Worcester Dining Commons, a Hadley police officer, and a campus policeman "resigned" from their posts following extensive investigation.

The Grand Jury entered the scene. The Hadley officer was acquitted on circumstantial evidence. The other two were given suspended sentences.

And now for the aforementioned "proof".

The photographs shown on this page were taken by Pam Perry the night of the alleged theft. The encircled photo shows Mark V. walking with the two ladies with his focus on the bags. He is clearly, within "reaching distance of the plastic bags" as he previously claimed to be. These photos were not released to the police or the Food Services Department at any time.

It was the intention of Mark V. to bringout the fact that employee theft was on the rampage. It was discovered by the Grand Jury that 20 pounds of cheese and 200 pounds of steak had been stolen by a Dining Commons "theft ring".

Food Services Department claimed that it was not necessary to block out the faces of the two women as they were shot walking from the Worcester Dining Commons. They were quite recognizable.

Again, it was not the intent of V. to convict these two "unjustly accused ladies", but to expose the thefts in general. If this had been his desire, all the proof he needed was in these photographs plus the guaranteed testimony of two student employees of the Dining Commons which has until now not been mentioned.

"The only thing we stand to lose is an employee who decorates with plates," said Warren.

What was gained was truth, justice, or whatever it's called now. Perhaps it's out dated, old fashioned, but it was found.

The major objective of V.'s articles was to stimulate interest in the student body. Forget about "trivial" employee thefts and get down to uncovering the "big boys" of operation. In his attempts, Mark V. went on trial.

Lingering along was a court suit for both reporter Mark V. and the Collegian. According to V., the paper showed "no guts". He soon was labeled with the nickname of Fryolater.

On New Year's Eve, 1972, V. was attending a cocktail party in which someone mentioned that the police officer from Hadley had "resigned". V. had until now heard nothing about this and so he decided to investigate.

The next week he went to Public Affairs man, Dan Melley asking questions. "Sorry," said Melley, "but Nate Gorenstein is handling it all now."

Gorenstein, then managering editor of the Collegian had taken V.'s place in covering the D.C. affair all together.

The police had promised V. all the first hand info they could muster up. They had lied. They claimed that they knew about the D.C. thieving and that he had blown their cover.

The local papers played the story big. The Collegian gave poor coverage. "I felt," said Mark V., "like a dog."

In that picture where I'm in the background, I actually saw articles of food in the plastic bag.

The two ladies claim it was not food, as did the Food Service Dept. and the police after an investigation

I never did mention the photo to these people or the police

It's a good thing that these pictures were never made available to the police. I might have served as a witness in court, Interesting !!!

Have you ever felt like running past the Fine Arts Center by Kevin Roche before it intrudes upon you? Did you ever feel that the fence is there to protect us from the building? Who would want to trespass on this building? (Let's just hope it doesn't trespass on us!) What is the function of this building to the innocent pedestrian, besides being an ugly, impossible and oppressive mass of poured concrete? Where does one enter the building? Are there any windows? Where is the Center's human scale? Whatever happened to the architect's rule of "form follows function?" How about a new rule of "form follows function?" How about a new rule of "ordinary can be beautiful"? Have you ever felt like decorating it with some human, profane graffiti as a counteraction to waat it does to you? As if all of this isn't bad enough, just wait until the untreated, uncirculated water in the reflecting pools becomes a cesspool, an adequate reflection of the Center's beauty. Most of today's structural acrobatics are irresponsible to human needs.

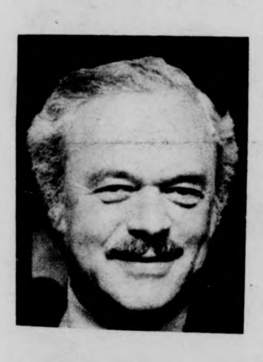
The Fine Arts Building is an encroachment on our humanity. The quality of its architecture is dismaying. Architects tend to conceive individual buildings too exclusively in terms of their visual qualities, as if they were pieces of sculpture. Buildings which satisy sculptural criteria may be OK, but nothing is as important as relating to human beings. The appropriately nicknamed "Roche Building" is a piece of sculpture that presumptiously imposes its mass on our environment, making it ugly, and producing an uneasy feeling in the people who have to live with it.

The designers of our physical environment have seen fit to design an esthetic system within which we must be content to live. Meanshile they have left out qualities of human amenity. Organic architecture is ignored, apparently because it is too personal and individual. Planning for the community must be done by an architect sensitive to the needs of individuals, not public sculptors like Roche. He seems to have come here only to make his own selfish personal statement, and it is at our expense.

A Day With Arthur Knight

by Stuart Sojcher

On Monday of last week I had the pleasure of spending a day with Arthur Knight, who, as a guest of the Distinguished Visitor's Program, gave a lecture in the S.U.B. that evening on "The New Repressiveness in Film - Who Listens to Movie Critics?" Mr. Knight is the former film critic for Saturday Review, and continues his criticism, as he has for sometime in Playboy, and more recently, for Playgirl. Presently Mr. Knight is a Professor of Film at the University of Southern California -- work which he greatly enjoys.



One usually feels apprehension at the thought of meeting anyone of distinction, especially if one is spending an entire day with someone. And when I think of a film critic the image I have in mind is of an arrogant, critical and cold individual. Mr. Knight was just the opposite: personable, patient and pleasant. He has the air of a distinguished Ivy League professor.

There were many questions that I wanted to ask him, but at times I didn't, for fear of boring him to death. I wondered how he could possibly maintain a constant attentiveness, even if a film lover, when practically every question asked of him concerned film. Yet throughout the day and the next morning, Mr. Knight never seemed to lose interest.

I also wondered how he felt about the lack of attendance at the lecture. I was disappointed by the turnout, but the people there seemed genuinely interested and afterwards their response was quite enthusiastic. The coffee hour that followed included most of the people that came to the lecture, and nobody was at a loss for questions.

Mr. Knight had so many interesting things to say that it was a shame that all his comments during the day were not tape recorded. Some of his most interesting: "Clint Eastwood is not the character he played in Dirty Harry. He's more of a moderate. ...He brings a self-mutilating presence onto the screen." Paul Newman: "enjoys shooting the breeze with a group of students in a classroom with a six pack of beer." About directors: "no matter what your reputation, if your last movie didn't make it, your chances for financial backing on your next picture decreases."

Perhaps the most important thing that Mr. Knight discussed was the current status of the movie industry in light of the Supreme Court ruling regarding censorship: sex on the screen. He defends a movie like Deep Throat, not on the basis that it's great pornography, but because an artist like Bernardo Bertolluci "will not have the freedom to make another Last Tango." "People like Kubrick and Peckinpah have many things to say about society and should not be restricted in their work." When asked about how the decision will effect the industry, Mr. Knight replied: "Violence on the screen will increase to replace sex. Hollywood will stay away from the controversial. Disaster films will be a vogue for awhile - The Towering Inferno, Earthquake, The Poseidon Adventure II."

Regarding a career in film, after listening to Mr. Knight, California is the place to be. The only way to make connections is to somehow get involved in the industry, and Hollywood is still where it happens. As far as film school, students have a tremendous amount of resources at their disposal. Imagine sitting in a classroom and being able to direct questions towards such people as: Jack Nicholson, Jack Lemmon, screenwriter John Milius and Paramount executive Robert Evans. Things like this do occur, but only in California.

The following day Mr. Knight flew back to Los Angeles, in time to teach a class. Quite appropriately, as he wanted something to read on the plane, Mr. Knight bought a book about movies: a paperback by Joan Blondell, actress. And I still can't get over what a pleasant person he is. I enjoyed your visit. Mr. Knight. I hope that you enjoyed yours.

No Need to Scream

by Gayle Dodson-Le Tourneau

A panoramic view of a poet's life and her concerns is what Irma McClaurin gives us in her first collection of poems, Song in the Night. In a quiet but passionate tone and with a directness that is strong without screaming, she speaks of growing up poor and black, the war-maimed, love, women, the elderly, prostitutes, dope addicts. She has no need to scream -- her statements themselves scream.

Understatements like "Where parking lots cover places-that once held stores-I stole from" tell a whole history in a few simple words. We see the smelly, dark, run-down housing developments of poverty and depression in "Beside the El Tracks" and "There Will Be No Tomorrow." But there is no sense of hopelessness in Ms. McClaurin's work. There is no specific statement of hope, either. Instead there is a strong sense of perseverance--of stating the facts of life and getting on with it.

"Childhood Memories" is a four part poem which leaves no doubt about what it means to be a poor black child in the United States. The whole poem is a jewel of understatement, a technique Ms. McClaurin uses well.

Throughout the collection, there are startling moments of vivid imagery:

> I have laid one man to earth.
> Now my joices flow untouched.
> They go after his grave > and grow rancid.
> My peeled body
> withers in the sun.

and in another poem:

> and now you're a martyr > sucked up by a psychotic world > where poets are pregnant roaches > waiting to have the truth
> squashed out of them

More of this kind of imagery would give additional power to the poems in general.

The strongest poems are the portraits. All are of women -- "Harriet Tubman," "For Sylvia Plath," "The Old Ones," "Portrait of a Prostitute." These poems reveal Ms. McClaurin's compassion for women and understanding of a universality among women. At the same time, her love poems reveal surprisingly little compassion for herself. She waits, she cries, she lets her lover "practice on my body." She is what women are supposed to be -- yeilding:

> like yeast
> i puff up > to meet you.
> kneading, > stretching me > in your hands > i become > a different > shape.

She never acts upon her lover, but waits:

> for months
> i have watched you > weave me > into your tapestry. > locked inside
> i wait > for someone > to unravel me.

except in two poems, "Cripples" and "Queen Bee" where hostility and vengence come through almost in spite of herself. The love poems are compelling for their directness and honesty.

In a few poems there are problems in voice and occasionally the logic of a poem is unclear, but these are poems from a sensitive observer of life and a sensitive and sensual participant in life.

HAVE A GOOD SUMMER!! - DAVID MILLER

A Reflection on Faggotry

Comfortableness can invite cowardice. For example: Walking down Fearing St. I was asked by a carload of fraternity men if I wanted a ride. When I turned around and dispelled their "chick" pick up attempt, the offer became a threat prefaced with: "Are you a fuckin' fag?"

Now I have no blatant characteristics that might have triggered this question; no high-pitched voice, no licentious walk, no flimsy wrist, etc., but as it happens I am a fuckin' fag. Under the influence of my intact health, I just glared and kept walking.

But the incident left its mark on my self image. I didn't feel a complete coward, but I didn't feel at peace. This questioning of my own politics foreshadowed my taking part in the Gay Rites of Spring festival.

WE GOTTA CLEAN UP OUR CITY OF THEM HETEROSEXUAL PERVERTS, OR BEFORE WE KNOW IT, THEY'LL TAKE OVER THE WORLD!
SAID THE POLICE CHIEF.
10
THEY GO INTO THE BUSHES AND PERVERT WITH EACH OTHER, MAKING NASTY NOISES, AND HAVING BABIES TO OVERPOPULATE THE WORLD!
YA, AND THEY HANG AROUND SCHOOL YARDS, MOLESTING LITTLE CHILDREN

The conferences I came out attending were in Columbus and Cincinnati, Ohio, and were characterized by angry dykes and faggots demanding attention and then doing something creative once it was secured. There was a revolutionary inventiveness about these conferences even heteros grudgingly admitted.

Things are not getting better politically for guys (or for anyone), merely looser. Though SHL is granted an office and provides limited activities, there is still a swamp of stupidity maintained by a heterosexual homophobic community. Even the "hippest" men have anxieties about being cornered in some obscure john and kissed to death. Pleasurable sexual pastimes are maintained as expletives. At the bottom of a list of causes, gay liberation flounders in its own discretion.

With such discretion and not a little decorum, the Rites of Spring were held. Banners were daringly displayed in the Union. Kris Jackson put a faggot in his cartoon strip that was redeemingly enough, a "tit" man. (T shirts were sold at the conference with a design signatured by Jackson.) A four dollar fee was charged for admission to the weekend's events, and a one page schedule was provided.

Friday night's dance with Lilith seemed not unlike any other SHL dance with live and liberal music. The one workshop I attended was intriguing if only for the chance it appeared to provide to question the nature of sado-masochism and its relations to opression, male domination, sexism, racism, and homosexual mind blindering. Peter Fischer and Marc Rubin ran the workshop by negating questions of this nature, using laugh producing phrases like "learning the ropes" and "the sexual arena", finally to dismiss negotions of S&M as being far left feminist propaganda. Apparently having the couple here to speak is an annual event.

The dance in the Ballroom on Saturday was typical of the dances held at one time at the Charles St. meeting house, a gay resource center in Boston. The music ranged from being sexist ("You're a Dirty Old Man") to banal, excelling occasionally with Aretha Franklin and the like. The music was Loud and the lights were Low. Some things are done with the lights out, to twist a phrase. There were no belligerent, or even obvious heterosexuals at the dance; the picnic at Farley Field was a safe distance from any hetero congregation; the conference was polarized in that it sought no interaction with its opressors. There was no march, no political addresses, no moments of group unification. Solidarity comes of confrontation, there was none of this. Except for an extremely cohesive and igniting program on homosexuality in films presented by Vidal Russo the conference was chronically apolitical.

As a criticism, this article lacks validity by my own refraining from involvement with the SHL. I've met some of the more active members and found myself in contrast with not only their politics, but their personal ambitions as well. My additions to a planning group would have signalled collisions and stalemates as it did in a consciousness raising group here I was part of. But as reflection, personal reflection about politics and practices that are being taken for granted, I feel this will have a bearing.

This country, on the whole, is swinging back toward a concrete morality which is being fed on the energy of sheer panic. New obscenity laws are ground out; homosexuals are still being incarcerated and are often tortured sadistically under the pretense of therapy in institutions and prisons. The electric rock and roll leftovers of Woodstock Nation reduce sexuality further and further to a commercialized sexuality that sells their records. Obvious fags and dykes face untold discrimination and closer to home, often fall victim to a self-denial born of lonliness in a society that is dictated by heterosexuals. There is alienation between blacks and gays when there should be affinity. There is a gross negligence in affirming the relative qualities of gay and women's liberation.

A political festival that transcended sitting - in - circles - on yr - ass conversations would have made history, at least this town's history. The conference and the incident with the frat boys both stimulate me perversely -- I feel more aware of my political position. One may hope for community support, and attempt to evolve it by developing interpersonally within minorities, but the courage of one's convictions, here and now, is assessed by individual action, individual confrontation.

This insures no heroism if my response to the next sexually retarded male who asks if I am a fag is an answer that instigates confrontation, an action like: I am, but it will focus my situation, it will put me in touch with myself, my self confidence.

Queer how identification tends to spark revolution.
